Disclosure: Military and Government Witnesses Reveal the Greatest Secrets in Modern History

"There exists a shadowy Government with it's own Air Force, its own Navy, it's own fundraising mechanism, and the ability to pursue its own ideas of the national interest, free from all checks and balances, and free from the law itself."

- Senator Daniel K. Inouye

"In the councils of Government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the Military Industrial Complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists, and will persist. We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our liberties or democratic processes. We should take nothing for granted. Only an alert and knowledgeable citizenry can compel the proper meshing of the huge industrial and military machinery of defense with our peaceful methods and goals so that security and liberty may prosper together."

- President Eisenhower - January 1961

Important Editorial Notice

The preliminary edition of this book has been compiled rapidly in preparation for urgent disclosures in the public media. The reader will benefit by understanding the extraordinary circumstance under which this work was created.

Beginning in 1993, I started an operation known as Project Starlight under the aegis of CSETI (The Center for the Study of Extraterrestrial Intelligence). This effort was designed to identify firsthand military and government witnesses to UFO events and projects, as well as other evidence to be used in a public disclosure. From 1993, we spent considerable time and resources briefing the Clinton Administration, including CIA Director James Woolsey, senior military officials at the Pentagon, and select members of Congress, among others. In April of 1997, more than a dozen such government and military witnesses were assembled in Washington DC for briefings with Congressmen, Pentagon officials and others. There, we specifically requested open Congressional Hearings on the subject. None were forthcoming.

In 1998, we set out to 'privatize' the disclosure process by raising the funds to videotape, edit, and organize over 100 military and government witnesses to UFO events and projects. We had estimated that between $2 million and $4 million would be needed to do this on a worldwide basis. By August of 2000 only about 5% of this amount had been raised but we decided to proceed since further delay was deemed imprudent given the serious issues involved here. So beginning in August we began creating the Witness Archive Project and we set about the task of traveling all over the world to interview these witnesses in broadcast quality digital video format. Due to the severe limitation of funds, this effort was predominantly prepared by myself and a few other volunteers roughly from August 2000 through December 2000.

The creation of a multi-part expose documentary based on this testimony has been deferred pending suitable funding support.

Beginning in late December 2000, I began editing over 120 hours of raw digital video testimony at home using a dual-G4 Macintosh with 90 Gigabytes of storage and a digital video deck. I should note that I am a medical doctor and not an editor. Nevertheless, from late December 2000 until late March, the 120 hours of testimony were reduced first to 33 hours of select testimony and then 18 hours of super-select testimony. The 33 hours of select testimony were dubbed to audiotape and transcribed resulting in approximately 1200 pages of testimony transcript. In March and early April, 2001 I edited these transcripts into a readable form, which appear herein.

I must emphasize that this has been done under the most severe time and funding constraints, working 7 days a week and mostly 18 hours a day. And I thought the Emergency Department was tough!

I share this only so the reader will understand that these transcripts and other materials are very likely to contain errors. These include likely errors in proper names arising from the phonetic spelling of such names directly from transcribed audio tapes of testimony. I apologize in advance for these. A later edition of this book will be further corrected.

The transcripts have only been altered to correct for a) length and b) grammar and readability. I have assiduously avoided changing the meaning of testimony at all times. Statements in brackets [ ] are for clarification. Statements in italics and brackets [ ] reflect commentary on my part and are followed by my initials, SG.

We have used just a fraction of the documents we have. Those appearing at the end of the sections are ones which relate to information in that section as a whole.

These materials are, as you can now discern, only the tip of the iceberg of what we have recorded on digital videotape. That is, from over 120 hours of testimony by over 100 witnesses we transcribed only 33 hours and then further edited materials down to less than half of that amount. Moreover, the full archive represents the testimony of only 100 witnesses of the more than 400 identified to date.

As you read this testimony remember that it is indeed only the beginning. The rest is up to you: Call and demand that Congress and the President and the leaders of other countries hold hearings into this subject without delay. These witnesses welcome a subpoena so that they may officially testify under oath to what they have experienced and said here. Indeed, the most revealing testimony waits to be seen since the deepest sources are refusing to come forward until protected through official Congressional hearings.

This then brings me to my last point: The witnesses who have given testimony to date are extraordinarily brave men and women - heroes in my eyes - who have taken great personal risks in coming forward. Some have been threatened and intimidated. All are risking the ever-present ridicule that attends this subject. Not a single one of them has been paid for his or her testimony: It has been given freely and without reservation for the good of humanity. I wish to personally thank them here and extend to them my personal, highest respect and gratitude.

Please, I implore you not to let this effort and their sacrifice be in vain. Help us place this matter in front of the public, the media, and our elected representatives so that the full truth may be disclosed, so that those earth-saving technologies now classified may be released, and so humanity may enter a new chapter in its evolution as one of many people in the cosmos.

N.B. This book is focusing on the testimony of important first-hand witnesses. We have thousands of government documents, hundreds of photographs, trace landing cases and more, but it is impossible to include them in a book of this length. These materials will be made available for any serious scientific or Congressional inquiry.

Acknowledgements

There are so many people over the past 10 years who have contributed to this work that even a partial listing would itself be a book. I would like to thank the thousands of CSETI supporters around the world for their help, networking and dedication, without which this project could never have been created and fulfilled.

I especially wish to thank my wife Emily and our four daughters for their love, dedication and support for these many years. Emily has worked tirelessly behind the scenes for years and always in the most self-effacing and pure-hearted way. There is just no one like her on this planet. Thank you, thank you.

My family has also sacrificed in many other ways - They have foregone several million dollars in income while I have been doing this work and they have, in many ways, sacrificed the most. I started this project, not them. How many doctor's wives would patiently support such an effort? But knowing what the stakes are for humanity, how could we do otherwise? Without the unconditional love and support of my family this undertaking could not have even been contemplated.

The list that follows can only be a partial one. It reflects the hard work and dedication of so many and we are indebted to them all. Special thanks go to all of the military and government witnesses and to my chief assistants, Linda Willitts on the west coast and Debbie Foch in the DC area.

Implications for the Environment, World Peace,
World Poverty, and the Human Future

A Brief Summary

For most people, the question of whether or not we are alone in the universe is a mere philosophical musing - something of academic interest but of no practical importance. Even evidence that we are currently being visited by non-human advanced life forms seems to many to be an irrelevancy in a world of global warming, crushing poverty and the threat of war. In the face of real challenges to the long-term human future, the question of UFOs, extraterrestrials, and secret government projects is a mere side-show, right? Wrong! Catastrophically wrong.

The evidence and testimony presented in the following pages establishes the following:

- That we are indeed being visited by advanced extraterrestrial civilizations and have been for some time.
- That this is the most classified, compartmentalized program within the US and many other countries.
- That those projects have, as warned in 1961 by President Eisenhower, escaped legal oversight and control in the US, the UK, and elsewhere.
- That advanced spacecraft of extraterrestrial origin, called extraterrestrial vehicles (ETVs) by some intelligence agencies have been downed, retrieved and studied since at least the 1940s and possibly as early as the 1930s.
- That significant technological breakthroughs in energy generation and propulsion have resulted from the study of these objects (and from related human innovations dating as far back as the time of Nicola Tesla) and that these technologies utilize a new physics not requiring the burning of fossil fuels or ionizing radiating to generate unlimited amounts of energy.
- That classified, above top-secret projects possess fully operational antigravity propulsion devices and new energy generation systems that, if declassified and put into peaceful uses, would empower a new human civilization without want, poverty, or environmental damage.

Those who doubt these assertions should carefully read the following testimony of dozens of military and government witnesses whose statements clearly establishes these facts. Given the vast and profound implications of these statements, whether one accepts or doubts them, all must demand that Congressional hearings be convened to get to the truth of this matter. For nothing less that the human future hangs in the balance.

Implications for the Environment:

We have identified insiders and scientists who can prove, in open Congressional hearings, that we do in fact possess classified energy generation and antigravity propulsion systems capable of completely and permanently replacing all forms of currently used energy generation and transportation systems. These devices access the ambient electromagnetic and so-called zero point energy state to produce vast amounts of energy without any pollution. Such systems essentially generate energy by tapping into the ever-present quantum vacuum energy state - the baseline energy from which all energy and matter is fluxing. All matter and energy is supported by this baseline energy state and it can be tapped through unique electromagnetic circuits and configurations to generate huge amounts of energy from space/time all around us. These are NOT perpetual motion machines nor do they violate the laws of thermodynamics - they merely tap an ambient energy field all around us to generate energy.

This means that such systems do not require fuel to burn or atoms to split or fuse. They do not require central power plants, transmission lines, and the related multi-trillion dollar infrastructure required to electrify and power remote areas of India, China, Africa and Latin America. These systems are site-specific: they can be set up at any location and generate energy. Essentially this constitutes the definitive solution to the vast majority of environmental problems facing our world.

The environmental benefits of such a discovery can hardly be overstated but a brief list include:

- The elimination of oil, coal, and gas as sources of energy generation, thus the elimination of air and water pollution related to the transport and use of these fuels. Oil spills, global warming, illnesses from air pollution, acid rain, etc can and must be ended within 10-20 years.
- Resource depletion and geo-political tensions arising from competition for fossil fuel resources will end.
- Traditional technologies exist today to scrub manufacturing effluent to zero or near zero emissions for both air and water but they use a great deal of energy and thus are considered too costly to fully utilize. Moreover, since they are energy intensive, and our energy systems today create most of the air pollution in the world, a point of diminishing return for the environment is reached quickly. That equation is dramatically changed when industries are able to tap vast amounts of free energy (there is no fuel to pay for - only the device which is no more costly than other generators) and those systems create no pollution.
- Energy intensive recycling efforts will be able to reach full application since the energy needed to process solid waste will again be free and abundant.
- Agriculture, which is currently very energy dependent and polluting can be transformed to use clean non-polluting sources of energy.

- Desertification can be reversed and world agriculture empowered by utilizing desalination plants that are currently very energy intensive and expensive but will become cost-efficient once able to use these new, non-polluting energy systems.

- Air travel, trucking, and inter-city transportation systems will be replaced with new energy and propulsion technologies (antigravity systems allow for silent above surface movement). No pollution will be generated and costs will decrease substantially since the energy expenses will be negligible. Additionally, mass transportation in urban areas can utilize these systems to provide silent, efficient intra-city movement.

- Noise pollution from jets, trucks and other modes of transportation will be eliminated by the use of these silent devices.

- Public utilities will not be needed since each home, office and factory will have a self-contained device able to generate whatever energy is needed. This means unsightly transmission lines that are subject to storm damage and power interruption will be a thing of the past. Underground gas pipelines which not infrequently rupture or leak and damage earth and water resources, will not be needed at all.

- Nuclear power plants will be decommissioned and the technologies needed to clean up such sites will be available. Classified technologies do exist to neutralize nuclear waste.

Utopia? No, because human society will always be imperfect but perhaps not as dysfunctional as it is today. These technologies are real. I have seen them. Antigravity is a reality and so is free energy generation. This is not a fantasy or a hoax. Do not believe those who say that this is not possible: they are the intellectual descendants of those who said the Wright brothers would never fly.

Current human civilization has reached the point of being able to commit planetary genocide: the killing of an entire world. We can and we must do better. These technologies exist and every single person who is concerned about the environment and the human future should call for urgent hearings to allow these technologies to be disclosed and declassified and safely applied.

Implications for Society and World Poverty:

From the above, it is obvious that these technologies that are currently classified would enable human civilization to achieve true sustainability. Of course, in the near term, we are talking about the greatest social, economic and technological revolution in human history - bar none. I will not minimize the world-encompassing changes that would inevitably attend such disclosures. Having dealt with this issue for much of my adult life, I am acutely aware of how immense these changes will be.

Aside from the singular realization that homo-sapiens are not the only - or most advanced - creatures in the universe, this disclosure will cause humanity to be faced with the greatest risks and opportunities in known history. If we do nothing, our civilization will collapse environmentally, economically, geo-politically and socially. In 10 to 20 years, fossil fuel and oil demand will outstrip supply significantly - and then it is the Mad Max scenario where everyone is warring over the last barrel of oil. It is likely that this geo-political and social collapse will precede any environmental catastrophe.

The disclosure of these new technologies will give us a new, sustainable civilization. World poverty will be eliminated within our life times. With the advent of these new energy and propulsion systems, no place on earth will need to suffer from want. Even the deserts will bloom..

Once abundant and nearly free energy is available in impoverished areas for agriculture, transportation, construction, manufacturing and electrification, there is no limit to what humanity can achieve. It is ridiculous - obscene even - that mind-boggling poverty and famine exist in the world while we sit on classified technologies that could completely reverse this situation. So why not release these technologies now? Because the social, economic, and geo-political order of the world would be greatly altered. Every deep insider with whom I have met has emphasized that this would be the greatest change in known human history. The matter is so highly classified not because it is so silly, but because its implications are so profound and far reaching. By nature, those who control such projects do not like change. And here we are talking about the biggest economic, technological, social and geo-political change in known human history. Hence, the status quo is maintained, even as our civilization hurtles towards oblivion.

But by this argument, we would have never had the industrial revolution and the Luddites would have reigned supreme to this day.

An international effort to minimize disruption to the economy and to ease the transition to this new social and economic reality is needed. We can do this and we must do this. Special interests in certain oil, energy and economic sectors need to be reigned in and at the same time treated compassionately: Nobody likes to see their power and empire crumble. Nations very dependent on the sale of oil and gas will need help diversifying, stabilizing and transitioning to a new economic order.

The United States, Europe, and Japan will need to adjust to a new geo-political reality as well: As currently poor but populous countries dramatically develop technologically and economically, they will demand - and will get - a meaningful seat at the international table. And this is as it should be. But the international community will need to put in place safeguards to prevent such potential geo-political rapprochement between the first and third world from devolving into bellicose and disruptive behavior on the part of the newly empowered.

The US in particular will need to lead through strength - but avoid the current trend toward domination. Leadership and domination are not the same and the sooner we learn the difference the better off the world will be. There can be international leadership without domination and hegemony and the US needs to realize these distinctions if it is to provide much-needed leadership on this issue.

These technologies, because they will literally and figuratively decentralize power, will enable the billions living in misery and poverty to enter a world of new abundance. And with economic and technological development, education will rise and birth rates will fall. It is well known that as societies become more educated, prosperous and technologically advanced - and women take an increasingly equal role in society - the birth rate falls and population stabilizes. This is a good thing for world civilization and the future of humanity.

With each village cleanly electrified, agriculture empowered with clean and free energy, and transportation costs lowered, poverty will dramatically fall in the world. If we act now, by 2030 we will be able to effectively eliminate all poverty in the world as we know it today. We only need the courage to accept these changes and the wisdom to steer humanity safely and peacefully into a new time.

Implications for World Peace and Security

A few years ago I was discussing this subject with the former Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Claiborne Pell. He explained to me that he had been in Congress since the 1950s but had never been briefed on this subject. I told him that the nature of these black projects has resulted in most of our leaders being left out of any decision making on this subject, and what a shame this is. I said, "Senator Pell, all that time you were Chairman of Foreign Relations, you were deprived of the opportunity to deal with the ultimate foreign relations challenge..." and I pointed to the stars above our heads. He said, "You know Dr. Greer, I am afraid that you are right.

It is true that our great diplomats and wise elders, such as Senator Pell, President Jimmy Carter, and other international leaders have been specifically and deliberately prevented from having access to or control over this subject. This is a direct threat to world peace. In the vacuum of secrecy, operations supervised by neither the people, the peoples representatives, the UN, nor any other legitimate entity have taken actions that directly threaten world peace.

Testimony corroborated by multiple military witnesses who do not know one another and who have had no opportunity for collusion will show that the US and other countries have engaged these ETVs in armed attack, in some cases leading to the downing of these vehicles. As I said to Mrs. Boutros Ghali, wife of the then Secretary General of the UN, if there is even a 10% chance that this is true, then this constitutes the gravest threat to world peace in human history.

Having personally interviewed numerous credible military and aerospace officials with direct knowledge of such actions, I am certain that we have done this. Why? Because these unknown vehicles have traversed our airspace without our permission and because we wanted to acquire their technology. Nobody has asserted that there is an actual threat to humanity from these objects: It seems to me that any civilization capable of routine interstellar travel could terminate our civilization in a nanosecond if that was their intent. That we are still breathing the free air of Earth, is abundant testimony to the non-hostile nature of these ET civilizations.

We have also been informed that the so-called Star Wars (or National Missile Defense System) effort has really been a cover for black project deployment of weapon systems to track, target and destroy ETVs as they approach Earth or enter Earth's atmosphere. No less a figure than Werner Von Braun warned on his deathbed of both the reality and the madness of such a scheme, apparently to no avail (refer to the testimony of Dr. Carol Rosin, former spokesperson for Werner Von Braun).

Well, unless we change directions we are likely to end up where we are going.

With the types of weapons currently in the covert arsenal - weapons more fearsome even than thermonuclear devices - there is no possibility of a survivable conflict. Yet in the darkness of secrecy, actions have been taken on behalf of every human that may endanger our future. Only a full, honest disclosure will correct this situation. It is not possible for me to convey in words the urgency of this disclosure.

For 10 years I worked as an emergency doctor and saw how every possible object can be used as a weapon. Every technology, unless guided by wisdom and a desire for that good and peaceful future - the only future possible - will be used for conflict. Super-secret projects that answer to no legally constituted body - not the UN, not the US Congress, not the British Parliament — must not be allowed to continue to act in this way on behalf of humanity.

One of the greatest dangers of extreme secrecy is that it creates a hermetically sealed, closed system impervious to the free and open exchange of ideas. In such an environment, it is easy to see how grave mistakes can be made. For instance, the testimony here will show that these ETVs became very prominent after we developed our first nuclear weapons - and began to go into space. There were multiple events - corroborated here by numerous credible military officials - of these objects hovering over and even neutralizing ICBMs (Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles).

A closed military view of this might be to take offense, engage in counter-measures, and attempt to down such objects. In fact, this would be the normal response. But what if these ET civilizations were simply saying, "Please do not destroy your beautiful world - and know this: we will not let you go into space with such madness and threaten others...". An event showing concern and even a larger cosmic wisdom could be construed over and over again as an act of aggression. Such misunderstandings and myopia are the stuff wars are made of.

Whatever our perceptions of these visitors, there is no chance that misunderstandings can be resolved through violent engagement. To contemplate such madness is to contemplate the termination of human civilization.

It is time for our wise elders and our levelheaded diplomats such as Senator Pell to be put in charge of these weighty matters. To leave this in the hands of a clique of un-elected, self-appointed and unaccountable covert operations is the greatest threat to US national security and world security in history. Eisenhower was right, but nobody was listening.

In light of testimony showing that covert actions have been taken that involved violent engagement of these visitors, it is imperative that the international community in general and the US Congress and President in particular do the following:

- Convene hearings to assess the risks to national and international security posed by the current covert management of the subject.
- Enforce an immediate ban on weapons in space and specifically ban the targeting of any extraterrestrial objects since such actions are unwarranted and could endanger the whole of humanity.
- Develop a special diplomatic unit to interface with these extraterrestrial civilizations, foster communication and peaceful relations.
- Develop a suitably empowered and open international oversight group to manage human-extraterrestrial relations and ensure peaceful and mutually beneficial interactions.
- Support international institutions that can ensure the peaceful use of those new technologies related to advanced energy and propulsion systems (see below).

In addition to the above, a less obvious - but perhaps equally pressing - threat to world peace arises from the fact that the covert control of this subject has resulted in the world being deprived of the new energy and propulsion technologies discussed earlier.

World poverty and a widening gap between rich and poor are serious threats to world peace and would be corrected by the disclosure and peaceful application of these technologies (see above). The real threat of war over a shrinking supply of fossil fuels in the next 10-20 years further underscores the need for this disclosure. What happens when the 4 billion people living in poverty want cars, electricity, and other modern conveniences - all of which depend on fossil fuels? To any thinking person, it is obvious that we must transition quickly to the use of these now classified technologies - they are powerful solutions already sitting on a shelf.

Of course, a number of insiders have pointed out that these technologies are not your grandfather's Oldsmobile: They are technological advances, like any other, that could be put to violent uses by terrorists, bellicose nations, and madmen. But here we enter a catch 22: If these technologies are not forthcoming soon, we will face a certain meltdown in human civilization and the environment; if they are disclosed, immensely powerful new technologies will be out there for possible destructive uses.

In the near term, it is prudent to view humanity as likely to use any new technology violently. This means that international agencies must be created to ensure - and enforce - the exclusive peaceful use of such devices. The technologies exist today to link every such device to a GPS (Global Positioning System) monitor that could disable or render useless any device tampered with or used for anything but peaceful power generation and propulsion. These technologies should be regulated and monitored. And the international community must mature to a level of competence to ensure their exclusive peaceful use. Any other use should be met with overwhelming resistance by every other nation on earth.

Such a pact is the necessary next step. Maybe someday, humanity will live in peace without the need for such controls but for now, the situation is like that of chained dogs - some strong leashes are warranted and I believe are essential.

It is important that such concerns not be a rationale for further delaying the disclosure of these technologies. We have the knowledge and means to ensure their safe and peaceful use - and these must be applied soon if we are to avoid further degradation of the environment and an escalation of world poverty and conflict.

In the final analysis then, we are faced with a social and spiritual crisis that transcends any technological or scientific challenge. The technological solutions exist - but do we possess the will, wisdom, and courage to apply them for the common good? The more one contemplates this matter, the more it is obvious that we have one possible future: Peace for man, peace on Earth, and peace in space - a universal Peace, wisely enforced. For every other path truly leads to ruin.

This then is the greatest challenge of the current era. Can our spiritual and social resources rise to this challenge? Nothing less than the destiny of the human race hangs in the balance.

UNACKNOWLEDGED - How Secrecy is Maintained

Can the government keep a secret?

A really big secret - the biggest of all time? When the peccadillos of every politician and government leader are prime time news, could the government hide from us the most astounding discovery in the history of the world - the existence of extraterrestrial life?

Well, yes - and no.

First, the concept of government must be redefined, because there exists the government of 'we the people', elected and appointed officials, public representatives, the executive, legislative and judicial branches, etc etc, a la your standard junior high civics course.

But then, there is also the unacknowledged 'government': the 'government' of deep cover, deep black projects, contract agents and companies, and shadowy mid-level functionaries whose task it is to ensure that the government of 'we the people' knows little or nothing about the unacknowledged 'government'.

The right hand does not know - or often want to know - what the left hand is doing....

But we're getting a little ahead of ourselves now. First some background.

For nearly eleven years I have quietly researched how real secrecy is maintained, in the latter half of the twentieth century. What I have found is astonishing, and frankly unbelievable. What you are about to read is the truth - but I admit that I would not have believed it had someone told me this 10 years ago. You may want to read the rest of this article as if it were a fictional story. You may feel more comfortable looking at all of this from a distance. But let some part of you know that this is the truth.

This section is not about whether UFOs/ETs are real, or are visiting earth. Let's get this out of the way first, since it is the easy part: UFOs are real; they are of extraterrestrial origin; they have been around for decades (if not centuries); there is no evidence that they are hostile; there is probably more than one type of life form visiting us; and aspects of the 'government' have known this for 50 years, at least.

The more difficult part of this subject is getting your mind around the fact that something this extraordinary is real, and yet remains somehow unreal, hidden, secret, enigmatic. That the official government - and the official keepers of truth in the media and science- have been deceived for this long is a tribute to the sophistication, depth, breadth and ubiquity of a secret program unparalleled in history.

Indeed, the story of how - and why - this deception has existed exceeds the extraterrestrial phenomenon itself in bizarreness, mystery and incredulity . In fact, it seems that the effectiveness of the secrecy is itself related to the stunning incredulity of the nature of the secrecy. Put another way, the whys, hows, and wherefores of these secret projects are so bizarre and unbelievable, that they provide their own best cover: no one would believe it even if they came upon it. It is absolutely over the top.

To be honest, my own first reaction to what you are about to read was, "yeah, right...". But then confirmation after confirmation, and independent corroboration after independent corroboration convinced me of it. And then I was saying, "Oh God..."

Space here only permits me to share with you the highlights of 6 years of intense, behind-the-scenes research. Someday, I hope the entire story can be told, names and all, but for now allow me to paint for you a broad picture, and some of the details. This information comes from personal, private and exquisitely sensitive meetings and long discussions with very senior and relevant military, intelligence, political and private corporate sources. The search for truth regarding these secret projects has brought me to heads of state, royalty, CIA officials, NSA operatives, US and foreign military leaders, political leaders and high-tech corporate contractors. The process has been exhaustive, relentless and mind-blowing. Safety and prudence requires that I leave their names out of this for now; by the time you finish reading this, the reason will be obvious.

Beginning at least as early as World War II, we found that certain officials in the US government knew that we were not alone, that there were advanced machines flying around in certain regions of the WWII conflict which were not ours, and not theirs. A medical colleague and friend, whose relative was a celebrated WWII pilot, has told me that this pilot was sent to Europe by the president to figure out what these so-called 'foo' fighters were. He reported back to the president that they were extraterrestrial spacecraft.

From there on, it gets more and more strange. A retired general, who later became right hand man to a certain CIA director, told me this: That as a military officer in 1946, he was responsible for writing 'non-responsive' letters regarding a series of day time sightings of UFOs over Idaho. He said people knew the UFOs were real, but soon a Cold War was on, and later a few hot wars ensued, and everyone was concerned with global thermonuclear war- so who had time to worry about these enigmatic but harmless ETs.

Who indeed.

Multiple new, independently corroborating witnesses told us of the crash and retrieval of ET spacecraft in 1947 in New Mexico and in 1948 in Kingman Arizona. Now THIS really got someone's attention, and the name of the game was, henceforth, ADVANCED EXTRATERRESTRIAL TECHNOLOGY. How does it work; what can it be used for; how will they use it; what if the Soviets figure it out before we do; what if it leaks out and some new Hitler uses it to dominate the world; what if people panic when they learn of it; what....

And a million more questions, at the time all unanswered.

And thus was born the secret project of the millennium.

After all, at the time, we were working on the development of the hydrogen bomb - and our arch-enemy the Soviets were hot on our tail. What could be more destabilizing to an already fragile world order than the introduction of inter-stellar propulsion technology to a world of vacuum tubes and internal combustion engines? To say we were facing a quantum leap in technological capability is an understatement. And we wanted it safely for ourselves.

So, 'National Security' demanded that this entire matter be kept quiet at all costs. And no cost was spared in doing so.

But there was one very large and busy fly in this ointment: The ETs were flying, sometimes in formation, with thousands of witnesses, over the skies of America, and the rest of the world. Now, how do you hide that?

The mind hides it. In an Orwellian twist, it was found from past psychological warfare efforts during WWII that, indeed, if you tell a lie often enough, especially if told by 'respected' authority figures, the people will believe it. It appears that one of the masters of psychological warfare during WWII was put in charge of this in the late 1940s. General Walter Bedell Smith helped coordinate the psychological warfare components of this problem, and helped launch the big lie: UFOs, even though millions have seen them, do not exist.

For every sighting which made its way into public awareness, there would be official denial and, worse, ridicule of the event and the observers. Harvard Astronomer Donald Menzel was trotted out to tell the world that it was all hysteria, that UFOs were not real, that it was all poppycock.

So well into the 1950s, a relatively small group of people knew the truth, and kept the truth to themselves. When an event occurred which got the media's attention, authority figures would deny and ridicule it. Since humans are generally insecure social creatures, and more like lemmings that we would like to admit, it became clear that if you wanted to avoid embarrassment, ridicule and social estrangement, you kept quiet about UFOs, even if you had seen one up close and personal. Add to this the active encouragement of wacky stories and bizarre tall tales within the civilian UFO subculture, aided by the naturally occurring level of crazies and crack-pots in society generally and, well, you get the picture. Any respectable person - and especially the 'respectable' media, scientists and political leaders- would have to view this as the 'topic non grata' to avoid.

(Having gone through what I have in the past 11 years, I really can't say I blame them...)

But this is all very conventional stuff, really. The bizarre twists began in the 1950s, when a new model for covert projects evolved; a frankenstein was created, but now it has gotten a will of its own, has gotten up off the table, breaking all restraints, and is moving around amongst us.

In late 1993 and into 1994, 1995 and 1996, from one meeting to another, a shocking truth emerged. Somehow on the way to the 90s, something awful had happened: The entire matter had been largely privatized, was 10 levels deep black and was operating outside the constitutional chain of command of the US or any other government. Now, I know what you are thinking - I thought the same at first - but hear me out.

Within a few months of that initial meeting in July of 1993, I and /or members of our team had met with very, very senior officials of the CIA, Congress, the Clinton Administration, the UN, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the military in England and elsewhere. Our initial logic was first to make the case to these folks that since the Cold War was over, a window of opportunity had opened through which a major disclosure on this matter could be made. The time had come to return this matter to the international community. Right? Wrong! Virtually without exception, leaders in the military, intelligence fields, politics and national security areas agreed that the time had come for the truth to be told. Problem is, they had no access to the truth, or the data, or the cases, or the technology or the deceased ET bodies in storage (yes we know where they are and it is not Wright Patterson Air Force Base any longer).

Those who I thought would be in the loop were out, and the ones running the show were a strange combination of covert operatives and private corporate interests. From then on it was through the looking glass we go.

My ancestors fought in the American Revolution in North Carolina. They fought for the establishment of a constitutional, representative form of government; now I wondered what had happened to the constitution. Like a very bad dream, I kept hoping to awaken to find it was not true. How could I share this with others? Who would believe it? It was bad enough for a doctor in NC to maintain that we were being visited by advanced extraterrestrial life forms, but this?

I asked a friend who was on the staff of President Reagan's National Security Council how this could be true. How could some of the most powerful people in the world - in government, in the military, the senior intelligence and national security areas - not only not know about this, but have NO ACCESS to this information? I asked him if we let the President know exactly who out there really does know about this and he called them into the Oval Office and said, "I am the President of the United States and I want you to tell me everything you know about this matter", what would they do?

He laughed and said, "Steve, if they don't want the President to know, they will simply lie to the president and say no such thing exists. Its done all the time...." I was stunned by the cynicism of this, and by the clear breach in constitutional law.

Under the ruse of 'plausible deniability' to 'protect' senior government officials, this apparently is done in certain sensitive areas, and the UFO matter is the most sensitive of all.

In a meeting with a very senior leader in the intelligence community, whose position any one in the public would assume allowed him to know every bit of important secret information, I discovered that, even though this official knew the matter was real, that the UFOs were real, he had no access to either past or current information or projects dealing with the ET subject. Again, I was stunned.

Ditto for very senior Senate investigators with subpoena power and top secret clearance. Ditto for people at the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Ditto for senior UN people. Ditto for senior Ministry of Defense officials in Great Britain. Ditto for heads of state.

And so it went, on and on. No deception this; these meetings were arranged by personal, back-door contacts and friends. Ironically, these leaders were turning to us for information, analysis and, strangely, action, to get this secret mess fixed. My pointing out that I am only a country doctor from North Carolina, with a wife, four kids, a minivan and a golden retriever did not change this reality. So in my 'spare' time, I have done what I could.

UNACKNOWLEDGED SPECIAL ACCESS PROJECTS. USAPS. This term - concept, really - took some time to take hold. Call me naïve, but I really believe in democracy and the constitution, the office of the president, the importance of a congress and so on. But such quaint notions at some point had to be assimilated in my mind and reconciled with this new reality: That the president, and congress and the courts and the UN and all the other world leaders exist. They worry about taxes, money, programs of this sort or another. But the really big stuff - leave them out of it. After all, these people come and go every 2 or 4 years. What they don't know won't hurt them; besides, we're doing them a favor by keeping them innocent of any knowledge of these secret projects. At any rate, these projects are UNACKNOWLEDGED, and they don't really exist at all...

What is a USAP? It is a top secret, compartmentalized project requiring special access even for those with a top secret clearance, AND it is unacknowledged. This means that if someone -anyone- including your superiors, including the commander and chief, the president, asks you about it, you reply that no such project exists. You lie.

People in these USAPS are dead serious about keeping their project secret, and will do nearly anything to keep the story covered, and to keep both other officials and the public disinformed.

And the grand daddy of all USAPS is the UFO/ET matter.

Remember that a top secret Canadian document written by Wilbur Smith in 1950 stated that he had found that a secret US group was working on the UFO matter, including the technology behind the UFOs, and that this was the most secret undertaking in the US government, exceeding even the secrecy surrounding the development of the H-bomb.

Now imagine if you will, this project 50 years later, A lot of water has gone beneath the bridge. There has been 50 years and countless billions spent on various aspects of the project: reverse engineering extraterrestrial technology to figure out how it works; experiments with non-linear propulsion and communications systems; massive public disinformation efforts and the deceit of constitutionally elected and appointed officials and bodies; and more.

Add to this active disinformation - the hoaxing or simulation of false ET events, to deceive the public and serve as decoys, thus taking peoples' attention away from the real action. Abductions. Mutilations. Hybrid babies floating in space and in underground bases. Secret pacts between one-world -government forces and the sinister aliens. And so forth ad nauseam. Tragically, the tabloid media, book publishers, the UFO subculture/industry and the general public eat this stuff up by the gallon measure.

Not only does this nonsense serve as effective decoys to the unfunded and unprofessional civilian UFO subculture, it creates the patina of craziness and tawdriness needed to keep 'respectable' scientists, mainstream media and public officials silent. It keeps the whole matter safely off their radar screens.

From the mid 1940s to the mid to late 1950s, as these matters go, this secret group was somewhat conventional. A number of officials in the Truman and Eisenhower administrations knew about it and were involved. It was genuinely felt to be imperative to the national security that this matter be kept quiet for a while. And I believe they were acting in good faith, and within the reasonable limits of our constitutional democracy.

But apparently sometime in the mid to late Eisenhower years, a pattern developed where those who legally should be in the loop were shoved out. We have more than one corroborating source that this was the case in the late Eisenhower years and the Kennedy Administration.

First hand witnesses have told us that Eisenhower was furious that he was being kept in the dark about a number of important aspects of the UFO/ET matter. He had seen the ET spacecraft and bodies, and yet he found that extraordinary projects were under way, and he was out of the loop. Is it any wonder then that, notwithstanding the fact that he was a 5 star general and conservative Republican, he warned of the "military-industrial complex" in his last address to the nation as president? People forget that it was this 5 star general - and not Abby Hoffman - who coined the term military-industrial complex, first warning us of the dangers of its excesses. Why? Because he had seen those excesses up close and personal.

Fast forward to June of 1963. Kennedy is flying to Berlin to deliver his famous speech proclaiming "I am a Berliner". On board Air Force One is a military man who relates the following: Kennedy, on the long flight, at one point began discussing the UFO matter with this military officer. He admitted that he knew the UFOs were real, had seen the evidence, but then astonished the officer by stating that "the whole matter is out of my hands, and I don't know why...". Kennedy said that he wanted the truth to come out, but that he couldn't do it. And this is the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the armed forces, stating that the matter is out of his hands, and he doesn't know why. I wonder if he found out before he was killed later that year.

Eisenhower , Kennedy, Clinton Administration figures, military leaders, intelligence leaders, foreign leaders. All out of the loop. But all know its real. What is going on?

USAPS is only part of the story. The smaller part. Remember Eisenhower warning of the military-industrial complex? Operative word: industrial, private, privatized. In discussing this matter with a former head of the Ministry of Defense in Great Britain in July of 1995, I found that he was similarly kept out of the loop. We found once again that the really secret stuff was kept from even a man who was head of MI5 and the MoD. The answer existed in part with USAPS, but more largely with private contract entities.

The US government builds almost nothing (thank goodness...). The B2 Stealth bomber is not built by the US government, but FOR the US government by private industry. And private industry keeps secrets even better than USAPS. It makes sense: after all these years no body knows the formula for Coca Cola. Not even the President of the United States can get it. The formula is secret, and private.

Now if you will, combine the proprietary power of private secrets with a combined liaison with USAPS and you build a covert fortress which is virtually impenetrable. Because if you try to get at it through the private sector, it is protected by proprietary privilege. And if you try to get to it through the public sector - government - it is hidden in USAPS, and the 'government' as you and I ordinarily think of it is clueless.

And from personal experience I can tell you that if you inform the leaders of this, they will hold their heads in their hands and say, as I once did, "Oh my God..."

So, what is the essential profile of this covert operation?

Description: This group is a quasi-governmental, USAPS related, quasi-private entity operating internationally/transnationally. The majority of operations are centered in private industrial 'work for others' contract projects related to the understanding and application of advanced extraterrestrial technologies. Related compartmentalized units, which are also USAPS, are involved in disinformation, public deception, active disinformation, so-called abductions and mutilations, reconnaissance and UFO tracking, space-based weapons systems, and specialized liaison groups (for example to media, political leaders, the scientific community, the corporate world etc). Think of this entity as a hybrid between government USAPS and private industry.

The group consists primarily of mid-level USAPS-related military and intelligence operatives, USAPS or black units within certain high-tech corporate entities, and select liaisons within the international policy analysis community, certain religious groups, the scientific community and the media, among others. The identities of some of these entities and individuals are known to us, though most remain unidentified.

Approximately 1/3 to 1/2 or those comprising the decision-making body are now in favor of a public disclosure of some type on this matter; these are, in general, the younger members who have less complicity in past excesses. The remaining members are opposed or ambivalent regarding a near-term disclosure.

Actual policy and decision-making seems to rest predominantly at this time in the private, civilian sector, as opposed to USAP-related military and intelligence officials, though some information indicates that there is significant relative autonomy in certain areas of operations. It is our current assessment that a rising degree of debate exists regarding certain covert operations and the advisability of a disclosure.

Many compartmentalized operations within 'black' or USAPS projects are structured so that those working on the task may be unaware that it is UFO/ET related. For example, some aspects of the so-called 'Star Wars' effort, or SDI, are intended to target extraterrestrial spacecraft which come into close proximity to earth, but the vast majority of scientists and workers in the SDI program are unaware of this.

We have learned from three separate, corroborating sources that since the early 1990s, at least 2 extraterrestrial spacecraft have been targeted and destroyed by experimental space-based weapons systems.

The vast majority of political leaders, including White House officials, military leaders, congressional leaders, UN leaders and other world leaders are not routinely briefed on this matter. When and if inquiries are made, they are told nothing about the operations, nor is the existence of any operation confirmed to them. In general the nature of this covert entity ensures that such leaders do not even know to whom such inquiries should be addressed.

International cooperation exists to a wide extent, though some witnesses state that certain countries, particularly China, have aggressively pursued somewhat independent agendas.

Major bases of operations, apart from widely diversified private sites, include Edwards Air Force Base in California, Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada, particularly S4 and adjacent facilities, Los Alamos New Mexico, Fort Huachuca Arizona (Army Intelligence Headquarters), the Redstone Arsenal in Alabama, and a relatively new, expanding underground facility accessible only by air in a remote area of Utah, among others. Additional facilities and operations centers exist in a number of other countries, including the United Kingdom, Australia, and Russia. Numerous agencies have deep cover, black, USAPS related units involved with these operations, including the National Reconnaissance Office (NRO), the National Security Agency (NSA), the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA), the Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI), Naval Intelligence, Army Intelligence, Air Force Intelligence, the FBI, and a group known as MAJI control. An even more extensive list of private, civilian and corporate entities have significant involvement. The majority of scientific, technical and advanced technology operations are centered in the civilian industrial and research firms. Significant - and lethal - security is provided by private contractors.

The majority of personnel as well as the leadership of most if not all of these agencies and private groups are uninvolved and unaware of these compartmentalized, unacknowledged operations. For this reason, sweeping accusations related to any particular agency or corporate entity are wholly unwarranted. 'Plausible deniability' exists at many levels. Moreover, specialization and compartmentalization allows a number of operations to exist without those involved knowing that their task is related to the UFO/ET subject.

Both positive inducements to cooperate and penalties for violating secrecy are extraordinary. A senior military source has related to us that at least 10,000 people have received $ 1 million or more each to ensure their cooperation, over the past few decades. Regarding penalties, we know of more than one credible case where individuals have had their families threatened should they break the code of silence, and we have learned of two recent alleged 'suicides' at a private contract industrial firm which occurred after the victims began to violate secrecy on a reverse-engineering project related to ET technology.

Funding: A senior congressional investigator has privately related to us that 'black budget' funds apparently are used for this and similar operations which are USAPS. This 'black budget' involves conservatively $10 billion, and may exceed $80 billion per year. The amount dedicated to the UFO/ET operation specifically is unknown at this time. Additionally, significant funds are derived from overseas sources and private and institutional sources. Amounts deriving from these activities are also unknown by us.

This is part of what we know at this time. Obviously, there are more questions than answers here, and what is unknown exceeds what is known. Nevertheless, we have, I believe, made significant and historic advances in understanding how this entity operates. I have presented this general assessment to a number of important military, political and policy institute figures, and was surprised that it was regarded as quite accurate and in agreement with independent assessments arrived at separately by them.

But the larger question is why? As in life in general, the whats, whos and hows are always easier than the whys. Why the continued secrecy and deception?

I am reluctant to go too much further out on this limb, because here we get into questions related to ultimate motive and purpose, which is always a rather squishy area, ill-defined in the best of cases. And this, I am afraid, is no ordinary matter, and the emotions, motives and purpose behind such extraordinary and high-stakes actions are likely complex and dissonant. Indeed, such motives are likely a very mixed bag, ranging from the initially noble and well-intentioned, to the depraved.

Sen. Barry Goldwater told me in 1994 that the secrecy surrounding the ET subject was "a damn mistake then and a damn mistake now...". I am inclined to agree with the senator here, but the drive for secrecy was not and is not altogether rooted in stupidity. Rather, I see it rooted in fear and a lack of trust.

While I generally dislike psycho-babble, I believe the psychology of all of this is important. It is my belief that secrecy, especially extreme secrecy of this degree, is always a symptom of illness. If you have secrets in your family, it is a sickness, born out of fear, insecurity and distrust. This, I feel, can be extended to communities, companies, and societies. Ultimately, the drive for secrecy is a symptom of a deeper malaise derived from a fundamental lack of trust, and an abundance of fear and insecurity.

In the case of UFOs/ET, the early days of the 1940s and 1950s were, I sense, a time of fear bordering on panic. We had just emerged from a devastating world war, and unleashed the horror of nuclear weapons. The USSR was expanding its empire, and arming itself to the teeth with bigger and deadlier nuclear weapons. And they were beating us in the race into space.

Now along come extraterrestrial spacecraft, which are retrieved along with deceased (and one living) life form. Panic. Fear. Confusion. Countless unanswered questions arise, all tinged with fear.

Why are they here? How will the public react? How can we secure their technology - and keep it from our mortal enemies? How can we tell the people that the most powerful air force in the world cannot control its airspace? What will happen to religious belief? To the Economic order? To Political stability? To the keepers of current technology? To....

It is my opinion that the early days of secrecy were predictable, even understandable, and possibly even justifiable.

But as the decades rolled by, and especially with the end of the Cold War, fear alone does not fully explain the secrecy. After all, 1996 is not 1946 - we have been to space, landed on the moon, detected planets around other star systems, found the building blocks of life in far-away space, and about 50% of the population believe the UFOs are real. And the soviet empire has collapsed.

I believe two other significant factors are at play now: Greed and control, and the inertia of decades of secrecy.

Greed and control are easily understood: Imagine being involved with a project unraveling and then applying advanced extraterrestrial technology. The power and economic impact - and thus value - of such technology exceeds the combined significance of the internal combustion engine, electricity, the computer chip and all forms of telecommunications. We are talking about the technology of the next millennium. You think the computer/information age revolution is big? Fasten your seat belts, because down the road - sooner or later - will be the non-linear, zero point technological revolutions based on advanced ET technologies.

No wonder the corporate, military-industrial complex interest and secrecy-exceeds even that of the government related USAPS. The formula for Coca Cola has nothing on this.

The bureaucratic inertia of large secret operations is yet another matter. After decades of operations, and of lies, public deceptions and worse, how does such a group unravel all the webs it has weaved? There is a certain addictive allure to secret power for some types of people; they are charged by having and knowing secrets. And there is the specter of a sort of cosmic Watergate, with all manner of people calling for this head or that. It becomes easier to maintain the status quo, something all bureaucracies are adept at doing.

And even now there is fear. Not just fear of being exposed in the age of Watergate, this -gate and that-gate, but a rather xenophobic and primitive fear of the unknown. Who are these humanoids, why are they here; how dare they enter our airspace without our permission! Humanity has a long tradition of fearing - and hating - that which is different, unknown, from elsewhere. Witness the still-rampant racial, ethnic, religious, and nationalistic prejudice and hatred which ravage the world of humanity. There is an almost ingrained xenophobic response to the unknown and that which is different. And it is certain that the ETs are more different from us than, say, protestants are from catholics in Ireland.

I once asked a physicist involved with military and intelligence operations related to UFOs why we were attempting to destroy these spacecraft with advanced space-based weapons. He immediately became agitated and said, "Those cowboys running this thing are so arrogant, so out of control, that they view any entry by a UFO into our air space as an offense worthy of a hostile response. And they are going to get us into an inter-planetary conflict if we are not careful..."

And so it goes. Fear. Fear of the unknown. Greed and control. Institutional Inertia. These are a few of what I see as the current animating forces driving the continued secrecy.

But where to from here? How to transform this situation from extreme secrecy to disclosure?

Extreme secrecy, especially on something this far-reaching and important, undermines democracy, subverts the constitution, concentrates enormous technological power in the hands of the unelected few and puts the entire planet in harms way. This must end.

I suggest that the Administration, in cooperation with Congress, sponsor open hearings where these witnesses, who now number over 400, could openly testify to what they know about the UFO/ET matter. This would constitute a definitive disclosure, I assure you. In this regard, you can help in two ways : 1) Write the President and ask that he issue an executive order permitting these witnesses to safely come forward, and at the same time write your Senator and Congressman and request that they sponsor open hearings where these witnesses may speak. 2) Contact me immediately if you or someone you know may be a current or former government, military or corporate witness . We have protective measures in place, and the more witnesses we have, the stronger the case - and the greater the margin of safety for all concerned. Please help us if you can.

The international community and the United Nations should similarly hold open hearings on this matter. We have witnesses from all over the world, and ideally, an international disclosure and evidence gathering effort should begin immediately.

The world community should not sit by passively, thus abdicating responsibility to secret operations. CSETI has for 5 years been involved in a citizens diplomacy effort, and made significant breakthroughs in developing protocols to contact these extraterrestrial visitors. Rather than passively watching this as some distant 'phenomenon', we should attempt to establish communication with these life forms, and begin the early stages of an open inter-planetary relationship. If you are interested in learning more about how you can be involved in such a research and diplomacy effort, contact us.

Lastly, we must be prepared to forgive. There is nothing to be gained by calling for severe retribution for those involved with either current or past secrecy. Many may have felt they were doing the right thing at the time, and even currently. We do not need a cosmic Watergate, and we must collectively renounce it. We should be willing to look to the moment and to the future, and forgive the past. There is precedent for this: In the early days of the Clinton Administration, there were sweeping disclosures about past excesses and crazy experiments within the Department of Energy, and the former Atomic Energy Commission. We learned of plutonium being put on the oatmeal of kids in orphanages, of deliberate radiation releases in populated areas to see 'what would happen', and so forth. This truth came out, and the world did not end. Nobody had to go to jail. The government did not collapse, and the sky did not fall. Let us move forward, with some real compassion and forgiveness, and begin this century anew.

Ultimately, if the people will lead, the leaders will follow. Courage, vision and perseverance are needed to transform this situation, and create a time of openness, trust and to lay the foundation for both global and inter-planetary peace. If our leaders currently lack this courage and vision, then we must manifest it for them. The stakes are too high to look the other way while our future is stolen from us. The future of life on earth, and our place in the cosmos, are at risk. Together, let us work to secure it, for our children and our children's children.

Testimony That Explains The Secrecy

"But what happened was that Eisenhower got sold out. Without him knowing it, he lost control of what was going on with the entire UFO situation. In his last address to the nation, I think he was telling us that the Military Industrial Complex would stick you in the back if you were not totally vigilant. And, I think that he felt like he had not been vigilant. I think he felt like he trusted too many people. And, Eisenhower was a trusting man. He was a good man. And I think that he realized that all of a sudden this matter is going into the control of corporations that could very well act to the detriment of this country.

"This frustration, from what I can remember, went on for months. He realized that he was losing control of the UFO subject. He realized that the phenomenon or whatever it was that we were faced with was not going to be in the best hands. As far as I can remember, that was the expression that was used, "It is not going to be in the best hands". That was a real concern. And so it has turned out to be."

"It had been discussed with me on numerous occasions what could happen to me militarily if I discussed this. I would say that the government has done as good a job enforcing secrecy through the installation of abject fear as they have done with anything within the memory of modern man. I really believe they have done a job.

"One older officer discussed with me what possibly could happen if there was a revelation. He was talking about being erased and I said, 'Man, what do you mean erased?' And, he said, 'Yes, you will be erased-disappear.'" And I said, "How do you know all this?" And he said, 'I know. Those threats have been made and carried out. Those threats started way back in 1947. The Army Air Force was given absolute control over how to handle this. This being the biggest security situation that this country has ever dealt with and there have been some erasures.'"

"I don't care what kind of a person you are. I don't care how strong or courageous you are. It would be a very fearful situation because from what Matt [this older officer] said, 'They will go after not only you. They will go after your family.' Those were his words. And, so I can only say that the reason that they have managed to keep it under wraps for so long is through fear. They are very selective about how they pull someone out to make an example of. And I know that that has been done."

—Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin

"These two gentlemen began to question me about this event. They were being pretty rough about it, to be honest with you. I remember literally putting my hands up and saying, 'Wait a minute fellows. I am on your side. Just a minute.' Because they were not really nice. They were very intimidating and made it quite clear to the point that nothing that was seen, heard, or witnessed, that transpired was to leave this building. 'You are not to say a word about it to your co-workers. And off base, you just forget everything that you may have seen or heard concerning this. It didn't happen.'"

—Merle Shane McDow, US Navy Atlantic Command

"It is sort of strange but we send people to prison, we send people to their death because of eyewitness accounts of crimes. Our legal system is based on that to a large degree. Yet in my following of unusual aerial phenomena for the past 50 years, there seems to be some reason to discredit very viable and very reputable witnesses when they say something is unidentified."

"I do know that there are agencies of our Government that can manipulate data. And you can create or recreate [whatever you want]. Craft, intelligently operated craft, have basically violated our laws of physics on this planet. And they have done that for a long time. The fact that the Government at this point — I know we have been investigating since 1947 - has not come up with an answer, to me indicates that there is something seriously wrong. Are we this incompetent in science? I don't think so. Are we this incompetent in intelligence? I know we are not this incompetent in intelligence. Now, Project Blue Book, when it was closed by Dr. Condon's group, I have every reason to believe that this was a total deliberate whitewash."

"UFO's have been investigated for an extended period of time and the general public is not being made aware, fully aware - but are given only bits and pieces, programmed responses and things like that."

—Lt. Col. Charles Brown

"I know that some people I worked with did disappear on certain programs and were never heard from again. They just disappeared. There has been evidence of that all through my work. You know, that people go out on projects [and disappear]. But [to protect myself from this] I wouldn't go any further on a project because I could see something strange coming. So, a lot of people have disappeared you know, that are higher up."

—Dr. B.

"'You weren't supposed to be there.' 'You are not supposed to see this.' 'You are going to be dangerous if we let you go.' I thought that they were going to kill me, really."

"They had a Lieutenant Colonel from the Air Force and he did not identify himself. And he told me, 'If we just took you out in the jungle, they would never find you out there.' I didn't want to test him to see if he would really do that so I just said, 'Yeah.' And, he said, 'You have got to sign these papers. You never saw this.' I 'don't exist' and 'this situation never happened.' And if you tell anybody, you will just come up missing.

"They are yelling at me and hollering and cursing. 'You didn't see anything. We will do you and your whole goddamn family.'

"It was basically that for about eight or nine hours... "We are going to take you off in a helicopter and we are going to kick your ass out in the jungle and we are going to end you."

"These different agencies are on their own. They don't obey the law. They are rogue. Do I think that this is a project that goes up through the government and everyone has a piece in it? No. I think these guys operate on their own and no one knows what they do. It is so easy to do today. And there is no oversight, no control. They just do whatever they want."

"Lethal, deadly force has been used. For those of you who don't know, I know marine snipers and I have heard other guys talk about it and I've heard that these guys go on the streets and they stalk people and they kill them. I know that the Army Airborne snipers do the same thing. They use Delta Force to go grab these people and silence them by killing them."

—Lance Corporal Jonathan Weygandt

"At times I used to carry nuclear weapons. In other words, I was mentally fit to carry nuclear weapons, but I'm not mentally fit if I see a UFO. This criticism and this ridicule have done more to keep the story coming out than almost anything else."

—Maj. George A. Filer, III

"I believe that governments and the military, and indeed private researchers, politicians- whoever- should place everything in the public domain on this issue. Governments can't, I think, have it both ways. You cannot say on the one hand, as the parry line often goes, that UFOs are of no defense significance, and then on the other keep back some of the data.

"You simply can't do that. You have to have it one way or the other. And if, as governments consistently say when the politicians probe on this issue or when the media inquire, that there's really nothing to worry about, then okay, let's see all the data."

—Nick Pope. British Ministry of Defense Official

"We were gone over with a Geiger counter and there was one return on one of the guys, and something was taken out of his pocket. This guy was removed very quickly. And, I will swear on my life, I never saw him again. He was removed. This happened to a lot of people. It led to a suicide that the Air Force is responsible for. This is a real person with a real name."

"We were brought in and there were sheets on top of the law enforcement desk. There were about 10 of us. And there were one, two, three, four, five, six, seven stacks of documents, pre-typed. One was a pre-typed statement, all generic, of what we saw- which was not what we saw. It said we were off-duty and saw only unknown lights flipping amongst the trees. I clearly remember that. I said, what if we don't sign this, Major Zigler? And, he says, you have no choice. And, he says, I have no choice but to ask you to do this."

"Two people came up behind each of us, and I do remember someone heading toward him, and I heard the sound of what sounded like an aerosol. And, I went black. My nose ran profusely and my chest got tight. I, obviously, was not getting into the car properly, so I was beaten, literally hit in the ribs and pushed _ Anyway, I have 20 minutes of recall and I'm gone for a day. And, it's established with other people. People said I was on emergency leave or on leave or off the base. But I was just under the base. And, there were other personnel down there.

...I had marks, by the way, from an IV, or something, when I came out of there. I had the bruise and I had a bandage. I will admit that. That's for real. I had it. I'm terrified to know or think of what might have happened."

"The only reason I have my records is because I was advised to steal some of them, by an Air Force Colonel, because he said they would vaporize you. He said, they are going to fireproof you. I was looked at, almost like a Frank Serpico kind of guy. I was not a team player because I was talking to everyone."

"Unfortunately, my friend, Alabama, went AWOL trying to get back home. At O'Hare Airport, he was captured by the FBI and returned to duty immediately. All he wanted to do was go home. But he was put back on flight duty. I was riding with the senior master Sergeant on vehicle patrol, just totally depressed with everything, when Alabama called in- this is a real person- and said he was going to kill himself if he couldn't go home. And, this guy turned the pick-up truck quick and was heading toward the post. He said, you stay on the goddamn radio... I saw all the units across the flight line responding and everything. Anyway, Alabama had a short M16, and he put it in his mouth, and took the top of his head off. This was the first time I ever saw death, violent death, at 19. We were as different as night and day, me and this kid. You know, he was the south, I was the north. He was very religious. I respect that, but we had nothing in common. He was a nice guy. And, they did not do anything to help us..."

—Larry Warren, US Air Force, Security Officer

"During the discussion of UFO's, the question, ultimately, is going to come up, can any government keep secrets, let alone the U.S. Government? And the answer to that is unequivocally yes. But one of the greatest weapons the intelligence community has at their disposal is a predisposition by the American people, the American politicians and the debunkers- people who wish to try to debunk UFO information. They immediately come out and say, oh, we can't keep secrets, we can't keep secrets. Well, the truth is, yes, we can.

"The National Recognizance Office remained secret for many, many years. The mere existence of the NSA remained secret. The development of the atomic weapon remained secret until once you exploded one you eventually had to tell some people what was going on.

"And we are conditioned by our own paradigms not to accept the possibility or probability of a highly advanced intelligent civilization coming here to visit us. You have evidence in the form of highly credible reports of objects being seen, of the entities inside these objects being seen. Yet, we look for a prosaic explanation and we throw out the bits and pieces of the evidence that doesn't meet our paradigm. So it is a self-keeping secret. You can conceal it in plain sight. It is political suicide to go and start hitting up intelligence agencies to get this information released. So, most of your members of Congress, and I know I've worked with a lot of them along that line, will balk and try not to do it. I can name you three members of Congress that were point blank asked to have a congressional inquiry on what happened here at Roswell."

"We have got to get the documentation as it exists in the Government files. We have got to get it released before it ultimately is destroyed. A good example is the Blue Fly and Moon Dust files. I had classified documents the Air Force acknowledged. When I got members of Congress to help me open up more files, they were immediately destroyed and I can prove this.

"Somewhere along the line, they may see that material and realize there is some very highly sensitive information that would have a damning effect upon the national security of United States should it become compromised. It needs to be further protected, to insure that there is only a limited access to that information to a small number of people. So small you can put them on a list of paper, on a piece of paper, and list them by name. Thus, you have the special access programs. The controls that were supposed to be put on the special access programs are not there. When Congress did their review of the way we protect documents, and the way we go ahead and implement our secrecy programs, they found that you had special access programs within special access programs -that is was essentially impossible to keep control of them all by Congress. And, I'm telling you right now, it is essentially impossible to keep control of them all.

"When it comes to UFO s, the same criteria applies. Therefore, only a small nucleus within the intelligence community, numbering less than a hundred- no, I'd suggest less than 50- control all that information. It is not subject to congressional review or oversight at all. So, Congress needs to go ahead and ask the hard questions and convene a hearing."

—Sgt. Clifford Stone, US Army

"I became part of a group that would investigate, gather the information, and in the beginning it was still under the Blue Book, Snowbird and different covert programs. I would go interview people who claimed they had seen something and try to convince them they hadn't seen something or that they were hallucinating. Well, if that didn't work, another team would come in and give all the threats. And threaten them and their family and so on and so forth. And they would be in charge of discrediting them, making them look foolish and so on and so forth. Now if that didn't work, then there was another team that put an end to that problem, one way or another."

— Master Sgt. Dan Morris, US Air Force, NRO Operative

"A CNN reporter in Washington, D.C., the second time that Gorbachov came to America, was able to interview Gorbachov and his wife. When they got out on the street they drove the security detail up the wall. And a CNN reporter asked Gorbachov 'do you think we should get rid of all our nuclear weapons?' And his wife stepped in and she said, no, I don't think we should get rid of all our nuclear weapons because of alien spacecraft.

"Now CNN put this story on for the half hour, on CNN headline news; I heard this and I jumped up and put a blank tape in to record the next half-hour. Well, that story disappeared and you know who intercepted that. It was the CIA that got involved with that, because I know that they were monitoring CNN and all international headlines at that time. They squashed that, but I heard it. And this tells me that my information is correct about Ronald Reagan, from my NSA source. The secrecy is just total overkill as far as I'm concerned. And the Congress needs to know about this information."

"He said that we're trying to get a lid on this to try to minimize the sightings and quell the news media and the witnesses that are reporting these sightings to the news media. The Air Force wanted to push this thing under the rug and continue to research it and just get a handle on it. He confirmed that the Air Force wanted to steer the news media off on some crazy idea that these sightings were created by college pranks and balloons and meteorological problems."

"What he told me regarding the security ramifications were that if their military personnel talked about this they could be court marshaled or at least threatened to be court marshaled to get him to back down. Other intimidations would be to hold their paychecks back, transfer them to other bases where a lot of people would not want to go to, like Alaska."

"Basically, these projects were controlled by the Majestic 12 group, which is no longer called MJ12. I'm trying to find out the new name of this group. My contact that worked at Area 51 knows the name of the group, but he's refusing to tell me the name. Basically it's an oversight group intermingled with the National Security Council and the National Security Planning Group in Washington, D.C. There is a group called the National Security Planning Group that oversees everything. And Majestic 12 is intermingled with these people, the National Security Planning Group.

"They have full control. They alert the President of what's taking place and he either authorizes or just says, hey, you guys go at it. They have full control. They have no Congressional oversight whatsoever. They answer to nobody, except for the President of the United States. But they are trying to push even that aside, away from the President, from what I understand.

"The Presidents no longer have that much control over these groups anymore. It's like a separate entity."

—A. H., Boeing Aerospace Employee

"I was absolutely amazed at what happened after that. My life just turned upside down in an instant. From being a happy go lucky chap, within a space of six months I was put through hell and turned into one of the most horrible persons you could ever imagine coming across. Purely through harassment, stress, victimization, you name it, I had it."

—Officer Alan Godfrey, British Police

"I didn't want to look at it any longer than that, because I felt that my life was in jeopardy. Do you understand what I'm saying? I would have loved to have looked at it longer, I would have loved to have had copies. I would love to have said more about it, discussed it more, but I knew I couldn't. I knew the young fellow who was sharing this was really, really overstepping his bounds at that point.

"I felt that he just needed somebody to talk to. He hadn't discussed it, couldn't discuss it, and he wasn't doing it for any ulterior motive other than the fact that I think he had the weight of this thing on him and it was distressing to him."

"I knew that I couldn't go anyplace for at least five years without telling the State Department where I was, after I left the military. Any time I traveled I had to notify and get permission, even in the United States. They had to know where I was all the time. As an example, if we went to Vietnam there was always someone there with us, with a gun, ready to annihilate us basically if we should fall into the hands of the enemy. They didn't want the enemy to get us; we would be killed instead.

"So we knew we were operating under these sort of conditions. Your life was in jeopardy all the time, should you fall into the wrong hands. So we were aware of that. I was told when I left that I would be investigated on a regular basis to make sure that I wasn't involved in any peculiar activities that didn't suit the government's needs."

—Sgt. Karl Wolfe, US Air Force

"There was a point in time when I had some people come out and tell me I shouldn't talk about this. They didn't threaten to kill me but I got the message I shouldn't talk about it. But I'd already talked about it so much it didn't really matter anymore. And like I said at the [ 1997 CSETI] congressional briefings, I really started feeling like this topic was like sex. You know, everybody knew about it but nobody talked about in mixed company. I'm waiting to tell more whenever there's a congressional hearing where I could be protected. I trust Dr. Greer. I feel he's done everything he said he would do as far as protection, secrecy of what I give him, for now. I want it to come out when it's necessary and proper and can do some good. I don't want people going around that are trying to get rid of these people or hurting them or challenging them or making them so frightened they move away-like this one particular man I know of who has just disappeared off the face of the Earth. This one man, he has disappeared. I just don't want that."

—Mrs. Donna Hare, NASA Employee

"Of corporations involved in this matter, Atlantic Research Corporation is one of the big ones. So it's not very often heard about. It's an insider beltway bandit, if you want to call it that very low profile, mostly has all of its work done within Intelligence. TRW, Johnson Controls, Honeywell: All of them at some point or another became involved with the Intelligence field. Certain works, activities were contracted out to them. Atlantic Research was one of them -way back. These are entities that were created out of people in the Pentagon to become a "beltway bandit"- received projects, grants, and monies to do certain projects that were so highly classified and compartmentalized that you know only about four people would know what was going on. So it was that tightly controlled."

—Mr. John Maynard, DIA Official

"As you may know, when you get cleared for one of these classified programs you wear your special badge and you know you can talk to anybody who's in the room with a lot of candor and it feels like that's ones psychological group- there's a lot of camaraderie that builds up. And you had access to special libraries. So one of the things that we could do is go up to the library that the Air Force ran and sort of paw through top- secret material. Since I was interested in UFOs, when I had some usual business to take care of, I'd also look in their library to see what they had on UFOs. And for about a year I was getting quite a few hits on the subject about various reports. Then all of a sudden, the whole subject material vanished. The entire classification for the subject just vanished. The librarian in our group that I was working with said he'd been in that vault for twenty years and knew exactly how things were normally done. He said, this is remarkable. He said, I've never seen that before, you just don't have a whole subject vanish out from under you. He said, I think there is something there that you hit on."

"In the meantime, there was one other thing that came about as a result of my association with Jim McDonald. I liked the guy, he was really an energetic physicist and wouldn't let any grass grow under his feet. When he got a case he would dig his teeth into it and present an overwhelmingly convincing story to professional societies. He would talk to the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics and the American Physical Society, and I happened to be members of both. So whenever he was in town I would pick him up, escort him, made sure he felt welcome.

"So once when I was traveling through Tucson, where he lived, I stopped- I had a two-hour layover to catch an airplane- and he came out to the airport to have a beer with me. I said, what's new, Jim? He said, I think I've got it. I said, what do you think you got? He said, I think I got the answer. I said, what is it? He said, I can't tell you yet. I have got to be sure. It was six weeks after that that he tried to shoot himself. A couple months after that he finally died.

"Knowing what I think I now suspect about the skills of our counterintelligence people, I think we had the capacity to convince him to do it himself. I think that's what happened..."

"Clearly in order to have effective control of this subject, you have to control it at all levels and the most obvious level is the media. So you have to look at all the kinds of media there are, the movies, the magazines, and of course in the early days that's all it is, newspapers and movies and magazines. Now we have the Internet and video and all those other sorts of things. But as the technology has blossomed in these other avenues, the people worrying about this control have also just moved into those avenues right along with them. So every time a new avenue comes up they have a new counterpoint."

—Dr. Robert Wood, McDonnell Douglas Aerospace Engineer

"One of the MPs took me aside and he just said, look mister, you don't go and start any. Nothing happened down here. And he said, if you do you know there'd be real serious problems. The way my character was at that time, I just said, I'm a civilian and you can go to hell. And that's when he said, you may be the one going to hell. He said, somebody would be picking my bones out of the sand if I talked."

—Glen Dennis, NM UFO Crash Witness

"In the military they do ridicule you and I was ridiculed a few times about these UFO events. I was told that I would never make Master Sergeant if I brought this crap up again. My superior said, 'If you keep this crap up you will never make Master Sergeant. You will get orders for Tech but you will never make Master Sergeant. They will force you out of the military.'"

—Sgt. Leonard Pretko, US Air Force

"Probably there are, in every part of the world, invisible links with a definite invisible college that is keeping this secret. They are dealing with this subject from the standpoint of research secretly in order to have gains and technologies to be applied in a various ways. The UFO problem is not only a scientific problem, it is also an intelligence problem.

"This is the second important face of the UFO reality. When we begin to understand this we may understand a lot of things, because all this has to do with power. Power everywhere, in every country, with every government, with every situation."

—Dr. Roberto Pinotti, Italian UFO expert

"The black budget world is like trying to describe Casper the friendly ghost. You might see a cartoon of him but you don't know how big he is, you don't know where his funding comes from, you don't know how many there are because of the compartmentalization and the oath that people have to take. I know people today that worked on one of the things that I worked on, and if you asked them about it-even if it is being discussed on the Internet- they would say no, I have no idea what you're talking about. They're in their seventies now, but they still absolutely would never admit that they even know what you're talking about. You have no idea, but it's probably larger than you think."

—Dr. Paul Czysz, McDonnell Douglas Career Engineer

"But it has been the subject of disinformation in order to deflect attention and to create confusion so the truth doesn't come out. Disinformation is simply another method of stonewalling. And that's been used consistently for the last 50 years or so: Weather balloons over Roswell as opposed to a crashed craft of some sort. That is disinformation. We've seen that for 50 years. And it's the best way to hide something."

"Whatever activity is going on, to the extent that it is a clandestine group, a quasi-Government group, a quasi-private group, it is without any type, as far as I can tell, of high level Government oversight. And that is a great concern."

—Astronaut Edgar Mitchell

Mr. Callahan: When they got done, they actually swore all these other guys in there that this never took place. We never had this meeting. And this was never recorded.

Dr. Greer: Who said that? Who was saying that?

Mr. Callahan: This was one of the guys from the CIA. Okay? That they were never there and this never happened. At the time I said, well I don't know why you are saying this. I mean, there was something there and if it's not the stealth bomber, then you know, it's a UFO. And if it's a UFO, why wouldn't you want the people to know? Oh, they got all excited over that. You don't even want to say those words. He said this is the first time they ever had 30 minutes of radar data on a UFO. And they are all itching to get their hands onto the data and to find out what it is and what really goes on. He says if they come out and told the American public that they ran into a UFO out there, it would cause panic across the country. So therefore, you can't talk about it. And they are going to take all this data.

"Well when they read the reports that came through the FAA decided it had to protect themselves—you can't say you saw a target, even though this is what he said. So they made him change his report to say 'position symbols', which makes it sound like it wasn't really a target. Well if it's not a target then a lot of the other position symbols that we are separating [on radar] aren't targets either. And when I read that, I thought oh, there is something fishy here, that somebody is worried about something or other and they are trying to cover up.

"When the CIA told us that this never happened and we never had this meeting, I believe it was because they didn't want the public to know that this was going on. Normally we would put out some type of a news release that such and such happened."

"Well, I've been involved in a lot of cover-ups with the FAA. When we gave the presentation to the Reagan staff I was behind the group that was there. And when they were speaking to the people in the room, they had all those people swear that this never happened. But they never had me swear it never happened. And it always bothered me that we have these things going on and when you see something or you hear something on the radio or TV, the news, that it's put down as it's not there. I have a hard time saying nothing."

—John Callahan, FAA Head of Accidents and Investigations

"NORAD [North American Air Defense Command] knows about it. They had called NORAD. The senior NCO pulled me to the side and said that NORAD knows about it—that's the only people we notify. We don't talk about this. We don't tell anybody about this. The people that know, know. We just watch, see what happens, and that's it. That's our job. I insisted there has to be a report filed or something filed, you know? And he said that there is a report that you can file—it's about an inch thick, and the first two pages are about the sighting. The rest of it is basically a psychological profile of you, your family, your bloodlines, everything.

"When the Air Force goes through it, they can discredit you completely by either saying that [you were] on drugs, or your mother was a communist, or anything to discredit you. You'd never get a promotion, and [you'd] spend the next three and one-half years up at the North Pole, living in a tent, checking the weather balloons. You know—no hope for promotion. So, the message was pretty loud and clear: you just shut-up and don't say anything to anybody."

"Another experience I had happened on third shift. I was on the radar, and NORAD called me and informed me that there was a UFO coming up the California coast and it would be in my area pretty soon.

"I said what do you want me to do? And they said, "Nothing, just watch it, don't write it down." We have a log book in which we are supposed to keep track of anything out of the ordinary. But they said, "Don't log it or anything, just watch it. We are just letting you know—heads up." NORAD was well aware, obviously, that these UFOs were around, and the action of the people when I first saw the UFO on radar was as if it happens quite often."

"The government, they cover up. They don't want anybody talking about it. But this is such remarkable technology. These people come from who knows where. I would think you'd want everybody to know..."

"On a personal note, after the first event happened in Oregon, I came home on leave and told my Dad about it. He was red, white, and blue through and through—an old WWII hero and all that, and very patriotic. I was explaining to him about these UFOs that we routinely see out there, and he said, 'No, the Government says that there are no UFOs.' I'm saying, Dad, I've seen these on radar with my own eyes. And he says, come on, the Government would never lie to him. You know? But here's his son; I would never lie to him.

"So, he just didn't know what to do. It wasn't until years later, until after Watergate, that he said, 'Hey, sit down and tell me about this. The Government is lying to me about a little thing like Watergate, so obviously they are out lying about something big.'"

"It's a Government cover-up that doesn't need to be here any more. There is no more Cold War. I believe the same thing Dr. Greer does, that the technology they have could enable us to stop burning our fossil fuels and stop the damage to the ozone, etc. These people have technologies—they must have something. And the Government knows about it. They have these aliens, they have these spacecraft, they have this technology, all this. There's a lot of back-engineered technology, that's pretty obvious. Who are they to cover this up when other Governments are coming forward, admitting, and showing their files—why isn't our Government?"

—Michael Smith, US Air Force Radar Controller

"They didn't want anybody to know anything about what we were seeing. And I think that started the cover-up. And then it got out of hand.

"But I know that the only people that they are keeping it secret from today are the Americans. Everybody else knows about it and accepts it. And all of the other Governments in the world except England and the U.S. primarily, are accepting it.

"It's very irritating to me personally, to see that go on."

—Franklin Carter, US Navy Radar Technician

"In the past pilots that had seen things and had talked about it were let go. Some were released from their flying and treated as nutcases and things like that. So that was the last I said of it for many, many years."

—Neil Daniels, United Airlines Pilot

"There is a publication called JANAP 146 E that had a section that says you will not reveal any information regarding the UFO phenomenon under penalty of $10,000.00 fine and ten years in jail. So they were quite adamant that whatever experiences you had you were not to go public with it without their permission."

"The subject never came up with Air Traffic Control. In any event I would never have opened my mouth. There was a Captain, Pete Killian, who was written about in some of the UFO books. He was a Captain with American Airlines back in the '50's that evidently had a sighting and testified before the Senate committees. And then there was another captain that actually took a photograph of a UFO off his wings. And of course they were subject to ridicule. I didn't want to go that direction. So, I never reported anything to FAA or the military. A lot of pilots just did not want to get involved in this because of peer pressure and ridicule. So the secret has been kept."

"I have a very personal friend that was a B-24 pilot during W.W.II that got into [the] O.S.S. And he was one of the first people into Japan after the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, Nagasaki. He ended up on Project Bluebook, Section 13, which I believe was the top-secret portion of that investigation. At the time he was a captain in the Air Force. He's in his late '70s now and he is still being carried on active duty as a captain. I don't know if he's being paid but if he's on active duty he should be a three star general with time and rank and he should be paid. And the whole reason that they have kept him on active duty is to keep his national security oath active because of what he knows. There are certain things that he will not talk to me about because of that security oath even though I had a top secret clearance with the Navy and we are both very interested in the same thing.

"For whatever reason the Government, or those agencies of Government, deem necessary to protect their agendas, which obviously now, aren't our agendas. I think it is time for us to act, to end this charade. And to take whatever steps are necessary to insure that the human race evolves properly and enjoys the fruits of that evolution."

—Lt. Frederick Fox, US Navy Pilot

"I wrote up a report about this incident; it was in my log and I turned it in. When we got to the base we had to report to our squadron commander right away. And in that room with my squadron commander was a fellow from AFOSI (we had an Air Force Office of Special Investigations on the base). He was there in the office with the commander. He asked for my logs and he wanted a quick briefing although it seemed to me he knew pretty much what had happened already. But we gave him a quick briefing and then he asked us both to sign a non-disclosure agreement saying this was classified information- we were not to release this to anybody, and that was it. We couldn't talk; he told us we could not talk about this to anyone, including any of the other crews, our spouses, our family, even amongst each other."

"Bob Kominski headed up the organization to look at all aspects of these {UFO related ICBM } shutdowns. Kominski relates to me in writing that at some point he was told by his boss that the Air Force said, "Stop the investigation; do no more on this and in addition do not write a final report." Again, this is very unusual especially in light of the fact that CINC-SAC headquarters was stating that this was of extreme importance to find out exactly what happened here. And yet, the head of the investigative team was told during the investigation to stop the investigation and not write a final report."

—Captain Robert Salas, US Air Force, SAC Launch Controller

"After an article [came out about the incident], the shit hit the fan! I started being harassed at work. I started getting odd telephone calls that would come during the day. At night, at my house I would get telephone calls- all night long sometimes 3:00 in the morning, 4:00 in the morning, midnight, 10:00, people would call and start screaming at me. You are going down mother fucker! You are going down mother fucker! And that's all they would say. And they'd keep screaming that until I finally hung up the phone.

"One night somebody blew up my mail box by putting a big load of skyrockets in it. The mailbox went up in flames. And that night at 1:00 in the morning the phone rang. I picked it up and somebody said, skyrockets in your box at night, oh what a beautiful sight, mother fucker!

"And things like that have happened on and off since 1982."

"I believe this nutty fringe around UFO's is part of a concerted effort to keep serious study of it down. Anytime anybody tries to study this subject seriously, we are subject to ridicule. I'm a full professor at a relatively major university. And I'm certain that my colleagues at the university laugh at me and hoot and holler behind my back when they hear that I have an interest in studying unidentified flying objects- and that's just one of the things that we have to live with."

"What happened to the film is an interesting story in itself as Major Mansmann related to me and other people. Some time after I had gone, the guys in civilian clothes- I thought it was the CIA but he said no, it wasn't the CIA, it was somebody else- took the film and they spooled off the part that had the UFO on it and they took a pair of scissors and cut it off. They put that on a separate reel. They put it in their briefcase. They handed Major Mansmann back the rest of the film and said here, I don't need to remind you Major of the severity of a security breach; we'll consider this incident closed. And they walked off with the film. Major Mansmann never saw it again."

—Prof. Robert Jacobs, US Air Force

"A Lieutenant Commander whom I didn't know very well came over and he asked, you know, what was up Jordan? What have you got in your log? And he says, you don't need to put that in there. Now to me that was highly irregular, highly irregular to say that particularly on a ship's logs. I did have the contact logged in there. And I started writing in UFO."

—Harry Allen Jordan, US Navy

"A few days later the Commanding Officer and the Executive Officer came on the closed circuit television system that we had on board. It was the only way that they could address the crew of 5,000. He [the Commanding Officer] looked at the camera - and I will never forget this - and he said, 'I would like to remind the crew that certain events that take place on board a major naval combative vessel are considered classified and should not be discussed with anyone without a need to know.' And that was all he said."

—James Kopf, US Navy Crypto Communications

Significance of the Witnesses

Steven M. Greer, M.D. (Transcribed and edited from an oral presentation)

The Disclosure Project is an endeavor that we have been working on since 1992. During this time we have identified over 400 military, intelligence, and corporate witnesses to special access projects within the United States and elsewhere that deal with what the public calls UFOs, extraterrestrial intelligence, and advanced energy and propulsion systems. The purpose of The Disclosure Project is to present this witness testimony so that policy makers, leaders and the public will realize that the subject is real and is of profound significance to humanity. I want to emphasize that out of the more than 400 witnesses whom we have identified, we have interviewed on camera approximately 100 of them. Of those, 120 hours of videotaped testimony has been created.

This book can only contain a very small tip of the iceberg ~ less than one-half of one percent of the total testimony we have. But it will give an idea of the extent of the knowledge these men and women who have heroically come forward to tell the world, our elected representatives, and our scientists the truth about a topic that has been the subject of much ridicule, fantasy, and speculation for over fifty years. The testimony which is contained herein has been given voluntarily and at times with great concern by these witnesses. Many of them have been concerned for their safety and for the safety of their families. However, they have felt that it is important for the world's public and for the representatives of the American people in Congress and in the White House to know the truth about this very, very important subject.

Another point I would like to make about these testimonies is that we must not reject out of hand the declaration of these witnesses. Indeed, there is no sensible basis for this. For if we begin to dismiss dozens of military, intelligence, and professional civilians who are witnesses, then it brings into question how we view witness testimony on many other subjects. If we use that same standard, then every conviction which has its basis in witness testimony in the United States should be overturned. Every scientific observation should be discarded and most of known history relegated to the dustbin. As Monsignor Balducci at the Vatican has pointed out to us, such an irrational dismissing of witness testimony would mean that even the Bible would be suspect, since it is almost totally based on human witness testimony of the people who recorded the accounts during the times of Christ. Monsignor Balducci emphasizes that to reject such strong, credible witness testimony from so many corroborating sources is irrational and undermines the foundations of human society. This human testimony is key, and in a sense it is more important than any physical evidence, because it is multiple, it is corroborating and it cannot be tossed out in a cavalier fashion.

Their testimony is important for another reason too: It confirms multiple aspects of the phenomenon from people who, in almost all cases, do not know one another. You will hear multiple people speak about these objects and how they have moved and how they have similarly performed. These are people who have never met each other and who have never worked with each other, and whose careers span 40 to 50 years of military service yet the similarity particularly in the details of their testimony is astounding. You will also hear about how the secrecy has been enforced. There is a consistent thread that runs through their testimony—again, even though these witnesses do not know one another. For nearly all of them, I have been their only point of contact to this project. Yet their testimony is corroborative, consistent and logically reinforcing. Moreover, many of these witnesses were responsible for the nuclear arsenal of the US and other countries: Are we to believe that these same people who were entrusted with so great a responsibility are to be dismissed on this matter?

One of the problems with this subject over the years is that it has been deliberately ridiculed. It has been the subject of extraordinary disinformation and deliberate secrecy, which has caused the public to think that there is really nothing substantial connected to it. Academia, the media, and many of our leaders have trusted authority figures when they have dismissed or belittled this subject— and they have been deceived. Ironically, the very people would pride themselves in not being so gullible as to 'believe' in UFOs, Extraterrestrial Intelligence and related matters have taken this ridicule and disinformation hook, line and sinker.

This information is, in fact, sensational but it should not be trivialized with sensationalism. The purpose of this summary is to focus on the truth, on the testimony and on the evidence in existence today. We feel that any objective scientist or member of the public who reviews this information will conclude that indeed we are being visited by advanced extraterrestrial civilizations, that there are advanced and exotic propulsion and energy systems behind these craft, that these systems have been studied through compartmented special access projects within the United States government and elsewhere, and that this has huge ramifications for the future of the human race.

None of these witnesses, not a single one of the over 400 military, intelligence, and aerospace witnesses, feel that there is any threat to humanity or the Earth from this phenomenon. However, as Admiral Roscoe Hillenkoetter, one of the early heads of the Central Intelligence Agency said in a letter to the Congress and to the American people in 1960, "I urge immediate Congressional action to reduce the dangers from secrecy about Unidentified Flying Objects—" It is the secrecy which is the threat, not the extraterrestrial life forms, and not the extraterrestrial vehicles and not even the advanced technologies behind them. The conservative Republican, two-term President and five-star general, Dwight Eisenhower, said that we should be careful of the excesses of the military industrial complex. We now have learned that one of his chief concerns was that special access projects within the military-industrial and intelligence sectors dealing with these UFOs, were escaping the legal constitutional oversight of the American Congress and even of the American presidency. Eisenhower's fears have, alas, been proven as well founded since we now see extraordinary funds being put into projects that are being denied to the American people, Congress and even recent Presidents. And yet the technologies within these classified projects, if released, will give us an entirely new and sustainable civilization, free of pollution and free of the extreme poverty and suffering that we see today.

We will present information which elucidates three essential areas: Number One: What is the evidence? What does the testimony support? And what do the government documents support? Number Two: What are the mechanisms for maintaining secrecy? How has something of this depth been kept secret from our representatives, and how has it been kept off the national and international radar screen effectively for over fifty years? Without understanding this, the evidence itself has little foundation, because one might conclude that this couldn't be true otherwise we would know about it. The argument is often made that the government leaks secrets like a sieve, and that indeed if any of this were true, many of the people in society and in high places in our government would know about it. So the secrecy around this issue, which has been extraordinary, must also be explained. And the third component is the why: Why has it been kept secret? What are the implications of this knowledge?

It is my opinion that the "why" explains the "how" of secrecy. The secrecy can only be comprehended by understanding why something like this would be kept secret to the degree it has. And to make this quite clear, we need to appreciate that this is not just about little green men or science fiction-oriented accounts of extra-terrestrial intelligence. It is about actual spacecraft that have visited this planet; it is also about the fact that we have studied these craft and we have studied them scientifically under rigorous conditions for at least forty to fifty years. And it is also about the fact that the technologies which have been derived from these objects—especially those technologies related to exotic energy and propulsion systems, would have profound implications for the human race.

The testimony presented here is only a small tip of the iceberg of what we have identified. Many of the witnesses who have not agreed to be filmed at this time are men and women who wish to be subpoenaed before the Congress of the United States to give their testimony. All of these witnesses feel that this is something that should be the subject of a specific inquiry by the United States authorities, the Congress, and the executive branch, as well as the international community. We feel that this is something that the public, the media, the scientific community and all those concerned with the future of our planet should request of their representatives: That these hearings be convened during the year 2001.

VIP AND WITNESS QUOTATIONS ON UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS AND EXTRATERRESTRIAL INTELLIGENCE

Section I: The Scientists

Carl Sagan, Ph.D.

Late Professor of Astronomy and Space Sciences, Cornell University

"It now seems quite clear that Earth is not the only inhabited planet. There is evidence that the bulk of the stars in the sky have planetary systems. Recent research concerning the origin of life on Earth suggests that the physical and chemical processes leading to the origin of life occur rapidly in the early history of the majority of planets within our Milky Way galaxy—perhaps as many as a million—are inhabited by technical civilizations in advance of our own. Interstellar space flight is far beyond our present technical capabilities, but there seems to be no fundamental physical objections to preclude, from our own vantage point, the possibility of its development by other civilizations."<sup>1</sup>

Margaret Mead, Ph.D.

Anthropologist, author

"There are unidentified flying objects. That is, there are a hard core of cases—perhaps 20 to 30 percent in different studies—for which there is no explanation. We can only imagine what purpose lies behind the activities of these quiet, harmlessly cruising objects that time and again approach the earth. The most likely explanation, it seems to me, is that they are simply watching what we are up to..."<sup>2</sup>

J. Allen Hynek, Ph.D.

Former Chairman, Department of Astronomy, Northwestern University; Scientific Consultant, Air Force Project Blue Book (1947-1969)

if, after twenty years of confusion, we want some answers."

"When the long awaited solution to the UFO problem comes, I believe that it will prove to be not merely the next small step in the march of science but a mighty and totally unexpected quantum jump."<sup>3</sup>

Frank B. Salisbury, Ph.D.

Professor, Plant Physiology, Utah State University

"I must admit that any favorable mention of the flying saucers by a scientist amounts to extreme heresy and places the one making the statement in danger of excommunication by the scientific theocracy. Nevertheless, in recent years I have investigated the story of the unidentified flying object (UFO), and I am no longer able to dismiss the idea lightly."<sup>4</sup>

James E. McDonald, Ph.D.

Senior Physicist, Institute of Atmospheric Physics, University of Arizona

"The type of UFO reports that are most intriguing are close-range sightings of machinelike objects of unconventional nature and unconventional performance characteristics, seen at low altitudes, and sometimes even on the ground. The general public is entirely unaware of the large number of such reports that are coming from credible witnesses... When one starts searching for such cases, their number are quite astonishing."<sup>5</sup>

American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics UFO Subcommittee

"From a scientific and engineering standpoint, it is unacceptable to simply ignore substantial numbers of unexplained observations... the only promising approach is a continuing moderate-level effort with emphasis on improved data collection and objective means...involving available remote sensing capabilities and certain software changes." Peter A. Sturrock, Ph.D.

Professor, Space Science and Astrophysics, and deputy director of the Center for Space Sciences and Astrophysics, Stanford University

"The definitive resolution of the UFO enigma will not come about unless and until the problem is subjected to open and extensive scientific study by the normal procedures of established science and administrators in universities."

"Although... the scientific community has tended to minimize the significance of the UFO phenomenon, certain individual scientists have argued that the phenomenon is both real and significant... To a scientist, the main source of hard information (other than his own experiments [and] observations) is provided by the scientific journals. With rare exceptions, scientific journals do not publish reports of UFO observations. The decision not to publish is made by the editor acting on the advice of reviewers. This process is self-reinforcing; the apparent lack of data confirms the view that there is nothing to the UFO phenomenon, and this view works against the presentation of relevant data..."<sup>7</sup>

Helmut Lammer, Ph.D.

Physicist, Space Research Institute, Department for Extraterrestrial Physics, Austria

[Writing about the formations in the Cydonia region of Mars]

"It is the authors belief that the Viking data are not of sufficient resolution to permit the identification of possible mechanisms of the origin for these objects, although some results to date suggest that they may not be natural. Clearly these mysterious objects deserve further scrutiny by the forthcoming Mars missions. If one of these missions finds that the face on Mars, the pyramids and the other strange structures are indeed artificial, then the "unlikely" Prior Colonization or Previous Technical Civilization hypotheses would provide a possible answer."<sup>8</sup>

Professor Hermann Oberth (1894-1989)

I think that they possibly are manned by intelligent observers who are members of a race that may have been investigating our earth for centuries. I think that they possibly have been sent out to conduct systematic, long-range investigations, first of men, animals, vegetation, and more recently of atomic centers, armaments and centers of armament production."<sup>9</sup>

Dr. Carl Gustav Jung

"A purely psychological explanation is ruled out...the discs show signs of intelligent guidance, by quasi-human pilots...the authorities in possession of important information should not hesitate to enlighten the public as soon and as completely as possible."<sup>10</sup>

Astronaut Edgar Mitchell, Ph.D.

In 1971, Dr. Mitchell became the sixth person to walk on the moon as part of the US Apollo Space program.

"I am an American astronaut and a trained scientist. Because of my position people in high places confide in me. And, as a result, I have no doubt that aliens HAVE visited this planet. The American government and governments throughout the world have thousands of files of UFO sightings which cannot be explained. As a scientist, it is logical to me that at least some of these will have been witness of alien craft. As a former astronaut, the military people who have access to these files are more willing to talk to me than to people they regard as mere cranks. The stories I have heard from these people, who are more highly qualified than me to talk about UFOs, leave me in no doubt that aliens have already visited Earth..."

... "when I learned that aliens really do exist, I wasn't too surprised. But what did shock me when I started investigating extra-terrestrial reports a decade ago is the extent to which the proof has been hushed up. It isn't just the US government which has kept quiet about alien visits. It would be arrogant of an American like myself to assume that ETs would only choose to visit my country. Indeed, I've heard convincing stories about governments all over the world that know of alien visits - including the British government."<sup>11</sup>

Section II: The Government Speaks - Political, Military and Intelligence Figures

President Harry S. Truman:

"I can assure you that flying saucers, given that they exist, are not constructed by any power on earth."<sup>12</sup>

President Gerald Ford:

"...I have taken a special interest in these [UFOJ accounts because many of the latest reported sightings have been in my home state of Michigan... Because I think there may be substance to some of these reports and because I believe the American people are entitled to a more thorough explanation than has been given them by the Air Force to date, I am proposing that either the Science and Astronautics Committee or the Armed Services Committee of the House, schedule hearings on the subject of UFOs and invite testimony from both the executive branch of the Government and some of the persons who claim to have seen UFOs... In the firm belief that the American public deserves a better explanation than that thus far given by the Air Force, I strongly recommend that there be a committee investigation of the UFO phenomena. I think we owe it to the people to establish credibility regarding UFOs and to produce the greatest possible enlightenment on this subject."<sup>13</sup>

President Jimmy Carter:

"If I become President, I'll make every piece of information this country has about UFO sightings available to the public, and the scientists. I am convinced that UFOs exist because I've seen one..."<sup>14</sup>

President Ronald Reagan:

".. .when you stop to think that we're all God's children, wherever we may live in the world, I couldn't help but say to [Gorbachev], just think how easy his task and mine might be in these meetings that we held if suddenly there was a threat to this world from some other species from another planet outside in the universe..."

"Perhaps we need some outside, universal threat to make us recognize this common bond. I occasionally think how quickly our differences worldwide would vanish if we were facing an alien threat from outside this world."<sup>15</sup>

J. Edgar Hoover:

"I would do it [study UFOs], but before agreeing to do it, we must insist upon full access to discs recovered. For instance in the L.A. case, the Army grabbed it and would not let us have it for cursory examination."<sup>16</sup>

General Nathan D. Twining:

While he was the Commanding General of the Air Material Command he wrote the following:

"It is the opinion that:

- a. The phenomena reported is something real and not visionary or fictitious.
- b. There are objects probably approximating the shape of a disc, of such appreciable size as to appear to be as large as a man-made aircraft.
- c. There is a possibility that some of the incidents may be caused by natural phenomena, such as meteors.
- d. The reported operating characteristics such as extreme rates of climb, maneuverability (particularly in roll), and action which must be considered evasive when sighted or contacted by friendly aircraft and radar, lend belief to the possibility that some of the objects are controlled either manually, automatically, or remotely."<sup>17</sup>

General Walter Bedell Smith (CIA Director, 1950-1953):

"The Central Intelligence Agency has reviewed the current situation concerning unidentified flying objects which have created extensive speculation in the press and have been the subject of concern to government organizations..."

Since 1947, approximately 2,000 official reports of sightings have been received, and, of these, about 20% are as yet unexplained. It is my view that this situation has possible implications for our national security which transcend the interests of a single service. A broader, coordinated effort should be initiated to develop a firm scientific understanding of the several phenomena which apparently are involved in these reports..."<sup>18</sup>

H. Marshall Chadwell (Assistant Director, Scientific Intelligence, CIA):

"Since 1947, ATIC has received approximately 1500 official reports of sightings plus an enormous volume of letters, phone calls, and press reports. During July 1952 alone, official reports totaled 250. Of the 1500 reports, Air Force carries 20 percent as unexplained and of those received from January through July 1952 it carries 28 percent unexplained."<sup>19</sup> [emphasis in original]

Captain Edward J. Ruppelt (Former head [1951-1953], U.S. Air Force Project Blue Book):

"This report has been difficult to write because it involves something that doesn't officially exist. It is well known that ever since the first flying saucer was reported in June 1947 the Air Force has officially said that there is no proof that such a thing as an interplanetary spaceship exists. But what is not well known is that this conclusion is far from being unanimous among the military and their scientific advisors because of the one word, proof; so the UFO investigations continue."<sup>20</sup> [emphasis in original]

Admiral Roscoe Hillenkoetter (First Director, CIA, 1947-1950):

"It is time for the truth to be brought out... Behind the scenes, high-ranking Air Force officers are soberly concerned about the UFOs. But through official secrecy and ridicule, many citizens are led to believe the unknown flying objects are nonsense... I urge immediate Congressional action to reduce the dangers from secrecy about Unidentified Flying Objects.."<sup>21</sup>

"...many of the reports that cannot be explained have come from intelligent and technically well qualified individuals whose integrity cannot be doubted. In addition, the reports received officially by the Air Force include only a fraction of the spectacular reports which are publicized by many private UFO organizations."<sup>22</sup>

Congressman William Stanton (Pennsylvania):

"The Air Force failed in its responsibility in thoroughly investigating this incident [April 17, 1966 sighting, Pennsylvania]... Once people entrusted with the public welfare no longer think people can handle the truth, then the people, in turn, will no longer trust the government."<sup>23</sup>

Wilbert Smith (Department of Transport - Canada, senior radio engineer, head of Project Magnet):

"The matter is the most highly classified subject in the United States Government, rating higher even than the H-bomb. Flying saucers exist. Their modus operandi is unknown but concentrated effort is being made by a small group headed by Doctor Vannevar Bush. The entire matter is considered by the United States authorities to be of tremendous significance."<sup>24</sup>

Lord Hill-Norton, Admiral of the Fleet, Great Britain (Five Star):

"I have frequently been asked why I am so keenly interested in UFOs; people seem to think it odd that someone who has been so closely involved with Defense for many years should be so simple. I am interested for several reasons. First, I have the sort of inquiring mind that likes to have things satisfactorily explained, and the one aspect of this whole matter which is starkly clear to me is that UFOs have not been explained, to my satisfaction. Indeed, so far as I am concerned the U stands more for unexplained than unidentified. Second, there is a very wide range of other unexplained phenomena which may or may not be related to UFOs but which have come to my notice in the UFO connection. Third, I am convinced that there is an official cover-up of the investigations which governments have made into UFOs, certainly in the United States... The evidence that there are objects which have been

Major-General Wilfred de Brouwer (Deputy Chief, Royal Belgian Air Force):

"In any case, the Air Force has arrived to the conclusion that a certain number of anomalous phenomena has been produced within Belgian airspace... Until now, not a single trace of aggressiveness has been signaled; military or civilian air traffic has not been perturbed or threatened. We can therefore advance that the presumed activities to date constitute a concrete menace... The day will undoubtedly come when the phenomenon will be observed with technological means of detection and collection that won't leave a single doubt about its origin...

Testimony of Astronaut Edgar Mitchell

[Our deepest gratitude goes to James Fox for sharing with us this interview. SG]

In February 1971 Astronaut Edgar Mitchell flew on Apollo 14 and was the 6th man to walk on the moon. In his testimony, he acknowledges the fact that there have been ET visitations here on Earth as well as crashed craft and recovered materials and bodies. He also speaks of the concealment that has been prevalent surrounding this subject for over 50 years and the lack of oversight and visible Government control. He is concerned over our stewardship of this Earth and sees our growing environmental crisis as real.

EM: Astronaut Edgar Mitchell

JF: James Fox

EM: In the literature we see accounts from military people who have had encounters in flight, and been vectored to chase unidentified objects. These are people who have official positions whose job was to know about possible extraterrestrial visitation and to do something with it, people within Government.

There's a lot that does go on with these high security classifications-they are under military rules. I think it is a fairly muddy area when we are talking about this level of activity. There are some stories [about how secrecy has been enforced] that are rather ghastly, as a matter of fact. I can't validate those. I don't know that they are necessarily true. But, like many other stories, they put fear in the hearts of people and that's, perhaps, why many people don't want to come forward.

My interest basically is what's the nature of the universe we live in? What is our relationship to the larger reality? If [UFOs] are a part of the larger reality and we are denying it, that to me is unconscionable. I don't live that way. I went into space to learn about the universe we live in, to get new insights, to go beyond the boundaries of our known existence. And if these phenomena are really indicators of new information about the cosmos at all, and intelligent life in the cosmos, and our ability to travel in the cosmos, then we ought to get to the bottom of it. It is just my curiosity that drives me.

There seems to have been, over the last 50 years at least, a great deal of secrecy surrounding the so-called UFO events. It's a very complex subject. We are not dealing with something that's very simple here. We have sightings of all sorts. We've been reporting thousands and thousands of sightings for 50 years or so. Large numbers of those sightings are indeed misperceiving natural phenomenon in some way. But a large number of them are not misperceiving. They are well documented events that represent flying craft that do not match anything we have in an Earthbound arsenal, which is very short of saying we have validated in the public domain that they are ET craft. We have to rely upon people who have been there and interacted, have firsthand data.

The only people I know of that claim to have been in that position are former intelligence, military, and Government people, and some contractor people whose official duties in the early days were to investigate this and know about it. Those people were under, at that time, great restrictions and high security clearances that prevented them from telling the general public about it. It would appear that period has long past but they are still under security restriction, or at least believe they are.

Yes there have been ET visitations. There have been crashed craft. There have been material and bodies recovered. And there is some group of people somewhere that may or may not be associated with Government at this point, but certainly were at one time, that have this knowledge. They have been attempting to conceal this knowledge or not permit it to be widely disseminated.

I cannot answer who are these people. But there is a lot of evidence that points to what I call a clandestine group- people who have some quasi affiliation with Government and certain Government facilities but operate in a very stealth and secret way that is not generally under high level Government control as far as we can tell. From all that I know, yes there has been ET visitation and may continue to be. There have been craft that have been recovered. There has been a certain amount of reverse engineering that has allowed some of these craft, or some components, to be duplicated. And, that there are Earthlings who are utilizing some of this equipment in certain ways.

And, that, perhaps a large part of the activity that's classified as UFO activity- abductions and the whole host of this type of activity- may very well not be due to ET activity at all. I would suspect if any is due to ET activity, it is a rather small part. And a larger portion is due to human type activity, Earthling type activity in a very clandestine fashion.

I will stop short of attaching motivation to this. I don't know the motivation. But if it is normal human motivation, it has to do with power and control and greed and money and so forth.

I think it is long past time to open this up to the public. I do not see anything that suggests, really, malevolent intent... We see things that, like abductions for example, that many would claim are hostile. To the extent that that may be true, I would more likely attribute it to some other [non ET] cause.

There is a mountain of evidence, if you will, that essentially amounts to smoking gun evidence that has not been brought forward at this point, at least not by the powers of Government.

The question of, has it been kept secret, or how could it be kept secret? It hasn't been kept secret. It's been there all along. But it has been the subject of disinformation in order to deflect attention and to create confusion so the truth doesn't come out. Disinformation is simply another method of stonewalling. And that's been used consistently for the last 50 years or so: Weather balloons over Roswell as opposed to a crashed craft of some sort. That is disinformation. We've seen that for 50 years. And it's the best way to hide something.

It shouldn't be any more of an effect that ET's have come here than that we have gone to the moon. Okay? It's just a part of the way things are. And we have to understand it and put it in context of the story of ourselves, our knowledge base, of cosmology, the nature of our existence, who are we, how does the world work. And of course that knowledge does change our understanding of how the world, or the universe at large, works. Until the last 30 years, it was conventional wisdom, both in science and theology, that we are alone in the universe, that we are the whole, single repository of life anywhere in the known universe. Well no one believes that anymore. That changes our concept of who we are and how we fit.

And it is becoming very clear that the way we have conducted ourselves as stewards of life on planet Earth is wanting. We haven't been good stewards. We have environmental, global problems right now that are bringing civilization to a crisis. And people don't want to hear that but it's slowly becoming obvious that that is true. And so, this knowledge of who we are, how we manage a planet, how we fit into the larger scheme of things, is a very important question.

Well, Dr. Greer did indeed mount an initiative and did go to Washington, did speak with high level Government people, did present some of the witnesses that we've talked about here, to give briefings. He has asked for congressional hearings on these matters. I attended and helped him with that. And I believe it is a very important effort that we get congressional oversight of all of this. But so far, that hasn't happened. We briefed certain members of Congress, some of their staff, some of the people from the White House. We talked with people in the Pentagon. And in general, it was well received and some were quite amazed at what they heard. But so far it hasn't resulted in any great activity.

JF: Was this news to a lot of their ears?

EM: To some people, yes. Others, not really so much. But I will say, it led me to the belief that people in high level Government have very, very little, if any, valid information about this. Most have no more knowledge than the man in the street. They were out of the loop of the things we were talking about, that's right.

JF: Is that a concern for you?

EM: Oh yes, it's a very great concern. I have expressed this concern over and over. That is exactly what I'm saying: whatever activity is going on, to the extent that it is a clandestine group, a quasi-Government group, a quasi-private group, it is without any type, as far as I can tell, of high level Government oversight. And that is a great concern.

[Astronaut Mitchell here is referring to the 1997 Briefings that Dr. Greer organized for Congress, White House personnel, the Pentagon and others. There were over a dozen government and military witnesses present who testified regarding what they personally had seen related to UFOs and ET matters. It was indeed disconcerting to see so many high government officials and senior Pentagon officers who had been kept in the dark about something as important as this. SG]

Testimony of Monsignor Corrado Balducci

September 2000

(Through translator)

Monsignor Balducci is a Vatican theologian and an insider close to the Pope. He has been featured on national Italian television numerous times to express that extraterrestrial contact is a real phenomenon and "not due to psychological impairment". In this testimony he explains that not only the general populous but also highly credible, cultured, and educated people of high status are recognizing more and more that this is a real phenomenon. He goes on to speak about the extraterrestrial people as part of God's creation and that they are not angels nor are they devils. However they are probably more spiritually evolved.

CB: Monsignor Corrado Balducci

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

SG: Monsignor Balducci, what are your thoughts about the existence of extraterrestrial intelligence?

CB: I've spoken at quite a few conferences about this matter in these last few years. And willingly, I have talked about this. It is time that we theologians should say something. So many say that this is all false, that nothing exists, especially in my field, my ecclesiastical field. [I am asked:] What in the world are you doing becoming interested in these things that are all false?

What I do is say [is], dear Monsignor, my friend, and I begin to explain to him a little bit, and then he says, "I never knew...". We have come to the point that we can't anymore deny that there is something that is happening, that something is happening here in this field of ufology, not just flying saucers, but there might be actual people, beings, extraterrestrial beings. And, anymore, this is something that comes from human common sense. I said, we have come to the point, and why have we come to this point? Because there are so many witnesses, so many, so many witnesses who have said they have seen these flying saucers or these extraterrestrials. Which means that there must be something there or someone, or something that is guiding them from far away or something that is inside. There are too many to ignore. And this is common sense.

The conclusion today of people of common sense is that there is something real that is happening here. There is not only witness testimony of general people of the populous, but also of people that are highly credible, cultured people, educated people, and scientists that were skeptical in the beginning. But when they saw one of these objects, then they believed this was a phenomenon.

I want to speak as a theologian right now. To be so skeptical is against normal common sense, it's against reason. Human testimony is the most common way of communication and dialogue. Because, when we listen to people, we have to have faith that what they are saying is true. It's a dialogue between one who says something and believing what the person has to say, or not believing what the person has to say.

But if we go ahead, like this, and, this is the real point that really moved me as a theologian, if we continue saying this isn't true, then what's going to happen? Then whatever human witness testimony we have for anything else will not be given the importance deserved to witness testimony. And this witness testimony, if it becomes diminished will have a lot of negative repercussions: individual negative aspects, social negative aspects, and religious aspects. And especially for what concerns the Christian religion.

From the human and social point of view, life will just end because this extends to everything that we buy, if we have this kind of paranoia about human witness testimony. It is against common sense to deny this phenomenon. Remember, that I said there would be consequences for the Christian religion; especially, I said, with the Christian religion.

We can show that at a certain historical point there lived a man named Jesus. And in the end, this is based on human witness testimonies. The fact is that we have these historical people who wrote about this. He must have been an extraordinary man because they didn't make such a record about everybody. He also demonstrated he was also God, not just man. We see in the Testaments, in the Gospels, that he did some of these miracles, which showed that he was God. But also the Gospels are human witness testimony.

And how do we know that this Gospel is from that man and this Gospel is from this man and that it is true? If you start taking apart and destroying the value of human witness testimony, the consequences are great, tremendous, especially for the Christian religion.

SG: How would you view extraterrestrial life theologically? Do you see them as part of God's creation?

CB: Of course. When we are talking about extraterrestrial beings, we have to take as a supposition that a being is a body or material and a soul. In other words, a body that may be better than ours. It's possible that an extraterrestrial is like a person. But a human person, according to my opinion, is like this: worse than we are, it cannot exist. We are the worst.

What is the combination that humanity has? The fact is that the soul is a slave to the body. We are inclined more toward evil than good. Lower than this, there isn't anything. I could say that maybe in the extraterrestrials there could be people like us, but if there are people like us, I will say that there are many more that are much more superior to us. And this superiority translated in the spiritual world means that they probably would say mankind does more towards self interest and evil than they do good. In other words, they are probably so evolved that evil doesn't even enter into it as much because they would be that much more spiritually evolved in their combination of body and soul.

It's also possible for another reason: God. God in his wisdom wouldn't have created only us as humans.

SG: In America, there have been some reactionary fundamentalists who have said that these are the work of the devil? What do you think of this?

CB: The devil has nothing to do with this! I haven't talked about this publicly in the past, but angels and devils don't need [space] craft; they don't need the flying saucers. They don't need these things. God would never allow the devil to show humanity this kind of manifestation in such a great form. He would never permit this. Don't even think about it being the devil. These extraterrestrials are not angels and not devils. And they are not the dead so don't add them in there either!

There is such a gap between us and the angels. In other words, in the evolution between humanity and angels, is it possible that God created such a difference? Isn't there something in between? He did one step higher [than humanity]. But this is very logical to think that God created something between the humans and the angels. It is probable that this UFO phenomenon shows the existence of extraterrestrials who exist between the angels and humans.

In other words, God had a reasoning for creating creation. He had a reason. He had a goal. And he did it because all of these creatures bring glory to God. The angels and we [humans] reflect the glory of God. And also the extraterrestrials that [have been] created. Absolutely, it is in the idea of love, a universal love. For His glory, is it possible that He just created us? And [especially since] we [humans] have trouble bringing glory to God.

From the Vatican observatory and during this council where the Vatican spoke about the astronomy projects they have, I read that the Vatican talked favorably about extraterrestrial possibilities. This was for the jubilee year, and this was the jubilee event of the scientist.

With faith and science there can't be any kind of opposition because [for] science the real goal is to look for the secrets of nature. But God brought His secrets to nature and left it up to humans to figure it out. This is done by God, the creator, a God that manifests himself in the creation. There can't be any contradictions that this is the same God [for both science and religion].

It is desirable [that the extraterrestrials exist] because if they are better than we are, they are going to intervene, then they are going to help us. And it is desirable. And it says in the Bible, everything that exists in the universe is in the creation divine. There are no extraterrestrials which are not part of the divine creation.

If God created all of them, then He gives His love and He extends Himself to all. St. Paul says this. And also Father Pio says this. There were two things that were asked of Father Pio, who has just become a Saint. He was asked if the life on other planets were creatures of God. He responds: Why do you wish that they weren't there? The power of God would [then] be limited to this little planet Earth. Why would you want that there would not be other creatures, other people, who would love God [also] ? Coming off Earth, we are nothing. God didn't limit his glory to this little planet. On other planets there must be beings that have not sinned like we have.

MEMORANDUM TO: Director, Psychological Strategy Board

SUBJECT: Flying Saucers

1. I am today transmitting to the National Security Council a proposal (PAB A) in which it is concluded that the problems connected with unidentified flying objects appear to have implications for psychological warfare as well as for intelligence and operations.

2. The background for this view is presented in some detail in PAB B.

3. I suggest that we discuss at an early board meeting the possible offensive or defensive utilization of these phenomena for psychological warfare purposes.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence
THRU : Deputy Director for Intelligence
SUBJECT : Unidentified Flying Objects

1. On 20 August, the DCI, after a briefing by OSI on the above subject, directed the preparation of an NSCID for submission to the Council stating the need for investigation and directing agencies concerned to cooperate in such investigations.

2. In attempting to draft such a directive and the supporting staff studies, it became apparent to DD/I, Acting AD/SI and AD/IC that the problem was largely a research and development problem, and it was decided by DD/I to attempt to initiate action through R&DB. A conference was held between DI/USAF, Chairman of R&DB, DD/I, Acting AD/SI and AD/IC at which time it was decided that Dr. Whitman, Chairman of R&DB, would investigate the possibility of undertaking research and development studies through Air Force agencies.

3. On approximately 6 November, we were advised by Chairman, R&DB, that inquiries in the Air Staff did not disclose "undue concern" over this matter, but that it had been referred to the Air Defense Command for consideration. No further word has been received from R&DB.

4. Recent reports reaching CIA indicated that further action was desirable and another briefing by the cognizant A-2 and ATIC personnel was held on 25 November. At this time, the reports of incidents convince us that there is something going on that must have immediate attention. The details of some of these incidents have been discussed by AD/SI with DDCI. Sightings of unexplained objects at great altitudes and travelling at high speeds in the vicinity of major U.S. defense installations are of such nature that they are not attributable to natural phenomena or known types of aerial vehicles.

5. OSI is proceeding to the establishment of a consulting group of sufficient competence and stature to review this matter and convince the responsible authorities in the community that immediate research and development on this subject must be undertaken. This can be done expeditiously under the aegis of CEMIS.

6. Attached hereto is a draft memorandum to the NSC and a simple draft NSC Directive establishing this matter as a priority project throughout the intelligence and the defense research and development community.

PURPOSE:

To advise at the present time the Air Force has failed to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion in its research regarding numerous reports of flying saucers and flying discs sighted throughout the United States.

DETAILS:

Mr. N. W. Philcox, the Bureau's Air Force Liaison Representative, made arrangements through the office of Major General John A. Samsford, Director of Air Intelligence, U.S. Air Force, to receive a briefing from Commander Randall Boyd of the Current Intelligence Branch, Estimates Division, Air Intelligence, regarding the present status of Air Intelligence research into the numerous reports regarding flying saucers and flying discs.

Commander Boyd advised that Air Intelligence has set up at Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, the Air Technical Intelligence Center which has been established for the purpose of coordinating, correlating and making research into all reports regarding flying saucers and flying discs. He advised that Air Force research has indicated that the sightings of flying saucers goes back several centuries and that the number of sightings reported varies with the amount of publicity. He advised that immediately if publicity appears in newspapers, the number of sightings reported increases considerably and that citizens immediately call in reporting sightings which occurred several months previously. Commander Boyd stated that these reported sightings of flying saucers are placed into three classifications by Air Intelligence:

- (1) Those sightings which are reported by citizens who claim they have seen flying saucers from the ground. These sightings vary in description, color and speeds. Very little credence is given to these sightings inasmuch as in most instances they are believed to be imaginative or some explainable object which actually crossed through the sky.
- (2) Sightings reported by commercial or military pilots. These sightings are considered more credible by the Air Force inasmuch as commercial or military pilots are experienced in the air and are not expected to see objects which are entirely imaginative. In each of these instances, the individual who reports the sighting is thoroughly interviewed by a representative of Air Intelligence so that a complete description of the object sighted can be obtained.

(3) Those sightings which are reported by pilots and for which there is additional corroboration, such as recording by radar or sighting from the ground. Commander Boyd advised that this latter classification constitutes two or three per cent of the total number of sightings, but that they are the most credible reports received and are difficult to explain. Some of these sightings are originally reported from the ground, then are observed by pilots in the air and then are picked up by radar instruments. He stated that in these instances there is no doubt that these individuals reporting the sightings actually did see something in the sky. However, he explained that these objects could still be natural phenomena and still could be recorded on radar if there was some electrical disturbance in the sky.

He stated that the flying saucers are most frequently observed in areas where there is heavy air traffic, such as Washington, D.C., and New York City. He advised, however, that some reports are received from other parts of the country covering the entire United States and that sightings have also recently been reported as far distant as Acapulco, Mexico; Korea and French Morocco. He advised that the sightings reported in the last classification have never been satisfactorily explained. He pointed out, however, that it is still possible that these objects may be a natural phenomenon or some type of atmospherical disturbance. He advised that it is not entirely impossible that the objects sighted may possibly be ships from another planet such as Mars. He advised that at the present time there is nothing to substantiate this theory but the possibility is not being overlooked. He stated that Air Intelligence is fairly certain that these objects are not ships or missiles from another nation in this world. Commander Boyd advised that intense research is being carried on presently by Air Intelligence, and at the present time when credible reportings of sightings are received, the Air Force is attempting in each instance to send up jet interceptor planes in order to obtain a better view of these objects. However, recent attempts in this regard have indicated that when the pilot in the jet approaches the object it invariably fades from view.

Introduction

(transcribed and edited from an oral presentation by Dr. Greer)

This area of testimony deals specifically with pilot encounters, radar cases and related cases. It should be pointed out that for decades, people who have been skeptical of the UFO subject have asserted that if these objects were real, they would have been tracked on radar. We have no fewer than 20 witnesses from the Air Force, the Marines, the Navy, the Army, and civilian authorities in the United States and abroad who are qualified air traffic controllers and pilots who have seen and tracked these objects on radar. Please note that these people state emphatically that these objects have not been weather balloons; they have not been air inversions; they have not been "swamp gas". They have been structured craft often traveling at thousands of miles per hour, then suddenly stopping, hovering or moving in a nonlinear fashion. These objects have been tracked going from one spot to hundreds of miles away or further within one radar sweep. These are solid objects. They are metallic and they give strong and unambiguous radar returns.

This is not a situation any more where we just have one or two witnesses, and one must consider this very seriously as you evaluate the evidence: To have more than a dozen of these witnesses on tape testifying that these objects have been tracked on radar, and at times as many as a dozen radars tracking at the same time, means that we are dealing with an actual, real, physical and technological craft -- not something that is imaginary, not something that is a mass hallucination, and not something that can be written off as some kind of anomaly. As Air Force Colonel Charles Brown, pointed out, the Air Force Project Grudge, as far back as 1950, had radar confirmation of these objects by ground radar, ground visual, airborne radar, and airborne visual - and, "It does not get any better than that". Many of these witnesses have also observed these objects returning on multiple nights to similar areas and have checked out their equipment rigorously to be sure that there were no technical glitches in either the software or the hardware.

This of course is explosive. The testimony of these witnesses forever puts to rest the argument that these objects don't exist because we have, in addition to their testimony, the radar tracings; we have documentation of these events; and we have people who have been on the inside of such events ranging from the 1940s all the way up into the 1990s.

Testimony of FAA Division Chief John Callahan
October 2000

For 6 years Mr. Callahan was the Division Chief of the Accidents and Investigations Branch of the FAA in Washington DC. In his testimony he tells about a 1986 Japanese Airlines 747 flight that was followed by a UFO for 31 minutes over the Alaskan skies. The UFO also trailed a United Airlines flight until the flight landed. There was visual confirmation as well as air-based and ground-based radar confirmation. This event was significant enough for the then FAA Administrator, Admiral Engen, to hold a briefing the next day where the FBI, CIA, President Reagan's Scientific Study Team, as well as others attended. Videotape radar evidence, air traffic voice communications and paper reports were compiled and presented. At the conclusion of this meeting, the attending CIA members instructed everyone present that 'the meeting never took place' and that 'this incident was never recorded'. Not realizing that there was additional evidence, they confiscated just the evidence presented, but Mr. Callahan was able to secure video tape and audio evidence of the event.

JC: FAA Division Chief John Callahan

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JC: I was the Division Chief of the Accidents and Investigations Branch of the FAA in Washington, D.C. I stayed there for about six years and then retired.

This particular incident started with a phone call from the people in Alaska. He says, we got a problem here. I don't know what to tell the media. The whole office is full of the media from Alaska. I said, what's the problem? He said, well, it's that UFO. I said, what UFO? He said, well last week we had a UFO chase a 747 across the skies up here for about 30 minutes or so and we didn't think too much of it, he says. But apparently the word got out and we have all these news people here and we want to know what to tell them.

So being an old Government employee, I told him what you always tell him. Tell them it is under investigation and then get all that data together. I wanted all the discs that they had and all the tapes that they had available flown overnight to the [FAA] tech center in Atlantic City.

They called the military and they told the military they wanted all their tapes. The FAA controls all the airspace above the United States and its territory. It doesn't belong to the military. It doesn't belong to the guys shooting the rockets off. It belongs to the United States Government and it is controlled by the FAA. So I told him to get the military's tapes and all their data and ship that down. Well they called back an hour or so later and they said, the military said they were short on their tapes and they had to put them back in service, but it's only been 12 days. Now, the tapes were supposed to be kept for 15 days.

The FAA Administrator sent my boss, who was the associate director of the FAA, and me down to Atlantic City to look at this thing to see if he had something to worry about. It took us two days to look at all the data. We went in and told him we wanted this room set up to be just like it was in Anchorage [during the encounter]. And we wanted all that data to come to this radar scope. And we wanted to see everything the controller saw. We wanted to hear everything he heard. And we wanted it all tied together, the radar, the digital radar and the sound.

Some of the people that were working on that side of the fence and who were displaying this, had already reviewed the tapes, and they didn't feel comfortable showing us what was on there. But we looked at all of it.

When the Air Traffic Controller had asked the military man, do you see anything? The military guy says, yes, I have a target at such and such, 1:00 and eight miles from the Japanese pilot, 747.

The way it started is there was a Japanese Airline 747, was coming from the northwest going across the Alaskan territory. And he was at either 31,000, 33,000, or 35,000 feet. And it was around 11:00 at night, but you can check the real times. He called and asked the Controller if the Controller had any traffic at his altitude. And the Controller said, no. Basically it was a midnight operation and they didn't have too much traffic. And he said, well I have a target at my 11:00 or 1:00 position about eight miles away.

Now in the 747 they have radar in the nose that picks up the weather outside there. So his radar is picking up a target. He sees this target with his eyes. And the target, the way he said it, was a huge ball with lights running around it. And I think he said it was like four times as big as a 747!

And the military man said something like, yeah, I see him 35 miles north of Anchorage. And who's that at 11:00 or 1:00 in his position? And the FAA Controller said, I don't have anybody [any regular traffic] ? Do you have anybody? The military controller said, it's not mine.

ATC called the military controller and asked them if they had anybody out there. And they said no, all their traffic was on the west side. And he came back and said, we have no traffic here. And a couple of times during the operation, the Japanese pilot would say, he's now at 11:00, he's now at 1:00, he's now at 3:00. The UFO was bouncing around the 747 here. And when he would say that, the military guy would cut in and say, he's now at 2:00 or 3:00 and he would confirm the position. The military controller has, what they call, height-finding radar, and they have long-range radar and short-range radar. So if they don't catch it on one of their systems they catch it on the other. And if you listen to the military man, at one time he said, I have it on the height radar, or my range radar, which indicated that they had a target on his system. Well they ran through for the best part of 31 minutes. The UFO would be in one position or the other following the Japanese 747. After a while they changed his altitude and it still stayed with him. They gave him a 360. When you are a 747 and you make a 360, it takes you a few minutes to turn around. You cover a lot of space. And it still stayed with him. It was either in the front, on the side, or behind him. They would see it at 1:00 in front of the 747 seven or eight miles [away]. And then on the next sweep, which would be like 10 seconds later, it would be behind him, seven or eight miles. And it always stayed seven or eight miles away from the target.

[Note the familiar non-linear maneuvers of this UFO, covering many miles in less than 10 seconds. This is corroborated by dozens of other UFO-radar events in the testimony of many other witnesses. SG]

When it was all done and we went back to Washington the next day, the Administrator [of the FAA] had called down and wanted to know if he had a problem or not. And my boss had told him, well we took a video of it and it looks like there might have been something there. Well the FAA Administrator said can you come up and give us a quick five-minute run-down of what happened? So we go up to the 10th floor [of FAA Headquarters in Washington DC] and give a four or five minute debriefing for the Administrator who was at the time Admiral Engen. He said, well have you got that video with you? Can you show me the video? I said, yeah, you just plug it in and play it.

So we plugged it in for him. He started watching it and after about five minutes, he told his staff to cancel his meetings. So he watched the whole thing, just over a half an hour.

We get all done, and he says, what do you guys think? My boss gave a good political answer and he said he wasn't sure what it was... So his take was, don't talk to anybody. And don't talk to anybody until I give you the okay. Then the next day I got a call from someone with the Scientific Study Group [for President Reagan], or the CIA, I'm not sure who it was, the first call. And they had some questions about the incident. And I had said, I don't know what you are talking about, you probably want to call the Admiral [FAA Administrator Engen].

Well a few minutes later the Admiral calls down and says, I have set up a briefing tomorrow morning at 9:00 am in the round room. Bring all the stuff you have. Bring everybody up there and give them whatever they want. We want to get out of it. Just let them do whatever they want. So I brought all the people from the Tech Center. We had all kinds of boxes of data that we had them print out; it filled up the room. They brought in three people from the FBI, three people from the CIA, and three people from Reagan's Scientific Study team ~ I don't know who the rest of the people were but they were all excited.

We let them watch the video. Then they had all kinds of questions about the frequency, the rate of the antennae turning, on and on and on, how many radar's, how many antennas, how does the data get processed. They were all excited - the only way a man would be if that was his job. When they got done, they actually swore all these other guys in there that this never took place. We never had this meeting. And this was never recorded.

SG: Who said that? Who was saying that?

JC: This was one of the guys from the CIA. Okay? That they were never there and this never happened. At the time I said, well I don't know why you are saying this. I mean, there was something there and if it's not the stealth bomber, then you know, it's a UFO. And if it's a UFO, why wouldn't you want the people to know? Oh, they got all excited over that. You don't even want to say those words. He said this is the first time they ever had 30 minutes of radar data on a UFO. And they are all itching to get their hands onto the data and to find out what it is and what really goes on. He says if they come out and told the American public that they ran into a UFO out there, it would cause panic across the country. So therefore, you can't talk about it. And they are going to take all this data. So I said, okay, take all the data if that's what you want.

SG: Who took that data?

JC: Well, that group. I don't know who it went to, but that group took it. But they took only what we had there. They didn't ask me if there was anything else that I had. They said, they are taking all this data. And I said, fine. Now, I had the original video that I took and I had the pilot's report that came through, the first report. And I had the FAA's first report that was all downstairs on my table. They didn't ask for that so I didn't give it to them. And later on when I retired, that was the stuff that was in my office and all that came with me. And we've been sitting on it ever since.

[We have obtained all of these materials, including the radar video, ATC voice transcripts, the FAA report, and the computer printouts of the event. SG]

At the end, the Japanese 747 is leaving the airspace, and there's a United Airlines flight coming up to land in Alaska. The Controller says to the United, we've got a Japanese 747 up here and he's being chased, followed, by a UFO and we'd like you to check him out. Can we leave you at that altitude? And the United says, fine, or sure. And so they give him a left turn, 20 degrees or so, keep him at his altitude and they kind of run him in toward the Japanese 747.

Once the two airplanes pass, that target [UFO] follows the United down through the airspace until he gets on final approach and then the UFO just disappears.

Well when they read the reports that came through the FAA decided it had to protect themselves ~ you can't say you saw a target, even though this is what he said. So they made him change his report to say 'position symbols', which makes it sound like it wasn't really a target. Well if it's not a target then a lot of the other position symbols that we are separating [on radar] aren't targets either. And when I read that, I thought oh, there is something fishy here, that somebody is worried about something or other and they are trying to cover up.

When the CIA told us that this never happened and we never had this meeting, I believe it was because they didn't want the public to know that this was going on. Normally we would put out some type of a news release that such and such happened.

And I think it was mysterious that the military tapes disappeared. It wasn't right. We went from 30 days to 15 days [for the time period required to keep radar tapes]. And the first indication makes it look like it, the military, knew more than we did about who the visitors were and they didn't want anybody else to know. And of course the people that are involved at the lower levels don't really know what is going on above them. When someone calls up and says put those tapes back in service, they just put them back in service. They really don't care.

When they asked me what I thought I told them that it looked like we had a UFO that was up there. The reason it wasn't [consistently] on the FAA's tapes was because it was too large of an aircraft, and it was picked up as weather, so we wouldn't record it. [The system is programmed to filter out such things]. The pilot, the Japanese pilot did see it. The Japanese pilot drew pictures of it. Eventually they gave the Japanese pilot a hard time because of what he said. He was embarrassing his country.

[The tragedy of this JAL 747 pilot is a poignant reminder of the power of ridicule in keeping this subject secret. The pilot was forced to take a desk job for a prolonged period and was humiliated. See the testimony of former NASA research scientist Dr. Richard Haines regarding his knowledge of the event and how he helped get the pilot flying again. SG]

Our military controllers said they had seen it. Our FAA controllers said they had seen it. Our FAA controllers, after a period of time, came back and said they really didn't see a target, that they saw something else, which makes it sound like somebody is helping them fill out their reports. And that looked suspicious.

But who do you tell that you were involved in a UFO incident without them looking at you like you ain't wrapped too tight? And this I think is the way our country is set up now. The only ones that see a UFO in the TV programs are the rednecks out in the country that are going coon hunting or alligator hunting at night. You don't find anybody with any kind of smarts or some professional individual saying hey, last night let me tell you what I saw. They don't display that in the United States. So if you talk about seeing a UFO, you are putting yourself in a funny kind of category. That's probably one of the reasons why you don't hear about it anymore. But as far as I'm concerned, I saw a UFO chase a Japanese 747 across the sky for over half an hour on radar. And it's faster than anything that I know of in our Government.

Well, I've been involved in a lot of cover-ups with the FAA. When we gave the presentation to the Reagan staff I was behind the group that was there. And when they were speaking to the people in the room, they had all those people swear that this never happened. But they never had me swear it never happened. And it always bothered me that we have these things going on and when you see something or you hear something on the radio or TV, the news, that it's put down as it's not there. I have a hard time saying nothing.

It still bothers me that I've seen all this, I know all this, and I'm walking around with the answer, and nobody wants to ask the question to get the answer. And it kind of irritates me a little bit. And I don't believe our Government should be set up that way. I think when we have something like this, that you can probably find out more about what's going on in the world [by not covering it up]. If they [the UFO's] can travel that far, that distance with that type of machinery, who knows what they could do here for the health of the nation, the people, the food they could give them, the cancers we could cure. They have to know more than us to be able to travel at that speed.

For those people that say that if these UFO's existed, they would some day be on radar and that there'd be professionals who would see it, then I can tell them that back in 1986 there were enough professional people that saw it. It was brought down to headquarters, FAA headquarters, Washington D.C. The Administrator saw the tape of it. The people that we were debriefing, they've all seen. Reagan's Scientific Study team, three of those professors, doctors, they've seen it. As far as I was concerned they were the ones that verified my own thoughts about it. They were very, very excited about the data. They had said that this was the only time a UFO was ever recorded on radar for any length of time where it is 30 some minutes. And they have all this data to look at.

Now a 30-minute radar return filled up boxes across the room, and the boxes were stacked, you know, two or three high. There was a lot of paper there to look at. They knew the frequency now of the radar. They knew how fast it turned. They knew where it was. They had the military that confirmed it.

And yet I think the way the Government wants the outside people to view those that have seen something like this is like they are kooks, like they're not wrapped too tight. And you've got to watch out for them. That's the image that they put out. I guess I really don't care about the image...

SG: Do you recall the names of the CIA people and others at this meeting at FAA Headquarters?

JC: When I gave him my card the CIA guy said, 'you know, we are with the company (they don't say CIA). In the company, we don't have cards. We don't have company cards.' They may have a card, but it's nothing to do with the company. And he said that there's nothing we can give out. On the Admiral's calendar, they should have who reserved the room and who was there for the day of the briefing.

What I can tell you is what I've seen with my own eyes. I've got a videotape. I've got the voice tape. I've got the reports that were filed that will confirm what I've been telling you. And I'm one of those, what you would call the high Government officials in the FAA. I was a Division Chief. I was only three or four down from the Admiral. We investigated all the airline incidents, all the accidents.

[Indeed those who would say that these objects are not real because there is no proof of them recorded on radar and being analyzed by competent professionals, can now stand corrected. Presented here is a very senior FAA official stating on the record that the event happened and that the CIA and other Government officials ordered the event be kept secret and who confiscated (or so they thought) the evidence. We are profoundly grateful for the courage shown by Mr. Callahan in coming forward and in preserving and conveying the evidence of this case. SG]

The attached chronology summarizes the communications and actions of Japan Airlines Flight 1628 on November 18, 1986.

Radar data recorded by Anchorage Center does not confirm the presence of the traffic reported by Flight 1628. No further information has been received from civil or military sources since the date of the sightings.

Major Johnson of the Elmendorf Regional Operations Command Center (ROCC) is checking their records and the operations personnel for further details. He will forward any additional information to Anchorage Center as soon as possible.

Should you have any questions or need additional information, contact Tony Wylie, Quality Assurance Specialist, 269-1162.

DRAFT

The following is a chronological summary of the alleged aircraft sightings by Japan Airlines Flight 1628, on November 18, 1986:

All times listed are approximate UTC unless otherwise specified.

- 0219 - The pilot of JL1628 requested traffic information from the ZAN Sector 15 controller. When the controller advised there was no traffic in the vicinity, JL1628 responded that they had same direction traffic, approximately 1 mile in front, and it appeared to be at their altitude. When queried about any identifiable markings, the pilot responded that they could only see white and yellow strobes.
- 0225 - JL1628 informed ZAN that the traffic was now visible on their radar, in their 11 o'clock position at 8 miles.
- 0226 - ZAN contacted the Military Regional Operations Control Center, (ROCC), and tasked if they were receiving any radar returns near the position of JL1628. The ROCC advised that they were receiving a primary radar return in JL1628's 10 o'clock position at 8 miles.
- 0227 - The ROCC contacted ZAN to advise they were no longer receiving any radar returns in the vicinity of JL1628.
- 0231 - JL1628 advised that the "plane" was "quite big", at which time the ZAN controller approved any course deviations needed to avoid the traffic.
- 0232 - JL1628 requested and received a descent from FL350 to FL310. When asked if the traffic was descending also, the pilot stated it was descending "in formation".
- 0235 - JL1628 requested and received a heading change to two one zero. The aircraft was now in the vicinity of Fairbanks and ZAN contacted Fairbanks Approach Control asking if they had any radar returns near JL1628's position. The Fairbanks Controller advised they did not.
- 0236 - JL1628 was issued a 360 degree turn and asked to inform ZAN if the traffic stayed with them.
- 0238 - The ROCC called ZAN advising they had confirmed a "flight of two" in JL1628's position. They advised they had some "other equipment watching this", and one was a primary target only.
- 0239 - JL1628 told ZAN they no longer had the traffic in sight.
- 0242 - The ROCC advised it looked as though the traffic had dropped back and to the right of JL1628, however, they were no longer tracking it.
- 244 - JL1628 advised the traffic was now at 9 o'clock
- 245 - ZAN issued a 10 degree turn to a northbound United Airlines flight, after pilot concurrence, in an attempt to confirm the traffic.
- 0248 - JL1628 told ZAN the traffic was now at 7 o'clock, 8 miles.

0250 - The northbound United Flight advised they had the Japan Airlines flight in sight, against a light background, and could not see any other traffic.

0253 - JL1628 advised they no longer had contact with the traffic.

A subsequent review of ANC ARTOC's radar tracking data failed to confirm any targets in close proximity to JL1628.

The following is a report concerning the incident to aircraft JL1628 on November 18, 1986 at 0230 OTC.

My name is Carl E. Henley (HC) I am employed as an Air Traffic Control Specialist by the Federal Aviation Administration at the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center, Anchorage, Alaska.

During the period of 2030 UTC, November 17, 1986, to 0430 UTC, November 18, 1986 I was on duty in the Anchorage ARTCC. I was working the D15 position from 0156 UTC, November 18, 1986 to 0230 UTC, November 18, 1986.

At "approximately 0225Z while monitoring JL1628 on Sector 15 radar, the aircraft requested traffic information. I advised no traffic in his vicinity. The aircraft advised he had traffic 12 o'clock same altitude. I asked JL1628 if he would like higher/lower altitude and the pilot replied, negative. I checked with ROCC to see if they had military traffic in the area and to see if they had primary targets in the area. ROCC did have primary target in the same position JL1628 reported. Several times I had single primary returns where JL1628 reported traffic. JL1628 later requested a turn to heading 210°, I approved JL1628 to make deviations as necessary for traffic. The traffic stayed with JL1628 through turns and decent in the vicinity of FAI I requested JL1628 to make a right 360° turn to see if he could identify the aircraft, he lost contact momentarily, at which time I observed a primary target in the 6 o'clock position 5 miles. I then vectored UA69 northbound to FAI from ANC with his approval to see if he could identify the aircraft, he had contact with the JL1628 flight but reported no other traffic, by this time JL1628 had lost contact with the traffic. Also a military C-130 southbound to EDF from EIL advised he had plenty of fuel and would take a look, I vectored him toward the flight and climbed him to FL240, he also had no contact.

Note: I requested JL1628 to identify the type or markings of the aircraft. He could not identify but reported white and yellow strobes. I requested the JL1628 to say flight conditions, he reported clear and no clouds.

The following is a report concerning the incident involving aircraft JL1628 north of Fairbanks, Alaska on November 18, 1986 at 0218 UTC.

My name is Samuel J. Rich (SR). I am employed as an Air Traffic Control Specialist by the Federal Aviation Administration at the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center, Anchorage, Alaska.

During the period of 0035 UTC, November 18, 1986, to 0835 UTC, November 18, 1986, I was on duty in the Anchorage ARTCC. I was working the D15 position from 0230 UTC, November 18, 1986, to 0530 UTC, November 18, 1986.

I returned from my break at approximately 0218 UTC to relieve Mr. Henley on the sector R/D15 position. In the process of relieving Mr. Henley I heard the pilot of JL1628 ask if we had any traffic near his position. I continued to monitor the position as Mr. Henley was too busy to give me a relief briefing. I monitored the situation for approximately twelve minutes at which time I assumed the D15 position and Mr. Henley moved to the R15 position. During the twelve minute period I heard the JL1628 pilot report the color of the lights were white and yellow. After the radar scale was reduced to approximately twenty miles I observed a radar return in the position the pilot had reported traffic.

After assuming the D15 position I called the ROCC at approximately 0230 UTC to ask if they had any military traffic operating near JL1628. The ROCC said they had no military traffic in the area. I then asked them if they could see any traffic near JL1628. ROCC advised that they had traffic near JL1628 in the same position we did.

I asked ROCC if they had any aircraft to scramble on JL1628, they said they would call back. I received no further communication regarding the request for a scramble.

The following is a report concerning the incident to Japan Airlines Flight 1628 (JL1628) North of Fairbanks, Alaska on November 18, 1986 at 0218 UTC.

My name is John L. Aarnink (AA). I am employed as an Air Traffic Control Specialist by the Federal Aviation Administration at the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center (ARTCC), Anchorage, Alaska. During the period of 2230 UTC, November 17, 1986 to 0630 November 18, 1986 I was on duty in the Anchorage ARTCC. I was working the C15 position from approximately 0218 UTC, November 18, 1986 to 0250 UTC, November 18, 1986.

I was on my way to take a break when I noticed the unusual activity at the Sector 15 positions. I plugged into the C15 position and assisted them by answering telephone lines, making and taking handoffs and coordinating as necessary. As to the specific incident, I monitored the aircrafts transmissions and observed data on the radar that coincided with information that the pilot of JL1628 reported. I coordinated with the ROCC on the BRAVO and CHARLIE lines. They confirmed they also saw data in the same location. At approximately abeam CAWIN intersection, I no longer saw the data and the pilot advised he no longer saw the traffic. I called the ROCC and they advised they had lost the target. I then unplugged from the position and went on a break.

Testimony of Sgt. Chuck Sorrells, US Air Force (ret.)

December 2000

Chuck Sorrells is a career Air Force military man who was at Edwards Air Force Base in 1965 when not one, but at least seven UFOs appeared over Edwards Air Force Base airspace, moving in extraordinary fashion at enormous speeds, making right-hand turns and other maneuvers which no known aircraft was capable of at the time. They appeared on multiple radars, were seen visually by several people, and a special UFO officer scrambled and authorized a jet to intercept these objects. This event lasted for five or six hours. An edited transcript of the audio tape of the event follows his testimony.

CS: Sgt. Chuck Sorrells

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

CS: My name is Chuck Sorrells. I went into the Air Force in 1954 and retired in 1974. I was a Tech Sergeant. Most of the time I was an Air Traffic Controller. I've been at Edwards Air Force Base in California, and in Japan, Thailand, Alaska, and several places in the states.

This event happened October the 7th of 1965 at Edwards Air Force Base. It was on a midnight shift and I was the Air Traffic Controller on duty in the tower. At about 1:30 or so in the morning, I noticed this real bright light to the east of my tower. It was a light green and it had a red light underneath it. The red light was a pulsating type light, and it had a white light on top that just glowed. It was very bright and quite large. I observed it for quite a while, because there wasn't any aircraft in the area at the time. I called the dispatcher down at the base operations and the weatherman that was on duty that night (the forecaster), and got them all to go outside and take a look. I had one of the guys from the interceptor detachment that was on the base look also, and I had the captain down there look. We talked about it for a while, and the RAP-CON people (that's radar people on the base) didn't have any aircraft in the area at the time.

We called it down to the Air Defense people at Los Angeles defense sector. The director down there called around to his sites, and at one point in time they had at least four different radar sites that were getting radar returns on it. [The UFOs] were getting seen at a couple of other towers, like George Tower, and there were a couple of other places that were seeing them. So, there were several people on the ground looking at these UFOs, and about four radar sites [looking at them]. This [went] back and forth and back and forth for two or three hours. They finally decided to scramble an aircraft on it, to go up and take a look at it. This was coordinated with the other, higher headquarters, and I think NORAD was involved.

[See the testimony of military air traffic controller Michael Smith regarding NORAD being involved in this unambiguous UFO case, their denials notwithstanding. SG]

The jet [went] up to take a look at it, and they tried to run him in to intercept these targets. At the very beginning, I had one—the big, large light. Some time later, it was just sitting there, mostly stationary, but it was too close to the horizon to be a star or anything like that. It was down below the mountains [and] the hills and stuff, so it wasn't a star, [and] I couldn't correlate for what it could possibly be. Then, all of a sudden, there [were] three more objects, and they had similar characteristics as far as the lighting [was] concerned. But these three stayed together. They stayed in a formation and stayed together, and then moved down to the south of me and sat there, stationary, for a while. A little later on, three more appear [ed], but these three [were] individual ones. They would fly individually around and go north, south, east, west—a lot of maneuvers. At this point I had seven of them at one time. This is when they decided to scramble the jet interceptor. It was getting way up in the early morning hours by that time.

They were having no luck intercepting these UFOs. They kept asking me, in the tower, where was this object in relation to the airplane? The only thing I could do was line him up with my runway, where I knew what heading he was on in relation to where I was. Then, as soon as he'd get to the end of the runway, I'd tell him to turn to a certain heading and head straight forward. Well, about three different times that night, he'd say "contact", and that "contact" means he had contact with something on his radar in the cockpit of the aircraft. What it was, we don't know to this day. But they were real.

At one point in time the interceptor was up to 40,000 feet. When he went near the object, the object just rose real fast, real sudden, straight up, and he just went under it. There's a place on the tape where the Director says, "How's he looking, tower?" And I said, he's low. He [replied], "Well, he's at 40,000 feet", and I said, I don't care—he's still low.

[The tape he refers to is an audiotape of the actual conversations of this hours-long encounter. We have this tape. Refer to the transcript of this tape below. SG]

That UFO just went way high. They searched on their radar, the height finders, and everything for it. I highly suspect it was above their radars at that point.

SG: How high would that be?

CS: Probably 100,000 feet or something like that. 80,000 to 100,000 feet was probably their capability back in those days.

The interceptor did have contact about three different times, and then he'd lose it. These objects played around there for the remainder of my shift. About daylight, the UFOs started getting higher and higher and higher in the atmosphere. By the time it was light enough that you wouldn't see the rest of the stars, they were gone too—they just disappeared into the atmosphere.

I know craft of all types, so I know a lot of things this was not. I know it was not a helicopter. I know it was not an airplane. I know it was not a balloon—a weather balloon or any other type of balloon. I know it was no known aircraft or flying object that we know of today, or at that time. And it wasn't a laser show. It wasn't anything like that, but they could move real fast. They could be to the east of my field, and then in just a short period of time they could be to the west. They could probably go 30-40 miles in the time you could snap your fingers twice. I mean, just fast! And they could rise—just go straight up. It seemed like they could do that instantaneously. At some points they would hover and just sit for a long period of time—then they would move. The smaller three individual ones had a lot more movement than the other ones. The original very large UFO didn't move all that much. After a couple of hours, though, it moved a little bit from the east, down a little bit toward the south, and then moved back toward the east a little bit again—like that. But it didn't make any sudden, fast movements until they tried to run an intercept on it, and then it went straight up.

The three that were flying around individually would dart north, south, east, [and] west, and they were the ones that really went fast. They were the ones that were actually nearer to the base and nearer to the ground. I judged that their altitude would be around 2,000 feet or less at times. I know that we were getting radar cuts on them. I'd find a cut anywhere from 4,000 to 10,000 [or] 11,000 feet. So, that's pretty low to the surface.

These UFOs had to be something that would return a radar signal, and that had to be something solid and metal. Radar is a very simple thing: its a radio beam that hits something, bounces off something, and comes back. So, it had to be something the radar would bounce off, and it wouldn't bounce off a rubber balloon or anything like that. It would have to be something with a metallic nature that would cause it to bounce back and make an indication on your radar screen.

SG: Can you estimate the speed of these objects?

CS: It would have to be in the thousands of miles per hour—up in that area, speed wise. These things would have to be very, very fast. The radar people were having a hard time determining [their] speed because they'd be in one place and they'd sit for a little while, and then they'd move real fast. By the time the radar screen got around to finding them, the UFO was already at another location. It was very difficult to get any kind of a speed on them. You could be watching one in the east, and if you looked around for a little bit, if your attention was diverted someplace else for just a minute, you'd look back and he'd be over in the west. They could make quick turns and had all sorts of maneuverability that we didn't know anything about at the time. It was a very strange evening.

These events happened over at least a four-hour timeframe. In those days, every base had what they called a UFO officer—an unidentified flying object officer. We had one, and he was the guy that actually gave the order to take a look at this thing. The Air Defense Director for the Los Angeles defense sector and the radar controllers wanted to take a look at it, but they had to get his say-so before they could go ahead and do it legally.

At that point in time at Edwards Air Force Base, we had a rocket site. They were experimenting with a whole lot of different fuel combinations, and they were doing a lot of rocket burns over there just to see what thrust they could get. From my standpoint, that looked like the area where this huge UFO was just sitting—just about over that rocket site.

The F-106 that they did scramble that night was what they call a cold bird. It wasn't armed in any way.

SG: During your Air Force career, did you hear of other people having these types of encounters with UFOs?

CS: Yes, there were. I've heard guys talk about seeing things like that, but they wouldn't necessarily come forward and say what they had seen, because they didn't want the stigma attached to them that they were crazy or they were seeing things. Or they didn't want the ribbing that they were going to get from their buddies.

The tape that is in existence now of the event that night is made up of radio patches and telephone patches that were recorded at the various radar sites that were involved. There would be another tape as well, someplace, from the tower that I was in, because everything that was going on in the tower [was] recorded.

The [largest number of] objects that I saw at any one time was seven. There was one large one, and then there [were] three smaller ones with the same type characteristics, but these three kind of stayed together. At a certain point after this, there were three other ones that were flying around individually, but at one point, I had as many as seven, visually, at one time. From hearing the tapes now, I hear that there might have been as many as 11 in the area that night.

I can't tell you what [they were], but I can tell you a lot of things [they weren't]. [There isn't] anything that we know of today that has those types of characteristics—could do the maneuvers and do the speed, with no sound. At some points, they were close enough to the tower that if it had been a jet or something, I would have heard the sound from it. I wish I knew what they were...

[This extremely important case involves a seasoned Air Force Air Traffic Controller, an official "UFO officer", 4 separate radar stations, lock-on from on-board radar on a jet interceptor, many hours, and many objects over several hours. The debunkers and those who would ridicule the UFO matter need to be able to explain away all of these elements—and the voice tape of the actual event. The only conclusion is the obvious one: these UFOs were real and were not swamp gas, ball lightning, hallucinations, or any of the other absurd explanations offered by academia and officialdom for these events. SG]

P = Voices of various Pilots                      A = Voices of various Air Traffic Controllers
O = Voices of various Officers                    H = Height coverage officer
SP = San Pedro station                            FS = Flight Supervisor

A: Do you get anything between Victorville and Edwards?
P: Here's one out here.
A: Does it appear now that they are moving away and moving out?
P: [too faint to copy]
A: They're going, huh?
P: I already.. .officer.. .I don't think got here in time to see'em. They're going up.
A: Humm. Does it look like they are moving away and moving out?
P: Yes, it sure does. They're goin'. The ones to the south, they're going straight up. All of them are.
A: Humm. About how many were there?
P: At one time I had seven.
A: Uh huh.
P: At the present time I have 1-2-3-4-5 rising too.
A: Are those five also rising?
P: All five of 'em are rising.

P: Well Sir, they are all rising now.
O: (Clark) is that right?
P: Yes sir: They're all going up now.
O: (Clark) Okay, you've got one bright star just about south of us. Where from that? You know, that bright one - I think it's about a 45-degree angle up.

P: All of them from here now, that the red light has stopped and they all appear to be heading_____

O: Is that right?
A: I'm gonna watch that bright one again.
O: Okay
[Voices in background are relating what pilot says through a radio or phone, talking to other parties.]

P: There's 3-4 of them, well south and dim.

P: I still see a red light occasionally out of one of them.

O: Where are they from that big bright one?

P: Beneath them and just a little bit south. And there's three of 'em almost in a straight line.

O: Uh huh.

P: Almost horizontal.

O: I see.

P: And I still see a red light occasionally from those, but not from the big one.

P: This space - this space officer that has been observing this here with me all night. Here, let me get him back on and see if he is getting the same impressions of it I'm getting. I don't like to be the only one seeing these type things.

A: Roger [laughs]

O: The man says the tower boy there is froze. He has had somebody confirm his story. He said they are all pulling up at a very rapid rate right now.

A: Well, we'll wait and go. All we need is their request.

O: Alright sir.

A: We've lost radar contact with them.

O: is on the other phone. I might get a consultation to see if he's seeing the same thing I'm... it appears to me that they are all rising in altitude rapidly. It would appear to be. Yep. How about the bright one? Does it appear to be straight up? How about straight - that's much higher now than when we first saw it. Yeah.

O: It's [unknown name] again. Base Ops confirms my - what I'm seeing. They are all rising and the weather man in Base Ops has been observing these things all night with me and he has been using reference points to try to judge if they're moving.

O: Right.

O: And he confirms that they are very much higher now that's what they were. They are, they are definitely going up.

O: Do you have any estimate on the altitude now?

O: I'd hate to venture a guess. I would say something like, maybe 30,000 - 40,000, but now this is strictly way out ... off the eyeball guess.

O: Not on my low altitude?

O: No sir, I wouldn't say. Not nearly what they were. At first sighting on that one, I would have judged it's altitude to be no more than, at the most 5,000 feet.

O: Well, we had some measured altitude but, said UFO officer was gonna want us to take a look. We were waiting to go. But I haven't heard anything yet from him.

- O: I didn't think he's made it to Base Ops yet.
- O: Well, I wanted this captain down here at _____ to see it before we went or something. I can't make out any red lights anymore... [two voices talking at once]. One is still definitely flickering. Well, they're all still flickering but they are so far away now I can't make out the red light. It was like there was just a small red light on the bottom of it like an obstruction light of some type.
- A: You know, we have a lot of traffic. Well, not a lot of traffic, but we have some traffic moving in that area now. I was wondering maybe if they might have gotten up out of the way or something. This whole thing is nice, isn't it?
- A: Yeah, it was [slurred].
- O: This is Captain Clark back on again.
- O: Yes Captain Clark! What did you find out out there?
- CC: On that bright star now, lets see if I have the right one, coming down and to the right slightly you find three that are kind of a "V".
- O: That's the ones you're looking at?
- A: Yes sir.
- CC: And then I see one on the bottom bar of that V, the V kind of aims up to the right.
- A: The three to the south... they seem to be... one of them will blink and then it will be the other one and then another one.
- A: Well, now. I have observed it now for an hour and 50 minutes.
- O: Yeah.
- A: Almost two hours now and in that time it has gained altitude twice and moved what would appear to be five or six miles to the west.
- O: Uh-huh.
- O: [another] Does anybody have the winds over there?
- A: Yes sir. I have it here in the tower. It's presently calm. No more than 2 knots and they are easterly winds. And these things are moving westerly.
- O: Oh, hold it. I've got a report here from Lans. My airman says he's got one moving there. He's taking my binoculars up now to take a look.
- O: Okay, sir. Here's height coverage from the site. Okay, _____ Major Strubble break through. The rest of you people on the line, if you want to hear the Major speak.
- A: The height people are on now.
- H: Okay. The target has moved 3 miles to Zero Nine One. It's moved from

Zero Three Zero degrees at 80 miles to Zero Six Zero at 30, at uh 50
_____ on the site.

O: Which site?

H: From San Pedro

O: Alpha Zero has a contact. He says about 15 right or 20.

A: Two Two Zero?

O: Right.

O: Alpha, do we got any flights down there anywhere now?

A: No sir, we don't. We're gonna let them fly.

SP: 345. Range about 80.

H: Okay. That's Interceptor.

A: They're gonna swing him Zero Nine Zero again shortly here. Right over the tower. Okay, turn it starboard Zero Nine Zero.

H: Pedro?

SP: Man, are you getting any data off these objects now?

H: Pedro, hi.

SP: This is Pedro. How are ya doing?

H: Right. Kind your Number One into manual and follow the Interceptor and I'll tell you when to chase ahead of it.

A: Alright, I have Alpha Lima in sight now.

A: Yeah, he says he's got contact. 12 o'clock, 16.

A: That's it.

H: Okay Pedro. Turn your height finder 7 degrees ahead of him. Turn your height finder 7 degrees ahead of that height - ahead of that Interceptor.

O: That should be a contact.

H: Hey, tower?

A: Yes?

H: How's he looking now? Is he headed toward anything?

A: Pretty good. He looks good.

H: Are the blips merging... I mean, uh...

A: Yes, he's converging on him.

H: Okay, keep going... keep going ahead. Go as far as 25 to 15 degrees ahead of the target.

O: Hey Tower _____

H: Tower, how's things look now?

A: He's low! Search high- search high. Search very high, the thing is rising. It's rising rapidly.

A: It looks almost directly above him and rising.

H: Okay. Pedro, come back. Come back to the 'ceptor

A: But I have the object in sight. It's much higher than it was, though.

H: Okay. Alpha Lima's gonna climb to 40,000.

A: Okay

H: Okay, Pedro. Turn your height finder to Zero Three Zero degrees.

A: Have Alpha Lima show a landing light.

O: Mark that spot, Sherm. We lost the possible contact on search radar again.

A: What altitude?

H: Okay. Zero One, now should be Zero Six Zero for 20.

H: I've got a possible contact on search radar bearing from your station Zero Seven Five for 10.

SP: Zero Seven Five at 10?

H: Roger. Anything out there?

SP: I have one at Zero Seven Five, could _____

H: Rog.

SP: And high. He's in our blanked out area now.

H: Which height finder?

[several speaking at once]

O: Lans, this is Tower.

H. Rog.

O: This is Captain Clark. Do you have any height on these things over here to the east of Edwards?

H: Negative. Unable to get them on height finder. We're trying to mark them now with the Interceptor passes under them.

CC: Right.

H: Or in the vicinity of them. And we are unable to get them on the height finder at the present time. If you give me an approximate time that he does pass under this, I got the surveillance man at the site standing by to mark this position. I'll have both height finders search that area.

H: Luminous object 12 o'clock?

A: Should be 12 o'clock.

?: [calls out] Luminous object 12 o'clock.

A: Have him turn port another 10 degrees. Port Zero Six Zero.

H: Zero Six Zero now.

A: He'll be passing to the right of it.

H: Have you got anything else in sight?

A: No sir, just those two that we tried on there. And he appeared from the Tower to pass way beneath it.

H: Edwards?

A: Yes sir?

H: Is there one about southeast of you, about 3 miles at this time.

A: He's at 3?

H: Right. Yes, southeast much closer. We've got a possible contact there on something.

A: Just a moment, I see something, let me throw my glasses on it.

H: One Two Zero.

A: Let me throw my glasses on it.

[background]

H: Pedro, what's the ground speed on that target you got?

SP: That I just gave you?

H: Right.

SP: I don't know. I scanned him twice and now he's gone.

H: Painted him twice and he's gone. That's what I was afraid of. Hey, Tower? Hey, Tower? Hmmm. Sir I hate to be an optimist but that fighter looks like he's going some place.

H: I've got a possible contact on search there.

A: He's about 16,000 feet?

H: 16,000?

A: Right. Sir? W.D.? Yo!

H: Roger. Right. That target at Edward there is 16,000.

O: You've got him on target at 16,000?

H: Right.

O: That's One Six thousand?

H: Right 16,000. Pedro? Keep your height finder locked on it. And search. Keep any eye on it.

SP: Is that a uniform One Zero Six?

H: Negative. This is an uninitiated tract. It's uh... _____ at Edwards.

SP: Roger. I see. We'll initiate it.

H: Keep an eye on it. Last time we did, it split. Remember?

O: You still got prism search?

H: Tower, come back on the air. Sir. Yes. That target has disappeared off of radar.

H: He's coming in head on at it.
O: Roger. Were you able to establish a track out of that?
H: Negative. Edwards was able to establish a track... Have you still got it on height finder? Hey Tower?
A: Yes, sir.
H: Zero One bearing One Two Zero for 10 coming now.
A: One Two Zero at 10. What altitude?
H: He's descending to One Five.
A: I don't have it.
H: Okay. Zero One's got a visual - a flashing target below his present position.
A: He's got one?
H: Yes he does.
A: All right. Zero Zero Eight. He's in the right place.

H: Let's see, he's orbiting now. Looks like he's turning starboard directly over ya.
A: Does he have a _____?
H: Hey, Edwards?
A: Yes?
H: Do you have Zero One now?
A: Yes, I have him tracked.
H: Is he still in the vicinity of the target?
A: I can't definitely say that that is a target. We saw it. We have what he's looking at but it doesn't appear to be ah, flashing from the Tower. I think we have what he's looking at. We do have something out there. I can't say what it is. [loud background noise continues]
A: But that's not a target, huh?
A: It doesn't look like the other ones did. It looks further away. It looks like he's coming back over the field now. He's heading out west of me now, right?
H: Say again.
A: He's out west of me now, right?
H: Roger.
O: Did the Interceptor make any contact with that target Zero One Zero?
H: He ran right over it... I don't think - I don't know if he made contact visual on it or not.
A: ... it's stationary...
H: Is he stationary?
A: Rog. 16,000?

H: You still got that bat on the radar?
SP: I still have him on search...

?: Search One Zero Nine and see what you get.

H: You had him at 16,000 though, right?

SP: Right. He's stationary, he hasn't moved but about one degree. He's still the same.

H: Okay. Put that height finder on automatic and I want to send a request to it.

SP: Will do.

A: We've got radar contact out here at your One Three Zero position for 12.

O: Are you running an ETM on it now?

H: Affirmative

O: I don't have a contact on it now _____. Okay, does Zero One have a visual contact on these things?

A: Yes.

O: Okay, we'll cover off Lima Zero One then.

A: I don't have another one in sight.

H: You lost them all, huh? Zero One said he saw some reflections off the ground that appear to be flashing.

A: Reflections off the ground that appear to be flashing?

H: Right, off the lakebed.

A: Huh. I don't know what that could be - my beacon?

H: No, he knows the beacon. Okay sir, might as well key off and break this line down then.

FS: I'll be doggone.

H: He went through it 15, 25, and 40,000 feet on these visual objects and uh, supposedly flew right under it according to ground observations, visual observations, and I recorded nothing flying underneath it.

FS: Okay, well thanks very much. It was kind of interesting anyway.

H: Yeah, it is. We're as curious as you are.

FS: Yeah.

H: Guess we'll never know.

FS: Yeah. I guess not. Okay, well thanks for calling.

Testimony of Mr. Michael W. Smith - US Air Force

November 2000

Michael Smith was an Air Traffic Controller with the Air Force in Oregon and, subsequently, in Michigan. At both of these facilities he and others witnessed UFOs tracked on radar and moving at extraordinary speeds. He also confirms that personnel were expected to maintain secrecy concerning these observations, and that NORAD, the North American Air Defense Command, was fully apprised of these events. In fact, in one event in Michigan, NORAD was fully engaged, and steered B-52s returning to base around these UFOs.

My name is Michael W. Smith. I was in the Air Force from 1969 to 1973 and was an Aircraft Control and Early Warning Operator, which was basically an Aircraft Control person. Our job was to track and give altitudes for military aircraft, and to detect and identify any incoming aircraft coming into our airspace.

In spring of 1970, while I was stationed in Klamath Falls, Oregon. I came up to the radar site on the evening shift, and where there [were] normally two or three people in the radar room, there [were] quite a few, from the cooks to maintenance—all kinds of people. I asked what was going on, and they said that they were watching a UFO on radar. I immediately was stunned and asked if the Pentagon [had been] notified or if we [had] called the President. They said no, they don't do that. And I said, well, we should call the news media or, you know, call somebody—this was earth-shaking news to me. And they said, "No, just calm down."

NORAD [North American Air Defense Command] knows about it. They had called NORAD. The senior NCO pulled me to the side and said that NORAD knows about it—that's the only people we notify. We don't talk about this. We don't tell anybody about this. The people that know, know. We just watch, see what happens, and that's it. That's our job. I insisted there has to be a report filed or something filed, you know? And he said that there is a report that you can file—it's about an inch thick, and the first two pages are about the sighting. The rest of it is basically a psychological profile of you, your family, your bloodlines, everything.

When the Air Force goes through it, they can discredit you completely by either saying that [you were] on drugs, or your mother was a communist, or anything to discredit you. You'd never get a promotion, and [you'd] spend the next three and one-half years up at the North Pole, living in a tent, checking the weather balloons. You know—no hope for promotion. So, the message was pretty loud and clear: you just shut-up and don't say anything to anybody.

This UFO was stationary, wasn't moving at all. Then it would slowly lower itself down until it got behind a mountain so that you lost radar contact. It would stay down for about 15 minutes, and the next thing you knew, it was right back up there at 80,000 [or] 90,000 feet. Then, [in] the next sweep of the radarscope, it would be 200 miles away, stationary—completely stopped. It would hover there for 5 [or] 10 minutes, and then slowly start descending until it dropped off radar. Then it would come back up. It did this three times, that I saw.

This happened one more time that I know of. I heard that it's not an infrequent occurrence out there. They have them quite often, but I've personally seen it twice.

There's no aircraft that can accelerate and decelerate that fast without having the pilot's face go through the windshield. I mean it is impossible to operate that way with gravity... So, it was obviously something we didn't have. We never scrambled interceptors on them, so it was obviously something the Russians never had. It was a UFO. That's the only explanation there was for it. NORAD knew about it and they just handled it like it's just a UFO—watch it and see what happens. Don't take any actions, don't tell anybody, don't write it down, and don't disclose it.

NORAD is in charge of all of the air space of the United States and North America. It's their job to identify any incoming aircraft, any threats—Russian planes or any aircraft at all. The first thing they do is check it with the flight plans of airlines or private carriers or whatever. Everything is identified, so when something like this just pops up on the scope with no flight plan and doing erratic behaviors, it's their job to identify it. They have a tie-in with all the radar stations in North America. It all goes to Cheyenne Mountain, CO [NORAD HQ]. They have a big screen and they can see any area of the country at any time.

Another experience I had happened on third shift. I was on the radar, and NORAD called me and informed me that there was a UFO coming up the California coast and it would be in my area pretty soon.

I said what do you want me to do? And they said, "Nothing, just watch it, don't write it down." We have a log book in which we are supposed to keep track of anything out of the ordinary. But they said, "Don't log it or anything, just watch it. We are just letting you know—heads up." NORAD was well aware, obviously, that these UFOs were around, and the action of the people when I first saw the UFO on radar was as if it happens quite often.

The first time you see a UFO on radar you realize the Government knows about this, so why aren't they telling the press?

But when I was pulled to the side, it was explained that, yes, there are UFOs. Yes, we know [about] them. Yes, NORAD knows about them. But that's it. This is a secret. You are not supposed to talk about it. Don't tell anybody about it. Don't make any reports. Don't write it down. Just shut-up and you'll get your next stripe, and you'll be promoted, and we'll go on from there.

Another encounter happened while I was stationed in Michigan. It was in 1972—I believe it was in the fall of 1972. I was working alone that night. By then

I was promoted to a Sergeant. I got a phone call from the switchboard operator, and he said he had the State Police on the phone and they wanted to talk to me. He was real frantic when he got on the phone, and said that there [were] three UFOs over the north tower of the Mackinac Bridge. Mackinac Bridge connects the upper peninsula and the lower peninsula of Michigan.

I immediately turned on the radar, but my immediate reply to the officer was [that] they are not on radar, and I hung up the phone. It's just something that's programmed into you—that's what you are supposed to say, "There's nothing on radar", even if you see something. But actually, the north tower seemed to be a little bit bigger, and then I realized that they were the UFOs. One took off, left the other two. circled Mackinac Island and came back to the other [two]. Then all three started going along Interstate 75, north from St. Ignace.

In the meantime, I got calls from the Sheriff's Department. They were frantic, saying, "We are chasing these UFOs up the highway." My response was, there's nothing on radar. Several people called—several civilians. I believe there was a newspaper person that called. In the meantime, I called NORAD and told them. They looked it up and they said, "Oh, they are going up 1-75?" I said yes, at about 70-80 miles an hour.

Now, about halfway between St. Ignace and [unintelligible], there is Kincheloe Air Force Base, which is a SAC base [closed in 1977]. They have B-52 bombers. They had two that were on final approach, and that crosses 1-75. Apparently, they diverted those two bombers because they didn't want—[whether] they have nuclear weapons or not—to take a chance on them meeting UFOs about the same altitude, crossing the highway. So they diverted the two B-52s.

As the UFOs came closer, I realized that they were coming this way—following the highway right by my radar site, which is up on top of a hill.

Then I saw a bright bluish glow go by silently, followed by the flashing red and blue lights of the police cars that were chasing them.

If I had said, oh, yes, I have them on radar, then the next thing I know, newspapers are going to be up there wanting to talk to me and I'd probably get court marshaled... It was just instinct, saying there's nothing on radar when there actually was. I was watching them come up the highway. They were so close together, they looked like one return. In other words, it looked like it was one aircraft and it was very low.

It doesn't matter if he's wearing a badge or not—you don't talk about it. In the log book, [I] wrote this down, and I told my Senior NCO the next day about it—but that's all you are supposed to do. Don't tell anybody else. Don't write it down, although I did write it down. But, I doubt you'll ever find that log book.

The government, they cover up. They don't want anybody talking about it. But this is such remarkable technology. These people come from who knows where. I would think you'd want everybody to know...

On a personal note, after the first event happened in Oregon, I came home on leave and told my Dad about it. He was red, white, and blue through and through—an old WWII hero and all that, and very patriotic. I was explaining to him about these UFOs that we routinely see out there, and he said, "No, the Government says that there are no UFOs." I'm saying, Dad, I've seen these on radar with my own eyes. And he says, come on, the Government would never lie to him. You know? But here's his son; I would never lie to him.

So, he just didn't know what to do. It wasn't until years later, until after Watergate, that he said, "Hey, sit down and tell me about this. The Government is lying to me about a little thing like Watergate, so obviously they are out lying about something big."

It's a Government cover-up that doesn't need to be here any more. There is no more Cold War. I believe the same thing Dr. Greer does, that the technology they have could enable us to stop burning our fossil fuels and stop the damage to the ozone, etc. These people have technologies—they must have something. And the Government knows about it. They have these aliens, they have these spacecraft, they have this technology, all this. There's a lot of back-engineered technology, that's pretty obvious. Who are they to cover this up when other Governments are coming forward, admitting, and showing their files—why isn't our Government?

While I was in the Air Force, there were a number of other people that had witnessed UFOs on radar, also. A number of pilots I've talked to had chased them or come close to them or flown in formation with them. For example, a friend of mine was in a tower and there was a flight of three interceptors coming in. And he said, "No, there's four of them." And the Captain is going, "No, there's three of us." And he said, "Well, look around." Sure enough, there was a UFO flying in formation with them.

When Dr. Greer brought us down to Washington, D.C. for the Congressional briefing [in April 1997], I was very nervous. I didn't know what to expect. However, there were about 12 other people there that really amazed me. My story is very tame compared to what they've experienced and what they've encountered. It was a real eye-opener, how deep this secrecy goes, how deep the cover-up is—everyone from astronauts to senators who know that there's something going on.

Testimony of Commander Graham Bethune, US Navy (retired)

November 2000

Cmdr. Graham Bethune is a retired Navy commander pilot with a top-secret clearance. He was a VIP Plane Commander who flew most of the high-ranking officers and civilians from Washington D.C. In his testimony he explains how he was flying a group of VIP's and other pilots into Argentina, Newfoundland when they all witnessed a 300 foot UFO that traveled 10,000 feet straight up in a fraction of a second toward their plane and was on radar. He has documented the event extensively. A selection of those documents follow this testimony.

GB: Cmdr. Graham Bethune

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

GB: My name is Graham Bethune. I am a commander, retired pilot from the Navy and I went through the regular Navy program of training pilots. I graduated in 1943 from Pensacola, the Academy Air. And of course all Navy pilots are trained navigators, which is very important when you are going to talk about what we're going to discuss here, because we had to know all of the star systems and we had to know these types of things. I navigated maybe 13 years around the planet with the stars. And when I first graduated from Pensacola in 1943 I went to the South Atlantic and we were hunting German submarines. This was all night flying. Everything we did was at night in patrol planes.

I was transferred to Air Transport Squadron One in 1950. I was sent to Keflavik, Iceland, along with two other officers after a meeting that they had in Washington, D.C, where Iceland was involved in seeing UFOs over Keflavik, Iceland, and they wanted troops up there to protect them.

During our meeting they were explaining to us why they had requested the troops and what they were seeing. And we asked them if they could really go into more detail about the type of craft that they were seeing. And their explanation was that they were seeing most of them at night ~ lighted craft, circular. And we knew coming from a naval air test center, we tested everything there, that we had nothing like that that we had tested.

So I asked them, well, what did our government tell you that they were? And they said, you're government said they were experimental, probably experimental Russian bombers (laughter).

The flight was normally about ten hours. But this particular night we had a 16-knot head wind. And about maybe 300 to 400 miles outside of Argentina, Newfoundland I saw something below the horizon, on the water, that looked like approaching a city at night. It was just kind of an ambient light, no definition whatsoever. But it looked like the same thing that you would see if you were approaching a large city at night. So I watched it for a while. It was about 1:00 am.

And then finally I called Kinden's attention to it, who was sitting in the right seat. He was route checking me. And he took a look at it and he didn't know what it was. We couldn't figure out ... there was nothing out there. We had passed over the guard ship already. In those days, they had a guard ship that was between Iceland and between Newfoundland. The guard ship had given us the latest weather. The weather was clear. There was no Northern Light activity, which they give as part of the weather report. And we had ship plots. There were no ships plotted in that area. So we asked control if he could give us another fix and find out if we were really on course. We thought maybe we had drifted, that we were seeing Labrador or maybe the tip of Greenland. So he said, no, we were right on course.

So we watched it for a while and we were drifting to the right of it. Our heading was 222 degrees, 225 degrees. We were at 10,000 feet, I would say it was 40 miles away originally. When we were about 25 or 30 miles away we could see defined lights and there was a pattern on the water. So, with that pattern we couldn't figure out what was going on. Maybe the Navy was doing something that was highly classified, recovering something down in the ocean or something of this nature, we thought. And it was a circular pattern. And it was very large.

So I sent the crew chief back to get the other plane commander, Al Jones, because they wanted to land at Argentia. There were 31 passengers and we had two VIP crews that had pilots also, and patrol plane pilots. And at the time that they came forward, the lights went out on the water. There was nothing on the water. This was about 15 miles away. I mean it was just dark.

Now standing behind me was the navigator, the radioman, and also the plane captain - the cockpit was full. All of a sudden we saw, on the water, a yellow halo that was very, very small, about 15 miles away. And it came up to 10,000 feet like that - a fraction of a second.

[Note the similarity of movement of this UFO with other accounts: It covered 15 miles in a second or so. SG]

And I thought that it was going to go right through us. So I disengaged the autopilot, pushed the nose over, because I was going to go under it at the angle that it was coming toward me.

So what happened, the minute that I did that, it was up at our altitude and I could see nothing outside of the cockpit but this craft. And so I didn't know which way to go. And then all of a sudden I heard a racket. I didn't know what it was. And I said, Fred, what the hell was that? He looked around and he said, everyone was ducking in the back of us and they collided and they are all lying on the deck back there, scrambling on the deck. So when I looked back it wasn't there. And he said, it's over here on the right hand side. Now it was about a mile or so away.

It kind of drifted forward, maybe to a position five miles away, and that's where it stayed with us for quite some time.

This is when we could first see it wasn't above our altitude. It was below our altitude. But it was still above the horizon where you could see the side of the craft. You could see the dome and you could see the color around the perimeter of the craft.

And then we knew that it was a friendly encounter. We knew that it knew that we were there. We knew that it came out to see us. But we didn't think at that time that the reason that it did this was because they wanted to show us what the Icelanders were talking about.

So we watched it for a while. And Al says, well, let him get in the seat. So I let him get in the seat and he disengaged the autopilot and was going to chase it. Now we had a head wind of about 60-knots, so our ground speed was only maybe 120, 130-knots. And so he wasn't going to go too far in chasing this thing. But he did turn to chase it.

So I decided that I would go back to see how the passengers reacted and also talk to the doctor who was back there. And so I went to him first, I said, Doc, did you see what we saw? And he said, yeah, he looked me straight in the eye and said, yeah, it was a flying saucer. He says, I didn't look at it because I don't believe in such things. Well, it took me a couple of seconds to realize what he was saying. He couldn't believe, being a psychiatrist, in that kind of thing. So I went back forward and I said, Al, whatever you do don't tell anybody we saw anything, they will lock us up as soon as we get on the ground. He says, it's too late. I just called Gander control, to see if they could track this by radar. So that's how the story got out.

So when we landed at Argentina, the Air Force was there and they interrogated us. And the captain that did the interrogation did a real good job. But you could tell this wasn't his first time that he had ever interrogated anybody as far as this type of encounter was concerned. He made a good report, which went to the headquarters of the Air Force in Washington, D.C.

Initially the color was yellow. Since then I've learned from the boys upstairs why we saw different colors as it was coming toward us. The colors were around the perimeter. And it turned from a yellow to an orange to almost a fiery red and then almost a purplish red. And they said that that had to do with the amount of energy being used or dissipated. It had to do with the power so to speak. And so when it slowed down, close to us, in a fraction of a second, it was back to the yellow range. And it was foggy around it to where it was like a plasma mist or something of this nature.

When we were asked about the crafts size 300 feet came to my mind. And when I got the report out of the Archives in 1991 I had never seen anybody else's report, everyone said it was anywhere from 250 to 350 feet in diameter. And when

I talked to the others they said it was just something that they knew and estimated. Now the velocity when it left us was estimated from between 1,000 miles an hour to 2,000 miles an hour. And when I looked at the report, Al Jones had estimated 1,800 miles an hour. Mine was 1,000. Another was 1,500 miles, but in that range. It turns out that the radar report, which I have never seen said it was 1,800 miles an hour

We had nothing that would go that fast. And of course I was at the naval air test center. This is where we had our test pilot training school. This is where we did all the highly classified tests of aircraft. And to my knowledge we had nothing anywhere near that speed or anything that was circular.

Now this craft went 15 miles in that short period of time (one second or so). Now you could calculate how fast it came toward us. And then just like put the brakes on in front of us. You take something 300 feet in diameter, and you don't see much out of your cockpit window.

I've been corresponding with a magnetic engineer for several years that's writing a book. He's already gotten pretty close to 100 pilot reports (of UFOs with magnetic effects on the aircraft). And I gave him, in detail, everything that happened.

When I went to set the automatic pilot back, the magnetic compass which was in the center of the panel was swinging back and forth. I said to Fred, I said, did you see that? He said, you should have seen it when the craft was close. He said it was spinning. And so then we looked at the other compasses. At that time the craft was sitting out maybe five miles from us. We had what we called Bird Dogs. They are low frequency radio components that will point to the station when you tune in the station. These two Bird Dogs were pointing toward the craft. We had two other compasses. We had a remote compass, which is out in the wing; it was reacting. There were a total of five different directional gyros in that airplane. And out of the five, three of them were acting up.

I was told that it was tracked by radar. He said, as far as he knew the radar report was sent in to the Air Force Headquarters in Washington, D.C. It usually goes from there to Wright Patterson AFB. But my boss found the report in the Archives in Wright Patterson in Project Blue Book after talking to Colonel Watson, and he confirmed the speed of 1,800 miles. I said where did you find that out? He said, well, it was a radar report and it said that. So something happened to the radar report before they microfilmed it. Because what I have on microfilm I got from the Archives (and the radar report is missing). I was told by a friend of mine at Wright Patterson AFB that I've known for years that they had allowed Steven Spielberg microfilm this, the Blue Book records or whatever for Close Encounters of the Third Kind. So he (Spielberg) had a pretty high clearance. He had to be associated with some of the ... well, you know who, as far as the control group is concerned.

The other plane commander I located many years ago but he was with this company and he wouldn't talk. After he retired, I got a hold of him again in 1996 and I flew out to where he lived and I said, what we will do is we'll just take a tape recorder and we'll just discuss it. So that's what happened. In the report that I wrote, his statement is in there, several pages of his statement. His schematic of what he saw is in there. And it was amazing how they matched.

[We have this full report with the other pilot's corroboration of events. SG]

The document that I found [See Government Documents] was the official document that the Air Force had put together. And it was originally filed under Project Grudge

[Refer to the testimony of AF Colonel Charles Brown who was part of Project Grudge. SGJ]

But on the front page it says Project Twinkle where they put a lot of reports that they had to get rid of somehow.

[Note that Colonel Brown confirms in his testimony that really sensitive cases were placed in another project outside of Grudge and beyond his access. SG]

There were 18 pages according to the Archives. But they only found 17 on a film. So the other could have been a radar report.

At that time, Admiral McCormick, who had relieved Eisenhower, was the NATO Commander, the Supreme Allied Commander. Now his aides had approached me. Everybody seemed to know about this event. Like Admiral Radford, who became the first Joint Chiefs of Staff, his aides knew about it because he had talked to me about it. So there were quite a few who knew about this. So this was how I learned a lot that really was not official and was really not in any books.

[Note that Colonel Corso and others relate that the very sensitive material was conveyed verbally, 'brain to brain.' SG]

Later in May, I had an Intelligence officer come to the house. And he showed me pictures. The first pictures that I had ever seen. There was nothing, absolutely nothing there that looked close to it. There was one that was 100 feet in diameter. It didn't look like it was damaged too much.

[He implies here that these were photos of retrieved or crashed objects since he can comment on the extent of damage. SG]

So he's the one that I asked a lot of questions. I said what happens to this report. And he told me exactly what happens. He says there is a committee. Now these are his words: "There is a joint intelligence committee..." And he said, "... and they make the decisions as to where it goes."

They were coming to me a lot of times and showing me photographs. A lot of them looked like what we would call Foo Fighters. A lot of them looked like just a round, bright disc of some kind.

There was a Secretary of the Navy Kimball... I was what you would call a VIP Plane Commander in the Flag Division, which flew most of the high-ranking officers and civilians out of Washington, D.C. Several of these officials told me what they had seen. For example, there were two craft flying together out in the Pacific. And a bright disc came up beside one of them and stayed with them for a while and flew around it.

Our office came under the headquarters of Wright Patterson. It was a central district. You had pilot meetings. You had all these types of meetings. And I would go down there about once or twice a month to the meetings, plus I would go maybe two or three times a year for seminars ... it would be a week or so.

Once, while on the flight line where we parked our plane we weren't too far from what looked like a hanger. It looked like a corrugated metal hanger. And it was open most of the time. Every time my boss and I would go by there he couldn't understand why I was not interested in going and looking at what was behind the metal wall back there. And he told me basically that they had a craft (UFO) back there. And he told me basically that they did have ET bodies there. Now he's not the first one that ever told me that.

From discussions that he had had with Admiral Forney he learned that Admiral Forney (who was our missile chief and had spent time at White Sands) was convinced that craft from other planets were visiting us. He kept bringing up Colonel Watson also. He said Colonel Watson let him look at a lot of these files, plus he was the one that told him about what they had there. He saw what they had there [the ET craft and bodies], and as I said he couldn't understand why I wasn't interested. I said, well, really I don't have any interest because I will never be able to talk about it. And I know enough now from what I've seen that I know they exist. It was a craft at Wright Patterson AFB. It was a craft that did crash somewhere.

SG: Extraterrestrial?

GB: Extraterrestrial craft, exactly. Yes. And the bodies that he was talking about were extraterrestrial.

Well, I'm convinced of what I saw. To my knowledge we wouldn't have had anything of that size. And I'm certain that it was from another planet, not from this planet. Our technology was not such at that time that we could have any kind of a craft like that, I'm sure of that.

I had a top-secret clearance. But here we get back to the need to know. And I am sure that in a lot of cases the other people had the need to know about certain things that I didn't have. And so I'm sure that if we had anything from another planet, that some of these engineers would be involved, whether they were magnetic engineers or aeronautical engineers or whatever they were, they would be involved.

Regarding Corso's book, I was involved in some things that I'm suspicious were of the same nature. They were asking us to see if we could find a contractor in the area that could build something like this, to back-engineer something like this. And we never thought about it when he said, well, it wasn't our technology.

Later in the '60s, we were just moving into a new home. My son was about eight years old. And we were sodding the backyard. And I went into the house to wash up and he came into the house and says, dad, mommy wants you outside. I said, what for? He said, we're looking at flying saucers. Well, I thought to myself what the heck does he know about flying saucers? So I go outside and here she is standing and pointing to something up above us. And you know what it was? It was a ship and there were smaller craft all around it. So I go back in the house to get the binoculars because I wanted to get a good look at this. So I come back and the ship itself had gone but I got a chance to see two or three of the small ones. So when we got back in the house I said to my wife, how did you find out about flying saucers? Because we were not supposed to tell even our wives of our encounter, which was in 1951.

1. The following described unidentified aircraft/object was sighted off the coast of Newfoundland by MATS Navy C-54 crew.

a. Originally sighted as a single, heavy, yellowish light, similar in appearance to that of a city. As object approached observing aircraft, it grew very bright and large, and appeared to be semi-circular in shape. Near aircraft, it did a 180° turn and was last seen as a small ball disappearing over the horizon. The speed was "terrific" and the size "tremendous" to quote observers. (The difference in size between the time it was first seen and last seen as a small ball going over the horizon was described as tremendous, at least 100 times larger.)

b. Sighted at 0056Z on 10 February 1951 and remained visible for approximately 7 or 8 minutes.

c. Visually observed from MATS Navy C-54 #6501 of VR-1 Squadron based at Patuxent, Maryland, flying at 10,000 feet altitude, 172 knots air speed, 225° true course.

d. Observing aircraft was at 49° 50' N 50° 30' W at the time of observation. Object appeared near the water's surface at approximately a 45° downward angle from the observing aircraft and was making good a true course of approximately 125°. Upon approaching observing aircraft, it executed a sudden turn approximating 180° and disappeared very rapidly over the horizon.

e. Object sighted by 5 crew members, listed below, of the above aircraft, who are all experienced North Atlantic fliers. Gander Traffic Control reports no other aircraft known to be in the vicinity at time of sighting. All 5 observers agree on facts as stated, but there has been no confirmation from other sources. Believe C-3 appropriate.

 Lt G. E. Bethune - 299055
 Lt N. G. B. Koger - 305873
 Lt J. M. Meyer - 263836

f. Weather clear, visibility from 15 miles to unlimited, no other weather information available.

g. No unusual meteorological activity known to exist and having any influence on the sighting. This object could not have been a comet as the object was below and between the aircraft and ocean.

h. No physical evidence available.

i. No interception action taken.

2. The above information was forwarded from this Headquarters to Headquarters, USAF by 0100Z 10 February 1951 by TCM 111, NEAC EM 0211, and DM 0213.

Subj: Report of Unusual Sighting on Flight 125/9 February 1951

1. Graham E. BETHUNE, was Co-Pilot on Flight 125 from Keflavik, Iceland to Naval Air Station, Argentina on the 10th of February 1951. At 0055Z I signed and observed the following object:

SIGHTED While flying in the left seat at 10,000 feet on a true course of 230 degrees at a position of 49-50 North 50-03 West, I observed a glow of light below the horizon about 1,000 to 1,500 feet above the water. Its bearing was about 2:00 Clock. There was no overcast, there was a thin transparent group of scuds at about 2,000 feet altitude. After examining the object for 40 to 50 seconds I called it to the attention of Lieutenant KINGDON in the right hand seat. It was under the thin scuds at roughly 30 to 40 miles away. I asked "What is it, a ship lighted up or a city, I know it can't be a city because we are over 250 miles out". We both observed its course and motion for about 4 or 5 minutes before calling it to the attention of the other crew members. Its first glow was a dull yellow. We were on an intercepting course. Suddenly its angle of attack changed, its altitude and size increased as though its speed was in excess of 1,000 miles per hour. It closed in so fast that the first feeling was we would collide in mid air. At this time its angle changed and the color changed. It then was definitely circular and redish orange on its perimeter. It reversed its course and tripled its speed until it was last seen disappearing over the horizon. Because of our altitude and misleading distance over water it is almost impossible to estimate its size, distance and speed. A rough estimate would be at least 300 feet in diameter, over 1,000 miles per hour in speed and approached within 5 miles of the aircraft.

MEMORANDUM REPORT to Commanding Officer, Air Transport Squadron ONE

Subj: Report of Unusual Sighting on Flight 125/9 February 1951

At 0055Z on 10 February 1951 while serving as second Plane Commander on above flight I was an eye witness to an unusual sighting of an unidentified object. This occurrence took place at approximately 49-50 N and 50-03 W, which is approximately 200 miles north east of Argentia, Newfoundland. We were at 10,000 feet altitude cruising on a true course of about 230° at time of incident.

At time of sighting I was occupying the right hand (CoPilots) seat and the left hand (Pilots) seat was occupied by Lieutenant G. E. BETHUNE.

My attention was first called to the occurrence by Mr. BETHUNE, who asked me to look at an unusual light which was to my right. I then saw that there was a glowing light beneath a thin layer of strato-form clouds beneath us. This light was to my right and down at an angle of about 45°. This object appeared to lie on the surface and was throwing a yellowish-orange glare through the cloud deck. It appeared to be very large and I at first thought that it could be a large ship completely illuminated.

Mr. BETHUNE and I watched the object for several minutes in trying to determine its nature. We then called our Navigator, Lieutenant N. J. P. ROGER to the cockpit to scrutinize the object and render his opinion as to its nature.

While further observing the object I saw that it suddenly started ascending through the cloud layer and it then became quite bright. The object was very large and was circular with a glowing yellow-orange ring around its outer edge. This object appeared to be climbing and moving at a tremendous speed, and it appeared to be on a more or less collision course with our aircraft. When it appeared that there was a possibility of collision the object appeared to make a 180° turn and disappeared over the horizon at a terrific speed. During the course of events LTJG A. L. JONES had come to the cockpit and he made a turn in the direction of the object but it went out of sight in a short period of time.

Due to the fact that this object was seen over water at night it would be most difficult for me to estimate speed, size or distance we were from it during the course of events. However, the speed was tremendous and the size was at least 200 to 300 feet in diameter. The object was close enough to me to see and observe it clearly.

Subject: Report of Unusual Sighting on Flight 125/8, February 1951

1. At 0055Z, 10 February 1951, I was the Plane Commander of Flight 125/09 (ND Bureau Number 56501), enroute from Keflavik, Iceland to Argantia, Newfoundland at 10,000 feet on an instrument flight plan. Our position at 10/0055Z was 49-50 North, 50-03 West, on a true heading of 290°, ground speed 118 knots. The weather was clear with about 60 miles visibility and thin stratus clouds at about 4,000.

2. I was in the cabin of the plane checking the passengers when one of the navigators, Lieutenant W. J. P. KOGER, came aft and pointed to this phenomena. I watched it for a minute and went forward to the cockpit to get a better view. Upon reaching the cockpit, I took the plane off of the autopilot and turned to a true heading of 290° in pursuit of the object. The object left on a heading of about 290° true and went over the horizon in a very short time.

3. I would guess the speed to be well over 1500 miles per hour, and the diameter to be at least 300 feet.

4. My first view of it resembled a huge fiery orange disc on its edge. As it went further away, the center became darker, but the edge still threw off a fiery hue. When it went over the horizon, it seemed to go from a vertical position to a horizontal position, with only the trailing edge showing in a half-moon effect. Since I was not the first to see it, it was going away from the plane when I was notified. Copilot Lieutenant G. E. RETHORSE was flying the plane and Second Plane Commander Lieutenant Fred KINGDON was flying on the right side at the time of the incident.

5. At 10/0104Z, I called Gander Tower on VHF and asked them if Gander A. T. C. had any information of an aircraft at that position and time. They had no such information and notified the military of our sighting. When we landed at Argantia at 10/0240Z, we were interrogated by Capt. D. H. PAULSEN, USAF, Pepperell AFB, and CDR WHEMEYER, C.O., VP-8, Argantia. The extreme speed, maneuverability, and brilliance of the object made our estimates as to the distance and size very difficult.

Testimony of Mr. Enrique Kolbeck - Senior Air Traffic Controller

October 2000

Mr. Enrique Kolbeck is a senior Air Traffic Controller at Mexico City International Airport. In his testimony he speaks about the frequent UFO sightings seen at the airport visually and on radar. They are clocked at tremendous speeds and making almost instantaneous hairpin turns. Of the 140 air traffic controllers at the airport, he estimates that over 50 have seen this phenomenon. During one sighting, 32 controllers visually saw the same red and white lights simultaneously moving around a conventional landing aircraft. There have been reports from all four air traffic control centers in Mexico of these UFOs.

My name is Enrique Kolbeck. I am an Air Traffic Controller at Mexico International Airport. I have been a controller for 25 years.

From the Mexico Control Center, we have had many sightings of UFO phenomenon. They appear suddenly and frequently cross the flight paths of the incoming aircraft. We see them on the radar screen and sometimes the pilots give us information about what they are seeing. We don't have any kind of control over this kind of phenomenon, of course. And the pilots definitely feel insecure about the control of the airspace around their aircraft.

Flying saucers: In the past, to hear that would be very funny. Today, it is very serious for us. Especially after the incident we had with Aeromexico flight 109. Four years ago more or less, we had an incident that was very dangerous involving an unidentified object. The UFO was flying over a very important building in the city. It is located on the final track of runway five for Mexico City Airport.

This flight was coming from Guadalajara to Mexico City and I passed the control of this aircraft to the other controller. It is beginning the approach for runway five precisely. We saw two objects on the screen, two craft, very close to the aircraft at that moment. But it very suddenly and quickly disappeared. We had radar contact for more or less, thirty seconds. And the pilot doesn't report anything. Then later we discovered that this aircraft in the final turn hit his principle landing gear on this kind of object.

It is important that you know that we received information two hours later from people who were watching the phenomenon fly over the building. Then we heard something about the airplane hitting this object and it was very, very dangerous for us- because we have responsibility to know about everything that is flying in our airspace.

We have a lot of reports about UFOs flying very close to the final track, within four or five miles from the final approach. It is very real and on radar; we have information about those encounters, precisely. In the week of the Aeromexico encounter, we had about seven reports from pilots at different in times. It is important that you know that these UFOs appear on our radar screens and show up like a point digitally.

They moved definitively very fast. The human aircrafts- Boeing 727, Boeing 757- move in a different way and of course their speed is completely different from the UFOs. When you have the view of the airspace and the radar screen you see the UFOs go around twenty or thirty miles in a second. That is very real. And of course it is nothing like other human aircraft. The UFOs can turn suddenly and turn almost ninety degrees in a second or a half second

When this kind of phenomenon appears, we see it sometimes twelve times a day, or it may appear twelve times a month or a week ~ you don't have information about when these UFOs will appear.

Also, the UFOs can go vertically straight up very quickly. That is completely different, of course, from even the military aircraft.

But this phenomenon doesn't come with a flight plan. Nobody knows anything about them. They appear when they want to appear. The pilots sometime become scared and require immediate information. A lot of pilots report when they have a sighting and sometimes report problems with their instruments of flight, the electronic instruments. These UFOs come within 2-5 miles of their aircraft.

I have been seeing these UFOs on radar for seven years. Many sightings were reported near the volcano outside Mexico City

Once, near the volcano, a Mexican pilot had an experience with three objects flying around him. Two of these objects were flying on top of the wings of the aircraft and the other flew in front of him. We had the radar register that information.

We have around 140 controllers at the Mexico Center. I think that 50 at least have seen the objects on the radar screen and had visual contact with the UFOs. On one occasion we had two Mexican aircraft flying from the north to land when one of them reported seeing a small object of red color passing beside him very fast. And the aircraft that was flying behind him also reported it. Within one minute of that, we saw it from the tower - a lot of people ran to the windows to watch this phenomenon. One was red and the other two were white. Around 32 air traffic controllers had the same sighting of this UFO!

In Mexico, we have four Control Centers and 52 airports. In the four Control Centers, we have been getting information about radar tracking this kind of phenomenon. Yes, in all four. In Matzatlán, we have information that around fifteen years ago two commercial flights and another private aircraft were flying in Mazatlán airspace very close to the border of the United States. There were about four or five UFOs flying around there. The human pilots were so scared that they decided finally to land on Mazatlán. They didn't consider the airspace safe at that moment.

Our Mexican authorities have sent out a lot of information about pilots' and controllers' reports of UFOs in our country.

I am sure that your country [the USJ has information about these UFOs. I am sure that in your country a lot of controllers have information about pilots' reports and sightings of pilots. I am sure.

We also have a case where this lady took a picture with her camera of a UFO at the same time that we have a detection on the radar screen 40 miles away. We received information from different sources about that sighting which happened near Metepec.

After that event, we had a very busy week with sightings- they happened each day for a week. Some pilots have seen these objects or flying saucers going down inside of the volcano.

Just like other radars in the world, our radar doesn't detect light. It only detects solid objects flying. That is very important. When you have information from pilots, controllers and people walking in the street seeing at the same time the same object, definitely you are talking about something real. It is very real.

Really, the important thing for me and for the professional guys like me is that they represent traffic. At one time, we had registered on radar information about twelve or fifteen UFOs at the same time! At the same time! They were very close to the city and the airport also.

The pilots report the size of some of these objects at around 100 meters or greater. I remember reports of a Mexicana aircraft flying from Santa Cruz to Mexico City and they had a sighting of a very large UFO. Another pilot flying 40 miles behind the first aircraft has the same object in sight. They are talking about how enormous it was. With 40 miles between the aircraft, the object was enormous.

Testimony of Dr. Richard Haines

Dr. Haines has been a NASA research scientist since the mid 1960's. He has worked on the Gemini, Apollo, and Skylab programs as well as several others. Over the past 30 years, Dr. Haines has compiled over 3,000 cases of unusual visual and radar sightings of unexplained aerial phenomena. He notes that numerous foreign cases also appear in the literature and are very similar in nature to the American reports. In one case here in America, a B-52 captain told him that he and his crew had five round spheres appear just off of each wingtip, behind their aircraft, above the aircraft, and below and they kept up with the plane at cruise altitude and speed. The captain tried to shake the spheres with evasive maneuvers but each sphere kept exact position. There are other cases where pilots look into the transparent cupola of some of a UFOs and detail can be seen inside.

My name is Richard Haines. I've been a research scientist since the mid-1960s, working [for NASA] in the field of aeronautics, aerospace physiology, etc. I've worked on the Gemini program, the Apollo program, the Skylab program, and on several other aeronautical programs. I retired from federal service in 1988 and since then have taught at a local university.

And from a science point of view, I can't ignore the data [on UFOs]. The phenomenon is just so beautiful, so powerful, so curious that it demands some scientific involvement.

I feel that the pilot sightings are very valuable because of a number of factors: The pilots are highly educated and trained for the first point. What that means is that they have a career at stake. And they are not going to come forward with a report of some strange object or light off the side of the aircraft or near the aircraft unless they've already eliminated all of the prosaic explanations. They are just risking their career to do so. Another reason is that they are flying aircraft that are just packed with electromagnetic sensors on board of all kinds and equipment that may be influenced by EM radiation. And so if we can find some characteristic change in those instruments, or the radio, or radar, or the direction finder, or viewers, or DME's, or various kinds of on-board cockpit instruments, we are learning something about the nature of the radiation related to the phenomena. And of course that's what science is about. Science can get interested in the phenomenon if it has some good, firm data to work with.

In many cases, Air Force interceptors have been sent up to identify or investigate the phenomenon. And the pilot might ask for radar coverage. Did you see anything on radar? I have many, many cases in my AIRCAT files where there is good, positive, visual radar correspondence.

AIRCAT stands for Air Catalogue. This is a rather extensive library I've been collecting for almost 30 years now from commercial, military, private and test pilots. I have over 3,000 cases. I have tape recordings or video recordings of the interviews with some of the pilots. I have FAA tapes that you can obtain as a citizen through Freedom of Information Act requests. And so this database is very large. Those cases that are not complete are usually the result of a hesitancy on the part of the pilot to disclose everything. If they are a commercial pilot, for instance, there may be concerns about job security or ridicule.

In half of the cases the phenomenon appears to approach the airplane, not the other way around. It's as if the aircraft is the focus of attention or curiosity of the phenomenon. The pilot is flying along minding his own business and something comes up alongside one wing for 15 minutes at cruise altitude, cruise speed. And sometimes it will flip over to the other wing or stay right at the nose of the aircraft and then do barrel rolls along the flight axis- some very interesting maneuvers. The kind of flight maneuvers that our aircraft are generally not capable of doing.

I have here an interesting case involving magnetic compass deviation. It took place on May 26th, 1979 at about midnight in south central Utah involving a private aircraft. James Gallagher left Blackfoot, Idaho before midnight, and was now 10,000 feet altitude in his light aircraft. He was just south of the Challis National Forest, intent upon landing at Freedman Memorial Airport at Haley, in Idaho, about 14 miles south of Sun Valley. In his own words, "I looked up in front of me and saw these five orange objects in a horizontal formation in front of me. And then they tilted like an aircraft would dip its wings. And I thought, it was lights on an aircraft of some kind. Then they spread out. And I knew damn well it wasn't an aircraft. At one point, the object regrouped and formed a vertical line. Then they moved around randomly apparently coming closer to me. Then all five came to the left side of my aircraft. My magnetic compass started spinning and my automatic direction finder started spinning. At that point, they were in a straight-line formation and then they just blinked out. I did have trouble receiving on the radio because of heavy static and my engine started running rough."

[See the testimony of Commander Bethune and Neil Daniels, which involved these types of EM effects. SG]

It's also of interest to note that a Braniff flight crew also reported seeing orange objects below their altitude the same morning while flying at 35,000 feet only 120 miles south of Gallaghers sighting. And again at 2:53 AM when they were some 70 miles northwest of Ogden, Utah, ground radar also tracked the objects during this encounter. So there we have an interesting case involving several aircraft, compasses deviating, radio frequency interference, and radar. There is a wealth of data there. And it just amazes me that my colleagues in the physical sciences, for some reason aren't interested in this subject.

Recently, I went through thousands of pilot reports. I was looking in that review just for American registered aircraft. I found 100 cases that I felt had some important impact where flight safety was impaired or reduced in some way. Now, in the process of doing that I had to read all the foreign cases as well. And I was blown away by the similarity of close encounters of American and foreign aircraft and flight crews. It suggests that the phenomenon is worldwide, obviously. We take that for granted now. It is not showing up differently by culture, for instance. The behavior of the phenomena near an aircraft is the same for foreign aircraft as it is American aircraft, as I would expect.

So we start raising questions about intelligence. Is there some intelligent guidance behind the phenomenon? Well that's a scientific question. That is a valuable scientific question. And to me, where I am right now in the data analysis, I think there is. I'm gaining more and more data to make this case that there is a high degree of intelligence and control behind this phenomenon.

But when I look historically back at the data from 50 years ago- well, I know something about aerospace technology from the space program, at least. I can say that at least in the non-black programs we could not do what these objects were reported as doing. And so that says that if it is intelligent, it is probably not human intelligence.

To me intelligence is generally shown by non-random regular events. My book called Project Delta is an analysis of multiple objects seen either from the ground or the air. There are many pilot cases there. But when I look carefully at the flight dynamics, the flight formations that multiple objects seem to display next to a pilot, I have to say that they are precisely guided, that they know where they are in three-dimensional space at any moment. They know where their neighbors are in three-dimensional space. They seem to be able to communicate so that they all execute maneuvers simultaneously, not like the Navy Blue Angels that take a fraction of a second before the reaction time sets in.

I had a B-52 captain tell me once that he was flying in the front left seat of a brand new B-52 from Wichita, Kansas, where it was made by the Boeing Corporation. His job was to ferry that aircraft with a light crew to an Air Force base in the southwestern part of America. It was a clear, sunny day, beautiful bright sky, and an object, a round sphere, probably four or five feet in diameter with no markings, no rivets, no seams, no insignias, no USAF on the side- showed up right off his left wing tip. Well, his co-pilot said, Captain, we have an object off our right wing tip and he described it and it was the same shape, size, everything, identical to this one on the left wing. So there are two objects now keeping up with the aircraft at cruise altitude and cruise speed.

Well, to make a long story short, he told me that an object showed up behind the aircraft, above the aircraft, below the aircraft and off each wing tip, five total. And, I said, well, what did you do. He said, well, I hit the autopilot button on the control column and went into evasive maneuvers, which is kind of standard operating procedure, to try to shake these things. He said if they were balloons, they weren't going to keep up with us very long. If they were birds, why were they at that altitude and flying at 300 or 400 miles an hour, so forth and so on. Good, typical piloting behavior, checking off what they weren't, you see. Well, he said, no matter what he did with that aircraft, they stayed with the aircraft, perfectly aligned. It is called station keeping. So he said, after a while of this, we are running out of fuel and I have a job to do. So he added power, got back up to cruise altitude, and put her back on autopilot. After 15 or so minutes more the objects departed from the aircraft in the exact opposite order they arrived. Intelligence. To me that's not random. That is intelligence. That is deliberate.

I can say happily that we don't know of any major cases where deaths have occurred from UAP [Unidentified Aerial Phenomena]. I think the reason for that is very interesting: There have not been any collisions that we know of with commercial flights from UAP because the phenomenon seems to get out of the way in time. They are highly maneuverable.

Well now, think about that for a moment. That if this phenomenon is so maneuverable that it can avoid a collision at the last minute- and this technical report has scores of cases like that, zipping over the top of the aircraft just at the last moment. The pilot doesn't do anything. That says something about intelligence doesn't it? It suggests technology, at least. It suggests an understanding of energy management that I don't think we have.

Now the skeptics will say that these are all visual illusions. And I can't buy that. Not all these cases, not with three sets of eyeballs in that cockpit, not with radar confirmation, not with ground confirmation by radar and even additional aircraft nearby.

I think it is fair to say that pilots, being human beings, are subject to the same psychological pressures as anyone is our culture, against reporting these strange experiences. The authorities tell us there is no threat. They tell us that there is nothing to worry about, that there is really nothing there. So why report something that's not really there? So pilots, being professionals, have careers at stake. And so it is easier not to report them and usually they don't report them. My estimate is that for every one pilot who does come forward and makes a confidential or a public report, there are 20, 30 other pilots who don't.

As a result of this review of my AIRCAT files, I found a number of cases back in the '60s for instance when the Air Force was still heavily involved in this subject, where they stepped in and interrogated commercial pilots. Not just their own military pilots, but also commercial pilots. The Air Force ended the interview by saying you are not to tell anybody about what you saw.

Captain Kenja Terochi [sp] was piloting a Boeing 747, Japan Airlines, from Paris, France to Tokyo, over the polar route. I interviewed him by phone- I am the only civilian to interview this gentleman after he and his crew had a major sighting over northern Alaska on their way to Anchorage to land for refueling. And as a result of his following the rules, which he did, making the report out, landing safely, delivering the cargo, being a good pilot, Japan Airlines asked him to not fly anymore. I happened to meet the Chief Medical Officer for Japan Airlines on that incident and I asked him why? Why did you relieve Captain Terochi from his flying duties? And his answer was, well, we convened a medical review board on this incident and we decided that it was not wise for Japan Airlines to have a pilot flying who sees such strange things. And that was the answer given.

I have to tell you the end of the story and it was that I may have said too much to this Japanese gentleman in a three-piece suit from Japan Airlines. But I said, well, I have to disagree with you sir. I think you have a fine pilot there; Captain Terochi is a very fine pilot. He did follow the instructions. He did report accurately. He did maintain control of the aircraft: at all times. He did deliver his cargo. And he is not the only pilot that I know of who has seen such strange things as that, very large objects, for instance. This was a huge object near his aircraft. And he said, well, that's very interesting. Would you like to submit any information on his behalf? I said, I'd be delighted. So I came home and put together a packet about two inches thick where I said all this in writing. And I appended examples from my files of similar cases to show that Captain Terochi was not the only person who has ever had an experience like this.

So I sent it off to Tokyo. I Never heard another thing for about six, eight months- maybe even a year. But I learned later that he was reinstated to flying status. So he is now flying again, I'm happy to say.

[See also the testimony of FAA official John Callahan. SG]

When we look at daylight sightings of UFO phenomena, in general, there is probably more commonality than difference. For instance, the great majority of the phenomena reflect ambient light. It is like a bumper of a car that is polished chrome and reflects sunlight and you see a little image of the sun. Well, that's the kind of surface characteristics that the objects almost always have. Not always, but usually. Another classification of surface characteristics is pitch black, almost a black hole where it is absorbing light.

However, very seldom do we see seams, markings, rivets, any sort of insignias. There are almost none. These are just smooth aeronautically shaped objects- very seldom do we find sharp edges. Quite often there is a little protrusion either on the top or the bottom, or both, that some people describe as a cupola or a cockpit of some sort. And very often, they are transparent. And detail can be seen inside the windows. It is very interesting for a pilot to look you in the eye and tell you that he saw this at 100 yards distance, at altitude. That has a great emotional impact on me, I must say.

I have a number of cases where the object does not reflect light, but is pitch black. It is like a black hole. It almost absorbs light. One case, in particular, comes to mind. This is a Canadian pilot flying by himself in a two engine propeller cargo aircraft, a DC-3. He is flying about sundown to the south after having dropped off an oil crew at a little strip in the north of Canada. He is flying about 5,000 feet altitude about ready to land and his wife is down there with the radio on. And he radios to her, hey honey, I'm going to be home in 20 minutes. He said to me that off to the western horizon he noticed a black speck. And at that great distance off to his right, he thought it was another aircraft so he kept an eye on it. He said this object, whatever it was, was at his altitude and moving rather quickly from right to left until it was pretty much right ahead of him. And then, he said it stopped. It came to an abrupt halt right in front of his aircraft and the distance was lessening between them. It got bigger and bigger and bigger. I said, well, what did it look like? He said, it looked like a bullet. It was flat on its rear-end, pointed on its front, and kind of parallel at the top and then it tapered down to the point on the front. Well, what did you do? He said, nothing I could do. It was just there in front of me and then it maintained distance- it just kept a constant distance. It didn't change in size, in other words. Well, after some minutes it just continued on its way in its original direction.

End of story? Almost. He radioed his wife to describe what had happened and found out that he had lost some time. Some time had past longer than should have, normally, from where he was to where he should be going to land the aircraft. And I suspect when the object was right ahead that's when the missing time occurred.

[See the testimony of officer Alan Godfrey who had a similar time-altering experience in England during a very close encounter. SG]

There are very often multi-colored lights on these objects, daytime and night. But the lights are not FAA approved. Very often they are blue lights, and that is not an approved aircraft color you see. So something else is going on here. The lights are often sequenced on and off, on and off, in some regular pattern. They would be rotating clockwise around the circumference, for instance, and aircraft don't have that...

Testimony of Mr. Franklin Carter - US Navy

Mr. Carter was trained as an electronic radar technician in the Navy in the 50's and 60s. He tells of an incident where he witnessed a clear, unambiguous radar contact speeding along at 3,400 miles an hour. There were other radar operators as well who, at various times in 1957 and 1958, also witnessed these unusually fast moving objects. At the time, the fastest human aircraft clocked in at 1,100 miles and hour. In one case an Air Force operator tracked one of these UFOs 300 to 400 miles out in space. When these reports repeatedly kept coming in to General Electric who manufactured the radar, their technicians came in and modified the electronics so that the radar would limit it's reporting to 12 to 15 miles out into space.

My name is Ally Franklin Carter. In September of 1955, I joined the U.S. Navy under their Electronics training program. I wanted to become a radar technician. And so I went to basic training in Great Lakes, Illinois, and went to E.T. [electronic technician] school there graduating in the fall of 1957. I chose as my duty station a radar picket ship called the U.S.S. Kretchmer DER-329. It was a converted destroyer escort and it was destined to have the latest radar equipment that the Navy had for air search and surface search. And we were stationed in the north Atlantic between Argentina, Newfoundland and the Azore Islands.

We tracked everything that we could see, both on the surface and in the air and, we reported it to NORAD in Colorado Springs, Colorado. If it was an unknown, they would scramble fighters out of Westover Mass. to come out and investigate.

But we had a very unusual experience one night. I was a radar specialist and my job was to maintain the radar's aboard the ship.

And in the early summer of 1957 because the ship was undermanned, I also served as a radar operator. So I served four on and eight off, duty watches, as an operator if there was nothing wrong with the radar. I got off-duty one night at midnight and went to bed and was called and told to come fix the radar, there was something wrong with it. When I got up to CIC and I asked them what the problem was. They said, well, we are tracking an aircraft here at 3,400 miles an hour. And I said, well, there is something wrong. So I took that radar offline, put the stand-by radar online and went to work. And I started running all the tests. And everything was normal. And I completed all of the preliminary tests that you would run to check out a radar and everything checked out absolutely normal.

So I went back into CIC and I said, what did the target just before this one do? And they said, well, it was perfectly normal. It was an airliner, and it was the right course and speed. And by this time an hour had gone by and I said, well, what are you tracking now? And they said, well, on the other radar everything is tracking fine. So I said, let's put this back on. We put it back online and it was tracking normally. Everything was normal. So as a result of talking with him I said I can't find anything wrong with the radar. But they had clear plots. And they told me this had been an absolute stellar contact — this was a blip that was better than a half-inch across which indicated a really large target or something very close. It tracked every sweep. And if you get anomalies usually what will happen is every sweep or every other sweep you'll get a blank or maybe every 10 sweeps but it'll blank out. But this one was solid on every sweep and that indicates a solid target.

So I asked the duty officer if he was going to report it. And he said no. And I said, why not? And he said, well, he says, you've just told me there is nothing wrong with the radar. You've run all the checks you can run. There is nothing wrong with the radar. We know we tracked the thing. If we report it then Colorado Springs is going to ask us what's wrong with our equipment and you've already said there is nothing wrong. So you and I then have a problem. We both are in trouble. We've got to come up with a story. And he says, I'm not going to report it.

Then one night I was on the plot board, maybe three or four months later. And here comes this contact. And with the second blip you could see that this thing was really moving. It was moving like three or four inches on a 360-mile scale. And so sure enough, I plotted it and it was 3,400 miles an hour. And again we didn't report it. But they say there is nothing wrong, this is our friend back. We didn't make a big deal out of it but we sure would have liked to know what that was: 3,400 miles an hour in 1957! The closest thing that we had was about 1,100 miles an hour then.

It continued to happen during the year, the last part of '57, and up until May of '58. It happened at least three more times. And I had radar operator friends that would tell me, well, we had another one of those fast ones last night. And it always was at night.

Later at a conference a psychologist from the University of Missouri Medical School was making a presentation. And as a part of his presentation he was explaining how much grief he was taking from the faculty in wanting to know why he was involved in something like UFO's. And he said, I'll tell you why. I have this guy as a client. He was in the Air Force. He was in Alaska and he was on the dew line. He tracked things at 3,400 miles an hour. And they told him he was crazy. And he's still, now all these years later (this was in the late '50 s) having psychological problems. So I'm trying to help people (ike him, and I figured that's what I was trained for and that's why I'm doing it.

[I have found that many witnesses have suffered from the official ridicule and denial of something that they know to be true. Some have related truly horrifying consequences to the continued cruel denial and ridicule from the government, media, and academic community. SG]

When he said 3,400 miles an hour, I made an effort to track him down after his talk and got the name of the client. I actually talked to this client, who was a Sergeant in the Air Force. He had been on the dew line with the big stationary ballistic missile radars that they had. And he said, yes, we tracked them at 3,400 miles an hour. He said, the interesting part of it was we tracked them 300 and 400 miles out in space. And he said, we complained to General Electric who had built the system. And so we kept reporting these events and they kept telling us we couldn't report that stuff. So we said, well, we are doing it and it is real. And so they came in and actually made movies of the scope and when they took them back and analyzed what they were seeing, they came back and put a fix into the radar so their distance into space was like 12 or 15 miles. They said, that's all the ballistic missiles will ever go. You don't need to see any further. So they just limited the receivers to where the scope would only expand to where they could see 12 to 15 miles out in space. His name was Dave Wallace.

Later I talked to a lady who came forward about two years ago who had been an Army radar operator stationed in California during the '50's. And she also reported that she had tracked craft at 3,400 miles an hour which seemed to be a kind of a common speed at that point. But she said that the Army would also refuse to report the events.

A navy man I spoke [to] had tracked, on a destroyer in the Gulf of Mexico, an underwater craft. And there were a squadron of ships on maneuvers in the Gulf. He said that they had a solid target on scopes from two or three of these ships and that they tried to box it in but it escaped every time they tried to do that. And then it would stop and they'd go back again. It was kind of like it was playing with them. And they did that for two or three hours one day and it finally took off.

When people claim that these UFOs may be the figment of my imagination, I say I was a damn good E.T. [electronics technician]. I knew my radar. It was my love at the time. And I know the systems and that there was nothing wrong with those systems. I knew that we were tracking real contacts. I knew the difference between what they call running rabbits and all of the other test bogeys that they would give us.

I doubt very seriously that in 1956 and '57, that the U.S. had craft, even in the experimental stage, that could fly 3,400 miles an hour, repeatedly. In particular, where this was, we are sitting in the middle of the North Atlantic with at least 1,200 miles to any land and not near any test range. They were flying around the top of the globe with those kinds of speeds for those distances to get from land point to land point. I don't believe we had anything. I was kept abreast and told of all of the latest missiles, all of the latest aircraft that any of the foreign countries had. I was on a secret, need to know basis.

I'm quite sure that higher officials were concerned about the fact that they didn't know what it was. We didn't have anything that would fly that fast. They decided to limit that information so as not to let the Russians know what we didn't have or didn't know. They didn't want anybody to know anything about what we were seeing. And I think that started the cover-up. And then it got out of hand.

But I know that the only people that they are keeping it secret from today are the Americans. Everybody else knows about it and accepts it. And all of the other Governments in the world except England and the U.S. primarily, are accepting it.

It's very irritating to me personally, to see that go on. I have thought a lot about how your life would change if the Government came out tomorrow and said that they have been lying to you. Well, we all know now that that would be nothing new. They've lied to us about almost anything. But I think people are at the point where they could accept the fact that we are not alone.

I think it is important that we recognize that there are civilizations that we need to communicate with. And I think we've reached that point in our evolution as a human race that we need to recognize that. And the thing that disturbs me is that the U.S. is going to be a third world nation in that field if we are not careful by having all of this secrecy and refusing to set up any kind of diplomatic protocols as I know that you [Dr. Greer] have called for and which I believe in very strongly. Because they are out there. Other nations recognize them and they are going to talk to the people [ETs] that are willing to talk to them on a peaceful basis. I'm hoping that people will come to their senses and stop hiding this stuff from the U.S. citizens. It's appalling to me to know that we can have the kind of sightings that they've had in Mexico City and you never hear one single word in the national press of the U.S. That's appalling. That's an indictment of our system. They are reporting this stuff in China, in Cuba. They are reporting it everywhere except the U.S. The Chinese have all of our atomic secrets and all of our missile secrets. And yet the American people can't be told that there are craft out here from another part of the solar system or the universe. They think that they can't handle it, which is a ridiculous argument.

I also investigated a military sighting by a friend of mine. We knew each other in business for about seven or eight years. And he did not know that I had any interest in UFO's. And I did not know that he knew what a UFO was until I saw him make a report of a sighting one day. So I called him up and talked to him about it. He told me about his sighting when he was a Lieutenant in the Air Force. He was a navigator on a RB-36, which had the big cameras and they did all of the secret photographing back in the '50's. He was the navigator on one of these with 22 people aboard his plane. They were up over North Dakota and somebody called from the tail gunner section and said look out over the left wing. And out-they estimated 100 yards from the left wing- was this 100-foot disc. And this was as clear as day. He says they talked to the radar control tower and they had it on radar. All of the guys got up and went and took pictures of it. They had been given cameras. Now this is another part of it- the secrecy thing. They had been given 35mm cameras and told how to fill out a report if they saw a UFO. He said all 22 guys got up and looked out the window and saw this thing for about five or six minutes and then it just took off.

I've talked to him about it many times. We've had a number of discussions about this secrecy issue. What was interesting was that when he landed, they were met by an Air Force group. They debriefed all of these people and told them that they could not discuss it for 12 years, that they were under a secrecy oath. And then a week later a group from Washington came out and debriefed them and reminded them of their secrecy oath. They confiscated all of the camera and the films and everything. And then when he was discharged from the Air Force he was a Colonel in the Reserves, they reminded him again that he had signed a secrecy oath about this. His name is Jim Lloyd.

Testimony of Mr. Neil Daniels - Airline Pilot November 2000

Mr. Daniels is a pilot with over 30,000 of flight time spanning 59 years. He entered the Air Force and became a B-17 pilot surviving 29 combat missions. After leaving the Air Force he worked for United Airlines for 35 years. He tells about the time in March of 1977 when he was flying a commercial flight from San Francisco to Boston. The plane was on autopilot when by itself it began to bank left. He looked out the window and noticed a brilliant bright light. The first and second officers both saw it also. They were perplexed because all three compasses reported different readings.

Well, I went into the Air Force on December the 10th, 1941 just three days after Pearl Harbor. I had quite a bit of flying time before I went in so I went through Cadet school and we graduated in November of '42. And shortly thereafter I was overseas. I ended up in England in the 8th Air Force as a pilot on B-17's. I survived 29 missions in combat. And came on back home. And when I was released back to civilian status I was fortunate enough to get a job with United Airlines. And I stayed with them for 35 years until I reached the mandatory retirement date of age 60.

I started flying when I was 16. And I started writing in my logbook and closed it out just the other day after 59 years of flying. I ended up with 30,000 plus hours of flight time.

The one and only sighting that I had was in March of 1977. I was flying a DC-10 on a flight from San Francisco to Boston. And it was United Flight 94. We were about halfway between Buffalo and Albany at 37,000 feet, fog cover underneath, dark night, when all of a sudden the airplane which was on auto pilot started a 15 degree turn to the left. And of course I looked out the window and I saw this brilliant light.

The first officer saw it and the second officer got out of his seat and took a look. And that's when the Air Traffic Control in Boston wanted to know what was happening. So we told them when we figured it out we'd give them a call. And about that time the first officer hit the auto pilot release button and went back to manual control. As I was looking out the window this thing that we had seen disappeared back towards the left of the airplane and to our rear at a very rapid rate. The whole event took place in probably less than three minutes or so. So Air Traffic Control said, okay 994, you are now clear, direct Albany, on into Boston, J94 and so forth.

Well, the first officer's autopilot, which is connected to the Captain's compass, is out in the left wingtip of the airplane. And apparently for some reason or another the magnetic force was interrupted to cause the aircraft to veer off course because it is hooked up to the compass. All three compasses were giving different readings, which is very unusual. So what we gathered was it was an enormous magnetic force in whatever that ball was that we saw out there, that white light.

After we turned the autopilot off and the first officer straightened out the airplane the magnetic interference that had made the compasses all different readings ended and all returned to normal. And the object had disappeared away from us. So everything returned to a normal state.

The object was round with very, very bright lights. It is hard to describe the intensity of it because it was like the intensity of a flashbulb, the old fashioned flashbulbs, but it didn't light up the inside of the airplane. It was just a white, white, bright light, round.

There was no danger involved that we could see. It took off, it went back, and disappeared out of sight. It didn't try to make any attack on us or anything like that.

Well, it was about October and my boss and I were standing in a duck blind up by Kaloosa. It was a beautiful day and the ducks weren't flying. And I was just there and I thought well, I'll tell him about this. So I did. I told him about the incident. And that's when he said that he was sorry that I had mentioned that because they weren't accepting the fact that there was the possibility of anything like that to be seen.

In the past pilots that had seen things and had talked about it were let go. Some were released from their flying and treated as nutcases and things like that. So that was the last I said of it for many, many years.

Quite a few pilots have told me of their incidents and their sightings and what has happened. And one especially, was a sighting back on the east coast and he saw this thing for a long time, something like 18 minutes. And when he reported it to his boss, it was a different airline not United Airlines, they investigated it and the Government said, well, that's swamp gas. At 18,000 feet, doing 250 knots, swamp gas! No one wanted to really admit that there might possibly be something there...

I think it goes all the way back to the fact that people don't want to admit the possibility that there are other entities out there that might come down to be seen here. They don't want to admit it at all. The military seems to be the one that doesn't want to admit anything, and of course, our Government...

Testimony of Sgt. Robert Blazina (retired)
August 2000

Mr. Robert Biazina is a retired military man with a top-secret clearance. He worked transporting nuclear weapons all over the world. He personally witnessed a UFO maneuvering in the clear nights sky at an incredible speed straight up. Another time he and a civilian 747 both saw on their radar screens an object travel an estimated 10,000 miles an hour directly at them.

MR. BLAZINA: I enlisted on October 1st, 1940 and retired on June 30th, 1961. We hauled nuclear weapons for the services, took them all over the world, wherever they needed them. You had to have a top-secret clearance to be in the organization.

My first experience with UFOs was in 1952. I was on a flight from Seattle, coming back to Sacramento. It was between 10 and 12 midnight. It was a clear, dark night. Sitting there, looking ahead, I saw this orange glow in front of us. I didn't want to ask the pilot if he saw it because I thought I was just tired. And he did the same thing. Finally, he couldn't wait any longer so he asked me if I could see anything unusual. I told him that I saw this red glow in front of us. He felt better. We watched it. Finally he said, "Well, let's try to catch up and see what it is."

We added power and we kept getting closer and of course it got larger until we got up to about Redding, California. It went into a descent and we followed it. We picked up quite a bit of speed in a shallow dive and it went clear into Sacramento and across the city and right over the capital building. We were right on it. We had the aircraft redlined, as fast as it could go. At that point, it went vertical and it disappeared in a matter of two seconds, straight up.

[Note the similarity of maneuverability between this object and other accounts, especially straight up against gravity at tremendous speeds, indicating anti-gravity propulsion. SG]

It was just starting to take some kind of shape when it went vertical.

While in the Air Force Reserves in the 1970s, we were coming back from Germany. We were in a C-141 and we were, at the time, 35,000 feet plus. We were around two hours out of Dover, Delaware. Again, it was clear skies, but dark. We observed this object on our radar screen. We had two of the scopes on board, the pilots had one and the navigator had one, and it was on both of them. It would come directly at us, but we couldn't see it visually and then it would turn off. It made several passes at us, in fact, one time it came directly on our nose, so close that the pilot took evasive action.

At the same time, there was a civilian 747 off to our right that we could see. We contacted him and the pilots talked back and forth. They were seeing the same thing on their radar that we were seeing and we couldn't figure it out. We called the controllers in the states and they had nothing on their screen. All they said was to report when we landed. We went in and, there was pilot, co-pilot, navigator, and two flight engineers. The pilot wrote up what we saw and we all signed the statement and turned it in, but that was the last that we ever heard.

The navigator, he worked it out and said that it (the UFO) was traveling 10,000 miles per hour, plus. It did. It just came right across that screen and then turned off at the last second and then we didn't see it until it came at us again.

Testimony of Lieutenant Frederick Marshall Fox, US Navy (retired)

September 2000

Lieutenant Fox was in the Navy in the 60's flying attack planes. He had a top-secret clearance and served in Vietnam. He is a retired pilot of 33 years with American Airlines. In his testimony, he reveals that there is a publication called JANAP 146 E that has a section which states that no one is to share any information regarding the UFO phenomenon under penalty of $10,000 fine and 10 years in prison. During one incident in late 1964, while flying an A4 Skyhawk, he says that all of a sudden a darkened saucer shaped object about 30 feet in diameter appeared on his left side. There were many other events over the course of his career where he observed saucer shaped and cigar shaped UFOs over military installations as well as one time seeing two red lights traversing the night's sky from horizon to horizon in three seconds. He was afraid to bring up these events to others due to the inherent ridicule in the subject.

FF: Lieutenant Frederick Fox

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

FF: My name is Frederick Marshall Fox. I was born in White Plains, New York in 1938. I served in the Navy from 1960 to 1965 and was on active duty in Vietnam on the U.S.S. Ticonderoga during the Gulf of Tonkin incident. And then I served three years in the reserves and was recalled for the Pueblo crisis. I flew for 33 years with American Airlines and retired at age 60.

In the Navy my rank was Lieutenant and I was a nuclear weapons delivery pilot so I had a top-secret clearance.

Well, as far as the Navy goes I was Code 4 PUBS, which was a confidential publications and communications officer. There is a publication called JANAP 146 E that had a section that says you will not reveal any information regarding the UFO phenomenon under penalty of $10,000.00 fine and ten years in jail. So they were quite adamant that whatever experiences you had you were not to go public with it without their permission.

I flew attack planes- the A4 Skyhawk. Theyd have us go out so the CIC could vector the fighters into targets, etc. I was out about 180 miles from the carrier one night by myself at about 20,000 feet when an object showed up on my left side. It didn't have any hostile intent; it was just there observing me. And I sort of observed it and came away with a very peaceful feeling. I never said anything to anybody until later in my career with the airlines. I later found out a fellow ship-mate of mine had a similar incident.

The object was maybe 30 feet in diameter... Maybe it was an intelligence gathering disc. It was saucer shaped.

SG: How far away from you was it?

FF: Oh, it was right off my wing. I mean it was right there. I could feel its presence. But if anything it was protecting me. You know, I'm out there alone at night 180 miles from the carrier by myself, and it can be a little, you know, a little anxious. Of course, this is during the Vietnam War so you don't know what is going to happen.

SG: Do you know about the year that this happened?

FF: 1964. It was August or September. It just appeared. I mean I'm there alone and all of a sudden I'm aware of something. And I look up and here it is. And after observing it and having this close encounter, then it just sort of disappeared. It dematerialized. It was like a black shape in the black night. There were no lights or anything. But there was a form. I suppose if there had been lights it might have created an anxiety which maybe, whomever was there, didn't want me to experience at the time. I mean I was, what, 24 at the time.

There were events over the course of my career where I observed classic saucer shape, cigar shape objects. These were over military installations, White Sands, Albuquerque, etc.

The subject never came up with Air Traffic Control. In any event I would never have opened my mouth. There was a Captain, Pete Killian, who was written about in some of the UFO books. He was a Captain with American Airlines back in the '50 s that evidently had a sighting and testified before the Senate committees. And then there was another captain that actually took a photograph of a UFO off his wings. And of course they were subject to ridicule. I didn't want to go that direction. So, I never reported anything to FAA or the military. A lot of pilots just did not want to get involved in this because of peer pressure and ridicule. So the secret has been kept.

I happen to have friends from Japan that are very open. The Japanese are very open about this. In fact I was put in touch with a captain of the JAL [Japan Airlines] 747 Freighter that had the close encounter with that huge spherical UFO over Anchorage, Alaska that the FAA was brought in on.

[See the testimony of Dr. Richard Haines and Senior FAA Official John Callahan. SG]

And of course even he succumbed to peer pressure and was relegated to a desk job in training and in obscurity.

I had more sightings in the airlines than I did in the military. I will mention one sighting that took place in January back in the late '60s. I was flying a night freighter 747 from L.A. to Kennedy. It was a crystal clear night and there was a partial moon so you could see. And I was sitting in the right seat and I saw two red lights, singular, non-blinking like they were flying in formation. I saw them out to my front right window. And I watched them about 30 degrees off my horizon and I'm flying at 37,000 feet so they are up pretty high. And they went from the eastern horizon to the western horizon in about three seconds. That's pretty darn fast; what they were, I have no idea.

In 1978 a friend of mine by the name of F. Lee Spiegel, who worked for one of the major radio networks in New York, evidently found out through information he received aboard one of our flights that I was particularly interested in the UFO phenomenon. I was contacted and asked to be a representative of the Airlines at the symposium for the peaceful uses of outer space at the United Nations in November of 1978. It was an important meeting at the UN and they took it very seriously.

I have a very personal friend that was a B-24 pilot during W.W.II that got into [the] O.S.S. And he was one of the first people into Japan after the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, Nagasaki. He ended up on Project Bluebook, Section 13, which I believe was the top-secret portion of that investigation. At the time he was a captain in the Air Force. He's in his late '70's now and he is still being carried on active duty as a captain. I don't know if he's being paid but if he's on active duty he should be a three star general with time and rank and he should be paid. And the whole reason that they have kept him on active duty is to keep his national security oath active because of what he knows. There are certain things that he will not talk to me about because of that security oath even though I had a top secret clearance with the Navy and we are both very interested in the same thing.

For whatever reason the Government, or those agencies of Government, deem necessary to protect their agendas, which obviously now, aren't our agendas. I think it is time for us to act, to end this charade. And to take whatever steps are necessary to insure that the human race evolves properly and enjoys the fruits of that evolution.

Testimony of Captain Massimo Poggi September 2000

Captain Poggi is a senior 747 captain for Alitalia . He relates an event where when flying from Rome to Sao Paolo in July of 1999 he witnessed a glowing green halo soaring past just 500 feet below his 747. The aircraft experienced a sudden jump when this UFO passed underneath. Very noisy static came through his headphones during this experience. At another time while flying over Turin Italy in 1992, he saw a distant elliptical sphere maintaining a very steady position relative to the clouds as if stationary. He saw this UFO through a spotting scope. After looking away to briefly speak to his co-pilot, he looked back and it was gone

My name is Massimo Poggi. I am a senior captain, of a Boeing 747 in Alitalia, Italy's airline.

On the 1st of July, 1999, I was flying from Rome to Sao Paolo, Brazil. Almost at the mid-Atlantic position we had a background noise on our headphones which was increasing and became very, very noisy with static. Then in a couple of seconds we saw a halo, a glowing green, glowing light, diffuse, just flying very fast below our nose, below our aircraft. At the same time the 747 had a sudden jump, just one, only one jump. Half a second later the noise and light had disappeared. That's the only jump we had in eleven hours [of] flight.

This object was very, very near. We were flying at 930 kilometers per hour, about 500 knots, and the object that crossed under us was a lot faster- I think 1,000 knots, or much more.

The object was below us but not by much- maybe 500 feet. It was very near, yes. For an aircraft flying, it was a near collision.

At another time I was flying over Turin, Italy, in 1992. I was the captain of a DC-9. My attention was caught by an aircraft far away that was maintaining its position in relation to the clouds as if it was stationary. After 20 years of flight experience, this appeared strange.

So I pick up from my bag a spotting scope and looking at it. I saw something like an elliptical sphere with a line crossing. This was not an aircraft turning. It was very steady. Just then air traffic control called my flight so I had to speak with my co-pilot briefly but when I looked again nothing was there. It just disappeared from its position and it was not in any other position. I searched for it everywhere. In a normal flight, if it was an aircraft that was flying it wouldn't disappear.

I have spoken in the past to military pilots who have said that they had scrambled to pursue UFOs. One told me about something he saw when he was at an Air Force base with other pilots and a sergeant and other military personnel. At this air base in northern Italy they saw something like a classic UFO that was landing just outside the airport perimeter where there was a wall around the airport.

They saw a little human-like figure but he wasn't touching the ground. And when he called to alert the other pilots to come, the little man jumped over the wall and the UFO lifted off and disappeared very, very fast. The sergeant, after twenty years, is still shocked by this.

I really believe the UFOs are real. It is extraterrestrial, of course. I hope it is extraterrestrial because if not, it would be very dangerous in human hands...

Testimony of Lieutenant Bob Walker -US Army
October 2000

Lieutenant Walker was a 2nd lieutenant in the Army. After World War II at a NASA (then NACA) open house he saw a 30-foot saucer-shaped craft which had been brought back from Germany for study. On another occasion he was piloting an aircraft for a TV station when a disc shaped object came in from the west. He had his camera and climbed to 12,000 feet to take some photos of it. After landing, he immediately had the pictures developed and enlarged. The object turned out to be a football shaped silver object with points at each end. His film was subsequently taken from him under unusual circumstances. In his testimony he also speaks of a time when he happened into a diner late at night near Ft. Campbell in Kentucky and overheard conversations from MPs about how a flying saucer had landed next to a nearby farmhouse and the MP's were there cordoning off the area. Creatures were present and were shot at by the frightened farmhouse owner.

I went to the University of Virginia where I received a B.S. Degree. I had participated in ROTC so at graduation I was commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in the regular army.

After the war [WWII] was over we began bringing a lot of things back from overseas. I remember they brought a German U-boat to the piers at Ft. Monroe. And during the same period of time, NACA [the predecessor of NASA] had an open house one weekend. I headed over to NACA to one of the wind tunnels because I was interested in aircraft. And in the wind tunnel was what I describe as a flying saucer. There was no doubt about the form of the craft that was there. It was 25 to 35 feet in diameter. Probably four or five feet in depth and thickness but then it just tapered down on the ends.

I got as close to it as maybe ten feet, and it was on a pedestal. It was propped up and I thought that is a strange craft. This is before the UFO interest began developing but this had been brought back from Germany and it was in the wind tunnel. My curiosity was how is this maneuvered. One section of the slant had a Plexiglas canopy over it. From what I was told, whoever was the pilot would lie down prone and fly this craft from a prone position and the plastic was over the edge of the flying saucer. An average pilot could get in.

As to how it was propelled, I don't know. I don't remember seeing exhaust. There were no propellers. It wasn't one of those lighter than air aircraft by any means. There was no visible means of propulsion.

Later, I worked for a TV station and often flew for them. So I always took a camera with me whenever I went up and this one particular afternoon I had been up probably a half an hour. I monitored the airport and the tower to make sure that I was not getting in anybody's way. I usually flew at around 2,000 feet. And I happened to catch a strange transmission from the tower. The tower said that there was a disc shaped object coming in from the west. And I thought, "Well this is a pretty good opportunity. I will take a look and see if I can see it." I guess now if I were to estimate altitude the object would be somewhere not less than 50,000 and on up.

So I called the tower after they were making people alert of what was coming over the area. And the tower said, "What do you want to do?" And I said, "If you don't mind, will you release me from 2,000 and let me go to 12,000, which was my maximum altitude without oxygen. And they said, "Go right ahead." And it took me several minutes to climb from two to twelve and I got up and about that time a silver ball was passing over and I took a number of shots on 35mm film as it was going over.

And the next thing that I knew it was gone. After I had gotten down, I asked what happened and they said, "Well, they had alerted the fighters at Langley to take a look at what it was. And by the time they could get scrambled and get in the air and get to that altitude, it was gone.

Since I was working at a TV station that was owned by the newspaper, I felt free to go to the newspaper and into the photo lab and I said, "I am really curious as to what we have got here. If you don't mind, let's develop this film right now."

So I gave it to the photographer in charge who was a friend and he developed it and you could see the silver ball in the picture. And I said, "Well, let's carry it a little bit further. If you don't mind, let's magnify this. Let's blow it up." I don't know how many times we blew it up until we got to the point where the silver ball filled the whole frame of an 8x10. It was fuzzy but it was a magnification of what we had just taken. And after we magnified it, we saw it wasn't a circular ball anymore. It was a football shaped object. It came to points on either end.

I didn't make it known to anybody but somehow somebody knew that I had this picture and I got a call, probably about six or eight weeks later. And they said, "We are into this area of gathering information on possible UFOs and I understand that you took some pictures and would you mind loaning them to us so that we could just take a look." I didn't ask for credentials or anything like that and I said, "Well, in addition to pictures I also have kind of an interesting collection of news items that have come over AP for the past five years." And, they said, "Well, bring those along. We are interested. We would like to look at that."

And they gave me an address over in the Fan district, in Richmond. It was one of the older homes and I went in and the man who had called me introduced himself and said, "I am real grateful that you brought these over. We will take good care of them. We will get them back to you." Didn't say whom he was with. He never identified himself.

The house was not furnished as though it was a home. It was very lightly furnished. It was an older home and didn't have anything in it of any value, as I recall. No antiques and no oriental rugs or anything. In fact, it was kind of shabby. It kind of made me curious as to what he did and who else was in the house. But I turned it over to him and I thought, "Well, call me when you are finished or else I will come back and get it." And he didn't call me for about two or three weeks. And I thought, "Well, that is enough time."

Since I didn't hear from him and I didn't have his telephone number, I thought I would go on back to the house and pick it up. Well, I got to the house and the house was empty. I had no idea who the person was. I was very naive- more so because I didn't keep a negative on it and I didn't keep a print. These were original things that I had. The newspaper didn't keep a copy either because when we did that we were just doing it for our own interest. It wasn't for print or publication. And they disappeared from my life forever.

But this UFO was large enough for me to see for many, many miles away. This was a clear day. I think it was an evening in June or July when the weather was very tranquil. The direction of flight was just so direct. There was no floating around. It had a course and it was sticking directly to it. I could see it but it was above the horizon so it could have been at least a hundred miles or more away. It was over me from the time I would go to 2,000 to 12,000 feet.

Another time, I was interviewing the Director of NASA at Langley and we began talking about flying saucers. I got the typical nebulous but not evasive answers. And one of the things we were talking about was different aircraft and UFOs and we were kind of blending the subject in together very nicely. So I said, "Well what about aircraft in the future? What are they going to be like? And he said, "We have aircraft now. We have vehicles or aircraft now that we could actually fly but they are so unique and so unorthodox that the public would not accept them.

He was explaining that these craft were not conventional. I guess he was referring to the fact, no rudder, no tail, no wings or whatever.

Around 1956 or 1957, I was stationed at Ft. Knox, Kentucky. I was at Ft. Knox up until 11:00 one night and then got in my car and drove to Ft. Campbell where I had some collateral duties. I got into Ft. Campbell at about 1:00 in the morning. There was a little diner that stayed open all night and as I went to the diner for coffee and donuts that night before I went back to the barracks, I noticed that it was pretty full. And I thought, "Well this is kind of strange." And MPs were in town. And I said, "What is going on? Have you had an accident, an aircraft down or something like that?" No...

Everybody was real excited that a flying saucer had landed behind a nearby farmhouse and from bits and pieces I was trying to pull in as much as I could. You could not get there because they had it cordoned off. MPs had totally surrounded the property. I learned that this flying saucer had landed and the creatures in the flying saucer had jumped over the house and had landed in the front of the house. The people in the house were frightened to death. One of them grabbed a shotgun and as one of the creatures went up to the front door, he fired a shotgun through the screen door.

The creatures from the flying saucer decided that this was not a very good place to be so they ran back out. They jumped over the house and went to the back wherever the flying saucer was located and took off and disappeared. MPs were there and I am sure that this is in a military report somewhere. They were from Ft. Campbell because this is the nearest base and the ones who were outside were from the base also. The state police were out there also...

Testimony of Mr. Don Bockelman - US Army
September 2000

Mr. Bockelman was a Launch Area Electronics Technician for the US Army. He was also trained as a systems analyst and worked on Nike Hercules missiles. For two years he worked for Honeywell making nuclear tipped torpedoes. Mr. Bockelman heard numerous first hand accounts from various radar operators that they were seeing extremely fast targets moving at 3500 miles an hour. Some of these were making impossibly small-radius turns. At one time he witnessed an attempted to shoot one down with an air defense missile near Mount Vernon, WA.

I was trained by the U.S. Army as a Launch Area Electronics Technician. I worked on Nike Hercules batteries for two and a half years in Europe in the late 1960s. I was also trained as a systems analyst, to analyze and to troubleshoot and fix any problems that would occur in the launch area. I also worked in the IFS, which is Integrated Fire Control on that site for about seven months. I worked for Honeywell here in Seattle for two years making nuclear tipped torpedoes.

There are technicians and operators dealing with really high speed, very mobile targets which were UFOs on radar. I heard a number of those accounts from operators. They were stationed at different places around the world. Integrated Fire Control is where the radars were stationed in relation to the missiles and it is a whole bunch of radars. They would recount stories where vehicles would come in and they would track them and pass them off and they would be going 700 miles an hour and accelerate to 3,500 miles in the atmosphere quite rapidly. It was off the scale in terms of what the technology for our potential Russian targets were. It was off the scale. I want to say that these operators are very adept. They are trained to determine the difference between radar strikes and any atmospheric disturbances that can approximate targets. They are experts at it.

So when they were tracking targets, they were tracking the actual physical objects in the atmosphere. They were 100% convinced that there were physical targets that were in the atmosphere and were involved in a variety of different types of travel. That was in the late 1960s that I was hearing these reports. The reports went back into the 1950s because a lot of the older operators had been on Ajax sites and they were tracking them. Primarily, the reports that I got were from the United States. The military official position is completely opposite of what people who operate very sophisticated radar systems routinely perceive.

After leaving the military, one evening I was sitting in my living room and it was in October of 1978 and I had all the lights off and I was just sitting there letting my mind wander and quite abruptly all of a sudden four amber lights started shining in the room and filling it with a diffuse amber light. Needless to say, I turned around quite rapidly to determine what it was that I was seeing. And there were three lights who were approximately equal distance from each other and a fourth one off of the equal distance spacing a little bit, but in the same plane.

Then this jet came from due west. I saw this object while I was standing on the back porch of my house, and it was then attacked and fired on by an air defense missile. As it turned out it was a high explosive missile right at the target. Shrapnel was falling to the ground. It had exploded and the object was accelerating away at a mind-boggling speed away from where the attack occurred. The actual attack on the craft occurred about ten miles east of Sedro Woolley. I would say about three miles north of the area called Lyman [and] Hamilton.

About the objects which we tracked on radar while I was in the military, outside of the speed, the thing that was most impressive about these targets is their capacity to have abrupt turns. People who are in air defense look at mass and turning radius. We had nothing that was capable of matching their capacity for minuscule turning radiuses. We are talking about virtually no radius turns at high speeds. 2,000 miles an hour and right angle turns. And not only turns but descents and ascents. They would descend rapidly. It didn't seem to make any difference to them in which direction where they went.

They would give you specific orders to not disclose to anybody ever. If it was a large event, then the reaction was by order you can never speak about it.

November 14th, 1998, I was sitting in my front room again only this time I was watching a movie. The lights were off in my house. I saw an object and my estimates were that it was approximately a mile across, 1,100 feet thick. Moving at approximately 600 miles an hour without sound. I did get a very, very clear view of its shape because that evening it was clear and the moon was out. I could see its shape very well. There were hundreds of lights on it.

It was roughly triangular shape. A little bit of a truncated triangular shape because at the backside it was like a triangle which is kind of cut off. I could see the sides of it. There were rows of lights going up the sides. There were rows of lights going around the perimeter. There were rows of lights going across the bottom. I saw a number of silent jets then come from the south in single file at four-minute intervals and fly through the flight path [of the UFO]. The jets were so quiet you almost can't hear them on tapes. I have never seen this particular model of jets and I am pretty good at identifying military jets.

The second jet I filmed. When he was flying through the flight path of the object, he turned on a bright light. I can only imagine what the purpose of it was, but four different jets came at four-minute intervals. All in the same exact flight pattern.

During the period 9 through 13 March, three unexplainable radar contacts have been made by equipment located in the Canal Zone. On two occasions, aircraft were vectored into the area by the radar sites, with negative results. Interrogation of scope operators has indicated that returns were strong and easily distinguished from cloud formations. Returns were definite when associated with clouds. Generally the tracks were triangular with speed of movement very erratic. Movement appears at times to be evasive action. The incident of 9 - 10 March was tracked by gun laying radar. During period of observation, radar maintenance personnel checked out their system thoroughly. In addition, lock was broken, however, the equipment immediately picked up target and locked on. A second tracking radar situated on Taboga Island, locked on the return. Target generally remained in same area half way between radar sites. Personnel stationed at sites reported seeing red and green lights but no noise was associated with lights. Visibility was good. However, lights were visible for only a short period. A commercial flight volunteered to investigate target. He was vectored within a hundred yards of target and reported negative sighting. Target faded out at 0208R on 10 March.

At 10:12R on 10 March, search radar reported unidentified target west of canal. A T-33 from Howard Field was sent to investigate. Negative results. Aircraft was in the immediate area of target with negative sighting. Contact with target was broken at 14:15R.

In accordance with Department of the Army Intelligence Collection Memorandum #200-72B-1, dated 6 August 1957, subject: "Unconventional Aircraft", the following information is submitted:

1. On 10 March 1958, Capt. Harold E. Stahlman, Operations Officer, 764th Anti-Aircraft Operations Center (AAOC), Fort Clayton Canal Zone, reported information concerning the sighting of an unidentified flying object. At 2003R, 9 March 1958, Stahlman, as Deputy Defense Commander for Anti-Aircraft Defenses, was notified at his home by the Operations Duty Officer, AAOC, that the AAOC had received a radar report of an unidentified aircraft approaching the Pacific side of the Isthmus of Panama. Stahlman arrived at the AAOC at approximately 2008R.

During the radar tracking of the first blip which appeared on the radar screen, two additional blips were observed at 2045R. The first echo was identified as a Chilean Airlines aircraft which landed at Tocumen Airport, Tocumen, Republic of Panama. The two other blips, which were not identified, indicated that the two objects were in the vicinity of Fort Kobbe, Canal Zone. A civilian aircraft in the general vicinity of the objects made a visual search of the area with negative results. The original blips were picked up by Search Radar and then transferred to the Track Radar Unit located at Flamenco Island, Fort Amador, Canal Zone. This unit was able to lock on the unidentified objects and the following information was obtained:

Number of Objects:	Two, approximately one hundred yards apart.
Duration of Radar Observation:	2003R, 9 March 1958, to 0208R, 10 March 1958.
Location of Radar:	Battery D, 764th AAA Bn, Flamenco Island
Location of Object:	LJ 2853. (Geo-Ref, Military Grid Reference System)
Prevailing Weather:	Clear visibility unlimited, no wind reported.
Direction of Flight:	Average angle of elevation, 365°, Azimuth, 330 mils.
Manner of Flight:	Steady, slight circular path over the vicinity of Fort Kobbe, Canal Zone.
Altitude:	Varied from two to ten thousand feet. Average of seven thousand feet.

An attempt was made by members of the Radar Site, Flamenco Island, to observe the objects by searchlights. When the light touched the objects, they traveled from an altitude of two thousand feet to ten thousand feet in five to ten seconds.

--	-----------------------	-------------------

This was such a rapid movement, that the Track Radar, which was locked on target, broke the Track Lock and was unable to keep up with the ascent of the objects. As Track Radar can only be locked on a solid object, which was done in the case of the two unidentified flying objects, it was assumed that the objects were solid. The possibility that the sightings might have been weather balloons was discarded when the Air Force was contacted and stated that no balloons were in the air at that time. (F-3)

2. On 10 March 1958, Capt. Stahlman made another report concerning the sighting of an unidentified flying object by Search Radar located on Taboga Island, Republic of Panama. The following information was obtained in regard to the sightings:

Number of Objects:	One.
Duration of Radar Observation:	1012R to 1412R, 10 March 1958.
Location of Radar:	Taboga Island Radar Site.
Location of Object:	KL 1646. (Geo-Ref, Military Grid Reference System)
Prevailing Weather:	Partly cloudy.
Manner of Flight:	From an erratic to a triangular shaped flight pattern.
Altitude:	Undeterminable due to radar system used.
Speed:	Variable; from hovering to approximately one thousand miles per hour.

Track Radar indicated that the object moved away from two United States Air Force jet aircraft that were approaching. At that time the speed of the object was calculated at approximately one thousand miles per hour. The use of Track Radar was terminated at 1412R.

3. On 11 March 1958, Lt. Roy M. Strom, Operations Officer, 764th AAA Bn, Fort Clayton, Canal Zone, reported information received from a Pan-American Airlines Pilot concerning an unidentified flying object. At approximately 0400R, 11 March 1958, the pilot of an incoming aircraft C-509, a Pan American Airlines DC-6, observed an unidentified flying object 12 degrees North on Fox Trot route. The object appeared larger than the aircraft and was traveling in a Southeasterly direction.

At the same time Lt. Strom reported that an unidentified flying object was picked up by Hawk Radar. The object was plotted twice at approximately 0508R heading Northwest at LK 3858. On the third plot, at 0517R, the object had moved to LK 5434 in a Southwesterly direction. Eleven minutes elapsed during the confirmation of the three plots. At 0528R, the object was sighted at LK 4303. Incoming aircraft C-509 was in the same area and Hawk Radar was asked if it was the same track that was picked up previously. The answer was negative. The object was last plotted at LJ 3254 at 0536R, still traveling in a Southwesterly direction. Radar contact was lost at that time. The size, shape, or altitude of the object could not be determined by radar. (P-6)

G2 USARCARIB COMMENT: DAICM #200-72B-1 mentioned above requires that:

"The Headquarters of the nearest Major Air Command should be notified of sightings which come to the attention of Army personnel", referenced DAICM continues, "Air Force Commanders have instructions from the Department of the Air Force which cover reporting on subject (AFR-200-2: "Unidentified Flying Objects Reporting, Short Title: UFOB) (U)". This office continues to report information as developed.

EXTRACTS FROM THE LOG AT MOVEMENT & IDENTIFICATION SECTION ADCC

- 19:59 Unknown aircraft flying Tango Route inbound. No known aircraft in area but one advised by Tocumen, WEZ BLB ATC.
- 20:45 Unidentified blip believed to be weather balloon picked up between Albrook and Taboga. Appears to be orbiting. No air traffic in area at all. Advised ATC of possibility of object interfering with air traffic.
- 20:45 Advised that a balloon had been released earlier in the evening at approximately 1830R but should be down south-east of Albrook at present time.
- 21:40 Tower advised P-501 (Pan American Flight) is cleared by Albrook ATC for DF instructions in order to avoid object. Flight P501 will cross the canal over Albrook.
- 23:45 Distance of object from D Battery (Flamingo) is 4870 yards, height 3.5 thousand feet. At the present time, a searchlight from harbor entrance control point is being used to aid in identification purposes, to be executed by one AF-Naval crash boat.
- 23:55 Object now at 6.0 feet moving away very rapidly to the southwest.
- 24:00 Radar advises that as soon as searchlight was employed, the object became evasive. Object now at 10.0 feet, 7800 yards from site. Two returns, one at 10.0 feet, other at 08.

10 March

- 00:44 Braniff Flight 400 reports negative sighting of object during brief investigation. Radar reported aircraft was approximately 100 yards from object.
- 00:55 Radar reports two targets now approximately 100 yards apart. Braniff Flight 400 landed at 0047.
- 02:10 Radar contact lost.
- 10:12 Unknown aircraft at KJ1646, speed 290K. No known aircraft in area. Check with Tocumen, Albrook, Howard, ATC & CAA. Blip very practical, has reached speed of 900K then slows to a complete stop for several minutes before moving again.
- 10:30 Major Davis at Howard Operations advised of UFO. He will go up and take a look.
- 11:20 AF 5289 (T-33) airborne to check UFO. UFO was observed

Unusual UFOB Report

1. The attached copy of a cable is a preliminary report from Pepperrell Air Force Base, Newfoundland reporting on what appears to be an unusual "unidentified flying object" sighting.

2. Essentially, the "object" was apparently simultaneously observed by a tanker aircraft (KC 97) pilot (visually) and by a ground radar (type unknown) site (electronically). While such dual (visual and electronic) sightings of UFOBs are reported from time to time, this particular report is somewhat unique in that:

a. the "pilot of Archie 29 maintained visual contacts with object calling direction changes of object to (radar) site by radio. Direction changes correlated exactly with those painted on scope by controller."

b. In previous cases the dual (visual and electronic) sightings are mostly of a few minutes duration at most. This one was observed by radar, at least, for 49 minutes.

3. It is reasonable to believe that more information will be available on this when complete report (AF Form 112) is issued.

Introduction

(transcribed and edited from an oral presentation by Dr. Greer)

This section deals with the Strategic Air Command and UFO events involving nuclear facilities. I wish to emphasize again that the witnesses we have here are diverse. They range from the Atomic Energy Commission to people who have been at Strategic Air Command facilities and at missile launch control facilities throughout the United States and Canada. These witnesses give unmistakably clear testimony about the fact that these extraterrestrial vehicles appear to be quite concerned with our weapons of mass destruction. And in fact, more than one of these witnesses have stated to me that they believe that these extraterrestrial vehicles were there because they were very concerned that we might blow ourselves up or that we might begin to go into space and be a threat someday to other civilizations.

I believe this is very important because, while none of these witnesses has stated that there ever was any hostile action taken by these objects, it is quite clear that they are concerned about what we may do with weapons of mass destruction. And this speaks to something very profound: That we have reached the point where the only possible future is one that is peaceful. The weapons are too powerful and the stakes are too high to advance any further and contemplate the use of such weapons. We must advance forward into space without using these vast weapons within our arsenal against any life form. The extraterrestrial civilizations, which appear to be monitoring our activity and have been doing so for decades, may indeed have this as one of their chief concerns. And it is very likely that entry into inter-planetary society has as its primary requirement the ability for a people to advance into space peacefully. For we are not talking now of muskets and canons and swords but of thermonuclear weapons, pulsed laser weapons, and exotic technologies which can rip the fabric of time-space. It must be clear to all that the only survivable future is a peaceful one. This peace is the hallmark of the maturation of the human race.

It is also possible that people within the national military command structure, as well as the national security apparatus of the United States and other countries, have misinterpreted some of the actions from these extraterrestrial vehicles as a violation of our airspace or our sovereignty. I think we must take a wider look at this and consider the fact that if we were to come across a planet which, within a hundred years, had gone from an agrarian civilization to one capable of the early stages of space flight and which had thousands of thermonuclear devices capable of destroying worlds, that perhaps we would be concerned as well. I think that we have to begin to look in the mirror as a people and ask ourselves what we should be doing to ensure a peaceful future for our planet and also to guarantee that we keep these weapons out of space forever.

In discussing this issue about the Strategic Air Command facilities and nuclear events, you will learn that on some occasions these objects, which have hovered over control launch facilities or missile silos, have been able to take these devices off-line: That is, they have been able to render inert intercontinental ballistic missiles. I do not believe that this is a sign of any hostility on their part but their way of saying, "Please don't destroy this beautiful planet; and know this: we will not let you destroy ours." I think it's very important for people to understand that such actions however, may have been misinterpreted by certain authorities within the vacuum of secrecy and this is something we must look at very carefully as a civilization. What happens within the darkness of secrecy? Secrecy grows on itself, and it creates an information and perspective vacuum where there's not enough give and take with people of differing views or from different walks of life. In that milieu, it's very easy for paranoia and misinterpretation to set in and that is one of the great inherent risks of obsessive secrecy - the kind of secrecy which President Eisenhower warned us about in January of 1961.

Testimony of Capt. Robert Salas - US Air Force
December 2000

Capt. Salas graduated from the Air Force Academy and spent seven years in active duty from 1964 to 1971. He also held positions at Martin Marietta and Rockwell and spent 21 years at the FAA. In the Air Force, he was an air traffic controller and a missile launch officer as well as an engineer on the Titan 3 missiles. He testifies about a UFO incident on the morning of March 16, 1967 where 16 nuclear missiles simultaneously became non-operational at two different launch facilities immediately after guards saw UFOs hovering above. The guards could not identify these objects even though they were only about 30 feet away. The Air Force did an extensive investigation of the incidents and could not find a probable cause. At a debriefing about the incident, an officer from the Air Force Office of Special Investigations required him to sign a non-disclosure form and told him that he was not to talk about the event to anyone including his family or other military staff. At a time during the Cold War when minor technical anomalies were openly communicated amongst the staff, this incident was not and to this day Capt. Salas thinks this to be very unusual.

RS: Capt. Robert Salas

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

RS: My name is Robert L. Salas and I graduated from the Air Force Academy and spent about seven and a half years in the Air Force on active duty from 1964 to 1971. Then I went to work for Martin Marietta first in Denver and then Rockwell International here in the southern California area. I worked for the FAA in 1974 and worked for them for about 21 years and retired in 1995 from federal service.

In the Air Force I was an air traffic controller- we called it ground control intercept controller. And then I was a missile launch officer. After that I was an engineer on the Titan 3 propulsion system out of Los Angeles Air Force station.

The UFO incident, happened on the morning of March 16, 1967. I was on duty along with my commander Fred Mywald. We were both on duty at Oscar Flight as part of the 490th strategic missile squad and there are five launch control facilities assigned to that particular squadron. We were at Oscar Flight.

It was still dark out and we're sixty feet underground [at the ICBM launch control facility]. It was early in the morning and I received a call from my topside security guard who's the flight security controller and he said that he and some of the guards had been observing some strange lights flying around the site around the launch control facility. He said they were acting very unusual just flying around, and I said, "You mean UFO? He said, well, he didn't know what they were but they were lights and were flying around. They were not airplanes; they weren't making any noise. They were not helicopters; they were making some very strange maneuvers and he couldn't explain it. Well, I just kind of shook my head and said, "Call me if anything more important happens."

Basically we just ended the conversation. It wasn't more than a few minutes- maybe a half hour later- and he calls back and this time he's very frightened; I can tell by the tone of his voice he's very shook up. He says, "Sir, there's a glowing red object hovering right outside the front gate - I'm looking at it right now. I've got all the men out here with their weapons drawn". Of course he was very disturbed while he was telling me this; he was very excited.

I didn't know what to make of it but he wanted me to give him instructions or orders, tell him what to do. And I think I said something like, "Make sure the perimeter fence is secure." Then right away he said, "I've got to go sir, one of these guards has been injured", and he hung up.

I immediately went over to my commander who was taking a nap ~ we have a little cot down there for rest periods ~ and I was telling him about the telephone call we just received. As I was relating this to him our missiles started shutting down one by one. By shutting down, I mean they went into a "no-go" condition meaning they could not be launched. So we get bells and whistles- a red light no-go condition.

As I recalled at the time, it seemed like every one of them shut down but later in recalling this incident with my commander Mywald, he said he felt we only lost maybe seven or eight of these weapons.

SG: Can you describe what these weapons were, for the record?

RS: These weapons were Minuteman One missiles and were of course nuclear-tipped warhead missiles.

As they started shutting down, immediately he gets up and we both start querying the status board. We've got the ability to query and determine what the cause of the shutdowns were. As I recall, most of them were guidance and control system failures. And then he started reporting to the command post. In the meantime I called upstairs to find out what the status was of this object and the guard said, well, the object has left- it just left at high speed.

The injured guard was apparently trying to climb this barbed wire but it had nothing to do with the UFO firing anything or injuring this airman. I asked him what the object looked like and all he could say was that it was an oval shape glowing a reddish orange around the object.

SG: How far away and what altitude was it?

RS: Well, he said it was hovering right over the fence and that would have been within about 30 feet from him. The fence was maybe eight feet high.

There was also another incident that happened within a week of this, just after, where there were radar reports and quite a few more witnesses.

[See the corroborating testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Arne Arneson]

The Air Force did an extensive investigation of the entire incident and was not able to come up with a probable cause for the shutdowns. And I've got quite a few witnesses that will testify to that- we've got a couple of people who worked on the investigative team- and I've got correspondence from the man who actually organized the investigative team. There was no viable explanation for this [shutdown of multiple ICBMs]. Each missile is basically self-supporting. Most of them are powered by commercial power but each missile has its own power generator.

The only connection between the capsule and the missile sites themselves is what we call SIN-lines or sensitive information network lines. They're basically buried cables but inside the capsule itself and these lines go to the missiles directly. The missiles are not connected to each other so having a fault at one site would not affect missiles at another location.

At our site anywhere from six to eight went down but they went down in rapid succession which again is an extremely rare happening. We rarely had more than one missile go down for any reason at all. And this was very rare. Weather was ruled out. Like I said an extensive investigation was done and power surges were ruled out. There was only one possibility that was looked at by one of the Boeing engineers that did some test in the laboratory and he thought that some kind of an electromagnetic force or field might have caused the signal to go. But it would have had to go through the buried cable to each of these missiles.

After I talked to my guard upstairs, my commander talked to the command post. When he finished talking to the command post he turned to me and said, "The same thing occurred at ECHO Flight." ECHO Flight is another squadron, I'd say probably 50 - 60 miles away from our location but they had the same sort of thing happen. They had UFOs that were hovering, not at the launch control facility but at the actual launch facilities where the missiles are located. They had some maintenance and security people out there at the time and they observed the UFOs at those sites. Now they lost all ten of their weapons- all ten.

SG: This is around the same time?

RS: It was the same morning. So that morning we lost anywhere from between 16 to 18 ICBMs at the same time UFOs were in the area and were observed by airmen. Those missiles were down the entire day because we've got testimony from Colonel Don Crawford, who relieved the crew at ECHO Flight and he was there when the missiles were being brought up to alert status and he said it took the whole day. So I'm assuming it took our missiles all day to be brought back up also. When we got relieved, I went upstairs and the first thing I did was look in the guard's eye and say, "Hey, were you telling me the truth about this object?" He swore up and down he was telling the truth. I believed him for a couple of reasons. I knew he was frightened when he called me down there and then when I looked him in the eye and he told me about the situation I certainly believed him.

I wrote up a report about this incident; it was in my log and I turned it in. When we got to the base we had to report to our squadron commander right away. And in that room with my squadron commander was a fellow from AFOSI (we had an Air Force Office of Special Investigations on the base). He was there in the office with the commander. He asked for my logs and he wanted a quick briefing although it seemed to me he knew pretty much what had happened already. But we gave him a quick briefing and then he asked us both to sign a non-disclosure agreement saying this was classified information- we were not to release this to anybody, and that was it. We couldn't talk; he told us we could not talk about this to anyone, including any of the other crews, our spouses, our family, even amongst each other.

That was the end of that. I was there at Malmstrom [phonetic sp] for another two years after that and in that time we were never given a de-briefing on any of the incidents- neither the ECHO incident or our own, which is very unusual because we got briefed every morning on any of the anomalies that were going on with the equipment. We got briefed and we discussed these technical issues that were going on with the weapons but we never heard anything else about these incidents. And these were major happenings. These were major happenings.

I've got a copy of a telex which we received under FOIA coming from SAC headquarters and coming to Malmstrom and other bases right after the morning that happened saying that this incident was of extreme concern to SAC headquarters because they couldn't explain it. Nobody could explain what happened. And yet we never got de-briefed. And we were cleared for very high classification because these are nuclear weapons we're dealing with.

We did get the security incursion alarms at those sites when the missile went down. That is unusual because usually when a missile went down for something like guidance failure, we wouldn't get security incursion alarms, which means a perimeter is breached, an object crossed the fence, or something broke the security alarm system that we had on the perimeter of the launch facility. I did send out guards to a couple of those facilities to investigate that.

The reason I think this story is very significant is because, going back to August of 1966 at Minot, ND, a very similar thing happened at one of the launch control facilities at Minot Air Force Base. They had the same kind of weapon system that we had- they had M-1 missiles. This [UFO] was observed on radar, there was some communication failure and the object was observed over the launch control facility.

That happened in August 1966 and that's a well documented incident. About a week prior to my incident, in March 1967, I've got a record of a call from one of the security guards who was out roaming looking at the launch facilities and saw an object very similar to what I just described over the launch facility. The commander reported it to command post. About a week to ten days after our incident, there's a very well documented incident that happened at Malstrom. In this case, near Malstrom Air Force Base, a UFO was tracked by radar and was observed at relatively close range by a truck driver and highway patrolman. The Air Force did an investigation and there's an extensive report on the Air Force investigation of this UFO sighting because it flew around the base and very close to the base.

So this is a whole series of things that happened having to do with the same kind of weapon system, the Minuteman Missile.

The reports that were made to me by my guards were official reports. These were not jokes- they were not meant to be anything but official reports because we were dealing with strategic weapons during the Cold War, during the Vietnam War. They were professional, these guards, and they were not about to joke about weapons being down, about what they were seeing. So these were not rumors, they were official reports. If they were recanted for any reason, these men should have been court-martialed for giving false reports during a very sensitive incident. And none of that happened.

Bob Kominski headed up the organization to look at all aspects of these shut-downs. Kominski relates to me in writing that at some point he was told by his boss that the Air Force said, "Stop the investigation; do no more on this and in addition do not write a final report." Again, this is very unusual especially in light of the fact that CINC-SAC headquarters was stating that this was of extreme importance to find out exactly what happened here. And yet, the head of the investigative team was told during the investigation to stop the investigation and not write a final report.

I heard that many of the guards that reported this incident were sent off to Vietnam, as a matter of fact. I know for a fact- this I can attest to- that one of the guards that I sent out to the launch facilities and observed an object came back and was very shaken by the experience. And he was taken off guard duty from then on. He was sent somewhere else because he was too shaken by the experience.

Testimony of Lt. Colonel Dwyne Arneson, US Air Force (retired)
September 2000

Lt. Col. Arneson spent 26 years in the USAF. He had an above top-secret SCI-TK (Special Compartmented Tango Kilo) clearance. He worked as a computer systems analyst for Boeing and was the Director of Logistics at Wright-Patterson AFB. At one point he was the cryptography officer for the entire Ramstein AFB in Germany and while there one day he received a classified message that said that a UFO had crashed in Spitsbergen Norway. While at Malmstrom AFB in Montana he again saw a message that said that a metallic circular UFO was seen hovering near the missile silos and that all the missiles went off-line so that they could not be launched.

DA: Lt. Col. Dwyne Arneson

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

DA: My name is Dwyne Arneson. I was born in Rochester, Minnesota back in 1937, and went to Rochester High School. From there I graduated and went on to St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota where I got my degree in physics and math. Upon graduation, I competed for Officer's Training School in the Air Force and then was selected to get a commission, went to Officers Training School, and was commissioned back in 1962. I went on to spend twenty-six years in the U.S. Air Force as a communication-electronics officer and retired in 1986. I had assignments all over the world, including Vietnam, Europe - you name it, I've probably been there.

I held a top-secret SCI-TK clearance. That means Special Compartmented Tango Kilo information, which is above top secret, if you will. It takes a special investigation to get that sort of a clearance. Upon getting out of the Air Force, and retiring as a colonel in 1986, I applied for work at Boeing, and I came to work for Boeing as a computer systems analyst, and I've been working since 1987 in that capacity with Boeing. I retired in 1986 as Director of Logistics at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

I had various opportunities to see things that come through my perusal. One instance was back in 1962 when I was a lieutenant at Ramstein Air Force Base in Germany. I was the crypto officer for the entire Ramstein Air Base. I was a top-secret control officer. And in that capacity, I happened to see a classified message go through my com center, which said that "A UFO has crashed on the Island of Spitsbergen, Norway, and a team of scientists are coming to investigate it."

I do not recall where the message came from, where it was going to, because in that capacity we were oftentimes told, "What you see here, leave here." But I can recall seeing that.

The next thing that comes to mind is one that took place in 1967. I was in charge of the Communication Center, the Twentieth Air Division at Malmstrom

Air Force Base, Montana. I was again the top-secret control officer there. I dispatched all the nuclear launch authentications to the SAC missile crews, so — I had a very good top-secret background.

One day, I happened to see a message that came through my communications center. There again, I cannot quote the date, where it came from, where it was going to, but I do recall reading it and seeing it. It said, basically, that "A UFO was seen near missile silos"... and it was hovering. It said that the crew going on duty and the crew coming off duty all saw the UFO just hovering in mid-air. It was a metallic circular object and from what I understand, the missiles were all shut down.

And then later on, years later while working here at Boeing, I heard from a man named, Bob Kaminisky, who had retired from Boeing and he said, "Yes, I was the engineer assigned by Boeing to come up and check out the missiles to make certain that they in fact had not gone down upon their own." And he said, "I gave them a complete bill of health." And I worked for Bob in Boeing and I was a good friend of his.

Even before he passed away, we had many, many conversations on this subject, and he was just a very incredible man.

[See the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Bob Salas regarding these ICBM missile events at Malmstrom AFB. SG]

What I mean by "missiles going down," is that they went dead. And something turned those missiles off, and so they could not be put in a mode for launching.

At another time, when I was Commander of a radar squadron up in Maine, at Caswell Air Force Station, Maine, we were right next door to Loring Air Force Base. It was where they launch the B-52s and the KC tankers and things like that. I had a lot of security friends over there at Loring who told me about UFOs hovering near the nuclear weapon storage area on Loring Air Force Base.

[This corroborates the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Joe Wojtecki. See that testimony regarding a significant event at Loring AFB. SG]

A little bit of background, not to belabor the point, but ~ when I was assigned as Director of Logistics at Wright-Patterson, I left the wife and kids back in Oklahoma City. It was my daughter's last year of high school, so I went out there on my own for about a year. And in the search for an apartment out there, I came across this lady, Chris Weedon by name, who had a little five-acre English manor outside of Dayton. She had three rooms for rent, three bedrooms. So I rented one, and I kind of became her son. I helped her cut the grass, I mowed the lawn, etc. She was up in her seventies.

Her husband was a Lieutenant Colonel Spencer Weedon. Now, he died about twelve years prior to that, and from everybody that I met, they said he was just a brilliant guy. He had a photographic mind, and he was one of the lead investigators of UFOs at Wright-Patterson. In fact I have a tape at home, produced back in the 1950s, of a debate between Spencer Weedon and that Major Donald Keyhoe. It was done in the Armstrong Circle Theater. So he was her husband.

The one person I happened to meet and took quite a shine to, and he to me, was a Dr. Adolph Raum. Now, he at that time was eighty-three years old. I think he has since died. One night after supper and after a few martinis, I jokingly asked Adolph, "What do you know about the little gray men that are supposedly on ice here at Wright-Patterson?" And I distinctly recall his face turning ashen white, his voice got very stern, and he said, "Arne," he says, "all I can tell you is that they were not weather balloons, and we will not talk about it again. Do you understand?" And there was no uncertainty in my mind that we wouldn't talk about this further. He was from Switzerland originally. He was on the first A-Bomb test in the U.S. and he knew Dr. Oppenheimer personally. Even though I had a top-secret clearance, there were areas that we just couldn't get near, and we just could not find anything about some of these areas at Wright-Patterson that may have held some bodies or ~ who knows what they held? And a lot of my technicians that worked for me as a communication electronics officer, would tell stories about objects going across their radar screens at fantastic speeds. Nothing we had could go that fast.

SG: What years would this have been?

DA: Well, this was back in the mid-seventies when I had that radar squadron commander's job at Caswell Air Force Station, Maine. That's when these technicians would tell me about events like that.

As a commander of a radar squadron, you have people who are operational types as well as the people who are the technician types, who actually maintain the radars. In fact, in that capacity, we would take and have battle exercises. We were the only radar squadron in the U.S. under operational control of the Canadian NORAD Division. Now, you'd see the B-52s coming down from Canada, the fighter interceptors being directed against them, or whatnot. So these men knew how fast things were flying. They knew the speed of bombers. They knew the speed of the current fighter force that we had. The radar technicians I had, the maintenance men working for me — they were in the position to say, "Yes, that scope was in A-1 condition - or the radar is in A-1 condition." So things could check out. The experience of the operational types, the experience of the maintenance guys — they confirmed that the system was operating perfectly. And they said, "That thing is going two or three thousand miles an hour." I heard it from different sources that related similar events at different radar stations throughout the U.S., not just at Caswell Air Force Station. We had radar stations back in those days all over the U.S. and stories like that are not uncommon at all.

If you think about it, all this vast universe we have, if we're the only intelligent life here, God has sure got bad judgment...

b. 24th NORAD Region Senior Director's Log (Malmstrom AFB, Montana).

7 Nov 75 (1035Z) - Received a call from the 341st Strategic Air Command Post (SAC CP), saying that the following missile locations reported seeing a large red to orange to yellow object: M-1, L-3, LIMA and L-6. The general object location would be 10 miles south of Moore, Montana, and 20 miles east of Buffalo, Montana. Commander and Deputy for Operations (DO) informed.

7 Nov 75 (1203Z) - SAC advised that the LCP at Harlowton, Montana, observed an object which emitted a light which illuminated the site driveway.

7 Nov 75 (1319Z) - SAC advised K-1 says very bright object to their east is now southeast of them and they are looking at it with 10x50 binoculars. Object seems to have lights (several) on it, but no distinct pattern. The orange/gold object overhead also has small lights on it. SAC also advises female civilian reports having seen an object bearing south from her position six miles west of Lewistown.

7 Nov 75 (1327Z) - L-1 reports that the object to their northeast seems to be issuing a black object from it, tubular in shape. In all this time, surveillance has not been able to detect any sort of track except for known traffic.

7 Nov 75 (1355Z) - K-1 and L-1 report that as the sun rises, so do the objects they have visual.

7 Nov 75 (1429Z) - From SAC CP: As the sun rose, the UFOs disappeared. Commander and DO notified.

8 Nov 75 (0635Z) - A security camper team at K-4 reported UFO with white lights, one red light 50 yards behind white light. Personnel at K-1 seeing same object.

8 Nov 75 (0645Z) - Height personnel picked up objects 10-13,000 feet, Track J330, EXLB 0648, 18 knots, 9,500 feet. Objects as many as seven, as few as two A/C.

8 Nov 75 (0753Z) - J330 unknown 0753. Stationary/seven knots/12,000. One (varies seven objects). None, no possibility, EXLB 3746, two F-106, GTF, SCR 0754. NCOC notified.

8 Nov 75 (0820Z) - Lost radar contact, fighters broken off at 0825, looking in area of J331 (another height finder contact).

8 Nov 75 (0905Z) - From SAC CP: L-sites had fighters and objects; fighters did not get down to objects.

8 Nov 75 (0915Z) - From SAC CP: From four different points: Observed objects and fighters; when fighters arrived in the area, the lights went out; when fighters departed, the lights came back on; to NCOC.

8 Nov 75 (0953Z) - From SAC CP: L-5 reported object increased in speed - high velocity, raised in altitude and now cannot tell the object from stars. To NCOC.

8 Nov 75 (1105Z) - From SAC CP: E-1 reported a bright white light (site is approximately 60 nautical miles north of Lewistown) NCOC notified.

9 Nov 75 (0305Z) - SAC CP called and advised SAC crews at Sites L-1, L-6 and M-1 observing UFO. Object yellowish bright round light 20 miles north of Harlowton, 2 to 4,000 feet.

9 Nov 75 (0320Z) - SAC CP reports UFO 20 miles southeast of Lewistown, orange white disc object. 24th NORAD Region surveillance checking area. Surveillance unable to get height check.

9 Nov 75 (0320Z) - FAA Watch Supervisor reported he had five air carriers vicinity of UFO, United Flight 157 reported seeing meteor, "arc welder's blue" in color. SAC CP advised, sites still report seeing object stationary.

9 Nov 75 (0348Z) - SAC CP confirms L-1, sees object, a mobile security team has been directed to get closer and report.

9 Nov 75 (0629Z) - SAC CP advises UFO sighting reported around 0305Z. Cancelled the flight security team from Site L-1, checked area and all secure, no more sightings.

TERRENCE C. JAMES, Colonel, USAF
Director of Administration

Cy to: HQ USAF/DAD
HQ USAF/JACL

10 Nov 75 (0125Z) - Received a call from SAC CP. Report UFO sighting from site K-1 around Harlowton area. Surveillance checking area with height finder.

10 Nov 75 (0153Z) - Surveillance report unable to locate track that would correlate with UFO sighted by K-1.

10 Nov 75 (1125Z) - UFO sighting reported by Minot Air Force Station, a bright star-like object in the west, moving east, about the size of a car. First seen approximately 1015Z. Approximately 1120Z, the object passed over the radar station, 1,000 feet to 2,000 feet high, no noise heard. Three people from the site or local area saw the object. NCOC notified.

12 Nov 75 (0230Z) - UFO reported from K01. They say the object is over Big Snowy mtn with a red light on it at high altitude. Attempting to get radar on it from Opheim. Opheim searching from 120° to 140°.

12 Nov 75 (0248Z) - Second UFO in same area reported. Appeared to be sending a beam of light to the ground intermittently. At 0250Z object disappeared.

12 Nov 75 (0251Z) - Reported that both objects have disappeared. Never had any joy (contact) on radar.

13 Nov 75 (0951Z) - SAC CP with UFO report. P-SAT team enroute from R-3 to R-4 saw a white lite, moving from east to west. In sight approx 1 minute. No determination of height, moving towards Brady. No contact on radar.

19 Nov 75 (1327Z) - SAC command post report UFO observed by FSC & a cook, observed object travelling NE between M-8 and M-1 at a fast rate of speed. Object bright white light seen 45 to 50 sec following terrain 200 ft off ground. The light was two to three times brighter than landing lights on a jet.

-----LAST ENTRY PERTAINING TO THESE INCIDENTS-----

Testimony of Professor Robert Jacobs - Lt. US Air Force

November 2000

Professor Jacobs is a respected professor at a major US university. In the 1960s he was in the Air Force. He was the officer in charge of optical instrumentation and his job was to film ballistic missile tests launched from Vandenberg Air Force base in California. In 1964, during a test of the first missile they filmed, they caught on film a UFO traveling right next to the missile. He says it looked like two saucers cupped together with a round ping-pong ball like surface on top. The film showed that from the ball a beam of light was directed at the missile. This happened four times, from four different angles, as the missile was about 60 miles up and traveling at 11,000 to 14,000 miles an hour. The missile tumbled out of space and the UFO left. The next day he was shown the film by his commanding officer and was told to never speak of this again. He said, if it ever comes up you are to say that it was laser strikes from the UFO. Professor Jacobs thought this unusual because in 1964 lasers were in their infancy in the labs but he never the less agreed and hasn't talked about it for 18 years. Years later, after an article came out about the film, professor Jacobs started receiving harassing phone calls at early hours in the morning. His mailbox was even blown up in front of his house.

What we photographed up at Vandenberg Air Force Base affected me for the rest of my life and made a huge impact on my understanding of the universe and of Governmental manipulation of our minds.

The background of this event is that we were testing ballistic missiles that were to deliver nuclear weapons on target. That's what they were there for. We weren't launching real nuclear weapons we were launching dummy warheads. They were the exact size, shape, dimension and weight of a nuclear warhead. I was the officer in charge of optical instrumentation at Vandenburg Air Force Base in the 1369th photo squadron and as such it was my duty to supervise the instrumentation photography of every missile that went down in that western test range. In those days we called them ICBM's, inter-county ballistic missiles, because most of them blew up on launch. And our job was to determine why they blew up, to provide the engineers good engineering sequential photography so that they could see what was wrong with the burners that took off in flight. For my achievement in setting up the photographic station to track these tests I was awarded the Air Force Guided Missile insignia. I was the first photographer in the Air Force to get the Missile Badge and it was a highly coveted thing at the time.

The incident was definitely in 1964 because Major Mansmann confirmed that; he had written it down and knew the exact date of it.

They counted down the missile and we heard engine ignition lift-off so we knew the missile was underway. We were looking down south, southwest, and the missile popped up through the fog. It was just beautiful and I hollered, there it is. Our guys on our M45 tracking mount with a 180-inch lens on it filmed the missile. And the big BU telescope swung over and got it and we followed the thing. And sure enough we could see all three stages of powered flight boosters, they burned out and dropped away. And then of course, to our naked eye all we saw was a smoke trail going off into subspace as it headed off towards its target which was an island in the Pacific. Well, that was our first filming of a launch and we got it.

We sent the film back down to the base and- I don't know exactly how long it was after the event, it might have been a day or two- I was called into Major Mansmann's office at the First Strategic Aerospace Division Headquarters. I walked into his office and they had a screen and a 16mm projector set up. There was a couch and Major Mansmann said sit down. And there were two guys in gray suits, civilian clothes, which was fairly unusual. Major Mansmann said watch this and turned on the film projector. I watched the screen and there was the launch from the day or two before.

It was quite exciting. Because of the length of the telescope, as the Atlas missile entered the frame we could see the whole third stage. That was pretty exciting optics. We watched that stage burnout. We watched the second stage burnout. We watched the third stage burnout. And then on that telescope we could see the dummy warhead. It's flying along and into the frame came something else. It flew into the frame like and it shot a beam of light at the warhead.

Now remember, all this stuff is flying at several thousand miles an hour. So this thing [UFO] fires a beam of light at the warhead, hits it and then it [the UFO] moves to the other side and fires another beam of light, then moves again and fires another beam of light, then goes down and fires another beam of light, and then flies out the way it came in. And the warhead tumbles out of space. The object, the points of light that we saw, the warhead and so forth, were traveling through subspace about 60 miles straight up. And they were going somewhere in the neighborhood of 11,000 to 14,000 miles an hour when this UFO caught up to them, flew in, flew around them, and flew back out.

Now, I saw that! I don't give a Goddamn what anybody else says about it. I saw that on film! I was there!

Now when the lights came on, Major Mansmann turned around looked at me and said, were you guys screwing around up there? And I said, no sir. And he said, what was that? And I said, it looks to me like we got a UFO. Now the thing that we saw, this object that flew in, was circular, was shaped like two saucers cupped together with a ping-pong ball on top. The beam of light came out of the ping-pong ball. That's what I saw on film.

Now Major Mansmann said to me after some discussion about it, you are never to speak of this again. As far as you are concerned, this never happened. And he said, I don't need to emphasize the dire consequences of a security breach, do I? I said, no sir. And he said, fine. This never happened. As I started for the door, he said, wait a minute. He said, years from now if you are ever forced by someone to talk about this, you are to tell them it was laser strikes, laser tracking strikes.

Well, in 1964 we didn't have any laser tracking strikes. We didn't have any laser tracking at all. Lasers were in their infancy in 1964. They were little play-things in laboratories. So I said, yes sir, and walked out and that was the last I talked about it for 18 years.

I didn't talk about it to anybody at Vandenburg Air Force Base, nobody in my squadron knew about it. Nobody saw the film but me. My Commanding Officer Major Lewis S. Clement, Jr. didn't see it. My Operations Officer Captain Kenneth R. Callahan didn't see it. His assistant Lieutenant Ronald O. Baylor didn't see it. Their assistant, Chief Ward Officer Spooner didn't see it. Nobody in my squadron saw it. And I didn't talk about it to anybody under direct orders from Major Florence J. Mansmann, Jr. Consequently no one at Vandenburg that I know of knows anything about this.

That sounds real suspicious doesn't it? Somebody should have seen it. Somebody should have talked about it. Well, they didn't because in those days, I didn't talk about top-secret things that I was told not to talk about. There are things that I know about that I did in the service that I won't talk about to you now because they are top-secret and I could get my ass in trouble for talking about them.

After 18 years it occurred to me that I could talk about this one incident because nobody ever told me it was classified top-secret. If you parse what Major Mansmann said, he said, you are to say this never happened. Well, that's not classifying it top-secret, is it? That's why I felt free to talk about it. It's not a second-hand story. This happened to me. And I was a part of a United States Air Force cover-up for 18 years.

After an article [came out about the incident], the shit hit the fan! I started being harassed at work. I started getting odd telephone calls that would come during the day. At night, at my house I would get telephone calls- all night long sometimes 3:00 in the morning, 4:00 in the morning, midnight, 10:00, people would call and start screaming at me. You are going down mother fucker! You are going down mother fucker! And that's all they would say. And they'd keep screaming that until I finally hung up the phone.

One night somebody blew up my mail box by putting a big load of skyrockets in it. The mailbox went up in flames. And that night at 1:00 in the morning the phone rang. I picked it up and somebody said, skyrockets in your box at night, oh what a beautiful sight, mother fucker!

And things like that have happened on and off since 1982. I told you that since this History Channel thing came up and since you've started asking questions and this thing is in the wind again, I'm starting to get telephone calls again. My wife and I get phone calls out here in nowhere { ____ } where we've retreated out to trial. They assumed that the beam of light that struck the dummy warhead was some sort of plasma beam because it looked like a plasma beam.

Major Mansmann was a man of great honor and great scientific standing in the community. For him to corroborate it is good enough for me. Even if I didn't believe myself, I would believe Major Mansmann.

So there were two of us who were Air Force Officers at the time and we saw something and we both corroborated with each other that we saw it. And what I have to ask skeptics or people who disbelieve what I'm saying is why would I make this up? Why would Major (and Doctor) Mansmann make it up? What have we to gain? I've got nothing but pain and suffering out of it, out of talking about it. I've been harassed at my home. This was used against me, partially in losing a job once in teaching. I've had a hell of a time after I've told this story but I continue to tell the story because I think it is important for people to understand that this sort of shit goes on in the Government. That the Government covers up information that we are entitled to know about as citizens of this country. That's why I tell my story. That's why I'm telling it to you.

Now, I'll continue to tell it as long as I'm alive. And I'll always tell it the same way because it only happened one way. I never vary the story because I can't; it's the truth. And I've been the subject of humiliating letters and phone calls from skeptics like James O'Berg at NASA and Phillip J. Klass, who's a paid informant of the United States Government who persisted in belittling me. And that's fine if they want to belittle me but don't belittle Sonny Mansmann!

The Air Force's position right now is there was no such incident and there was no film of it.

The thing that's important to me about this whole operation is very simply this: the biggest event in the history of humankind is the discovery that we are not alone, that there are other living entities- intelligent entities- in this universe and that we aren't here alone. That's a huge, enormous discovery. It's the discovery of the lifetime of humankind, isn't it, to find out that we're not here alone? That's why I think it is important to talk about these things. I think that's exciting. And I think that it's important for us as humans to come to terms, to grow-up and recognize that we may not be the paragon of animals after all. That there may be something out there that's bigger and more exciting than we are. And that just maybe, just maybe they are telling us something.

Because what I saw that day was something shooting down a dummy nuclear warhead. What message would I interpret from that? Don't mess with nuclear warheads. That's probably the message I would interpret from that. Maybe somebody doesn't want us annihilating Moscow; maybe we should stop doing that.

[I have interviewed many military officers who have reached the same conclusion after extraterrestrial vehicles have appeared at nuclear facilities: Maybe others have evolved to the point of interstellar travel and know how dangerous these weapons are and understand their use would end our civilization. And they certainly do not want us going into space with such weapons. SG]

Ronald Reagan one night went on television and did a most astonishing thing: He stood up in front of America and said we are going to build a defensive shield, we are going to call it SDI, the strategic defense initiative, and its mission is going to be to protect us, to protect all of us. Ronald Reagan said we are going to share this with everybody. We are going to share it with the Russians- our enemies, the guys that only a few years ago we were pretending to annihilate. Now suddenly we are going to protect them with a shield. From who are we going to protect them?

Perhaps that was the first shot across the bow, the first warning shot from somebody saying, knock this off kids it's time to grow-up. You don't want to annihilate this planet, do you? Could be...

The information I've just given you about my take on what happened there is based on not only my own speculation but having read other things and talked to other people over the intervening years. Perhaps our paranoia is unfounded and if we encounter beings with superior technologies maybe we should embrace them and be nice to them because they might be showing us how to survive.

Dear

A reoccurrence of cancer, a very bad farming situation and the resultant financial problems that needed immediate attention, precluded the possibility of my involvement in any but priority duties. Therefore, your July 30, 1986, letter is in a box with many others that need to be addressed, researched, answered and sent.

I am still in the midst of this battle, so my reply will be short.

The events you are familiar with had to have happened as stated by both Bob Jacobs and myself because the statement made from each of us after 17 years matched. What was on the film was seen only twice by Bob Jacobs, once in Film Quality Control and once in my office at the CIA attended showing. I saw it four times. Once in my own quality control review and editing for the General and his staff; once in review with the Chief Scientist and his assistant; once for the Commanding General with only one of his staff; and the fourth time with the Chief Scientist, his assistant, the three government men and Bob Jacobs.

I ordered Lt. Jacobs not to discuss what he saw with anyone because of the nature of the launch, the failure of the launch mission and the probability that the optical instrumentation (the film) showed an interference with normal launch patterns. Now for your questions:

1. The object was saucer-shaped. (Dome? Don't remember.)
2. Do not know the names of the CIA personnel.
3. Only assumptions from the seriousness of the situation.
4. I was ordered not to discuss any of what was seen or discussed during the screenings. I only passed my order, as the ranking optical instrumentation officer, on to Lieutenant Jacobs. There was no one else involved.
5. No film was ever released from our archives without a signature. I never signed out film when we had launch showings to VIPs in the General's office on short notice. However, I released the film to the Chief Scientist over his signature, then they departed.
6. The articles in the Enquirer and OMNI on my part and the statements made by both Dr. Jacobs and myself were factual. The statements you referred to that an "Air Force spokesman said, 'there is nothing on film and that the rocket did hit its target,'" makes no sense. Means the film is available and the records of the launch and its are also available. If the Air Force spokesman did review the launch and saw nothing, it could not have been the perpetuated such quick security action.

7. Further? If the government wishes to withhold such vital information which most certainly relates to our basis Star Wars research, then this information must be protected.

Working in special projects my entire Air Force career from the earliest airborne radar in WWII, Air Defense Systems during the Korean War, Airborne Reconnaissance Ssystems during the Cold War, Photo computerized systems of unprecedented utilization and intelligence fathering during the Vietnam conflict, (therefore a veteran of four wars and more combat area time than most), I may be over protective of our security.

I can only say in regard to your research that in all my activities to date, indications point to one fact...the information gathered from space is very favorable to our side.

Sincerely yours,

F. J. Mansmann, ScD.

Colonel Dedrickson is a retired Colonel from the USAF. He went to Stanford business school where he studied management. Back in the 50 s part of his responsibilities included maintaining the inventory of the nuclear weapon stockpile for the AEC and accompanying security teams checking out the security of the weapons. Many reports kept coming in that UFOs were seen at various nuclear storage facilities and some of the manufacturing plants. He has seen them himself many times and was present when the famous fly-over over the Capital happened in July of 1952. At that incident he recalls seeing nine illuminated disc-type craft. He also tells of at least two occasions where extraterrestrials destroyed nuclear weapons headed out to space, one heading to the moon to be detonated for tests. It was destroyed because "nuclear weapons in space ... were not acceptable to the extraterrestrials..."

RD: Col. Ross Dedrickson

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

RD: I am Lauren Ross Diedrickson, Colonel, U.S.A.E, retired. I got a Bachelor of Science degree and then the Air Force sent me to the Stanford Business School to study management and then promptly assigned me to Washington, DC. I served in the Chief of Staff's Office for orientation and then they put me into the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission where I became responsible for maintaining the inventory and the accountability of the nuclear weapon stockpile. I was involved in the security and auditing the manufacturing facilities and the storage facilities for all the nuclear weapons in the U.S.

While I was at the AEC in 1952, I had my first incident with UFOs which was in mid July when they flew over Washington, D. C. I saw my first nine UFOs.

And of course, during that period of time I made a lot of contacts. I was a staff officer for the military liaison committee between the chairman of the AEC and the Secretary of Defense. I became acquainted with not only the Army, Navy, and Air Force, but civilian agencies, the CIA, the National Security Agency, and other contacts which I developed. During that period of time one of my functions was to accompany a security team which visited all of the nuclear facilities to check on the security of weapons. And we were getting reports of visits by UFOs over the storage facilities and even some of the manufacturing facilities. And that went on continuously Now, we found that the formal reports were few and far between. Security people were reluctant to report many of them because of the protocol and the bureaucracy involved in reporting them - they just avoided reporting.

Later I was assigned to the Sandia Corporation as a military liaison and I was involved in establishing a quality assurance program for the manufacture and the quality and the maintenance of their nuclear weapons. So we had to visit all of the manufacturing facilities such as the Pantex facility, which assembled the nuclear components. And so, there again we observed the UFOs who were very much interested in the facilities that we were visiting. We did get constant referrals: "What are all these UFOs [hovering] there for?"

And so, then after that siege which went through the entire '50s, I was assigned to the Unified Command under Admiral Felt during the '60s. I was the officer in charge of the Alternate command post involved with nuclear weapons operation planning. During that period of time, I maintained contacts with NORAD, with the SAC operations, and was involved with operational plans for the use of nuclear weapons. And during this period of time, I also learned of a number of incidents which happened involving UFOs. And then further on I finally retired from the Air Force and joined the Boeing Company where I was assigned to the Minute Man program where I was responsible for the accounting of all the nuclear fleet, the Minute Man One, Two, and Three. And during that period of time, I also learned about incidents involving nuclear weapons. And among these incidents were those where a couple of nuclear weapons that were sent into space were destroyed by the extraterrestrials.

[See the testimony of Professor Robert Jacobs. SG]

But in talking to various contacts throughout, they would allude to the fact that these did happen. There was for example, a Minute Man missile that was destroyed after a launch from Vandenberg Air Force Base. That's now a public matter of record. In this incident, they actually photographed the UFO following the missile as it climbed into space and, shining a beam on it, neutralized the missile. And this was recorded. It was all hushed up. And they split up the team that observed it but of course eventually the news came out. And it was later published and we confirmed it.

SG: Were over-flights of nuclear facilities taken seriously?

RD: Oh yes. Oh yes indeed. In fact, they were taken so seriously that the observers would often not report them because it involved so much bureaucracy and protocol, and et cetera. They deliberately would not report them. On most of those cases where the UFOs became identified at least on a radar or with reports, why, they would try to scramble aircraft to intercept them. It was a very aggressive, you might say, response from our own government. Well, there was one incident when we exploded a nuclear weapon over the Pacific and this was in about '61 I believe. The consternation that it caused [from the ETs] was because it shut out communications over the Pacific basin for a number of hours in which no radio transmission was available at any time. And this was very significant. And of course this was one that the extraterrestrials were really concerned about because it affected our ionosphere. In fact, the ET spacecraft were unable to operate because of the pollution in the magnetic field which they depended upon. It was my understanding that in either the very end of the '70s or the early '80s that we attempted to put a nuclear weapon on the Moon and explode it for scientific measurements and other things which was not acceptable to the extraterrestrials.

SG: And what happened?

RD: The ETs destroyed the weapon as it went toward the Moon. The idea of any explosion of a nuclear weapon in space by any Earth government was not acceptable to the extraterrestrials and that has been demonstrated over and over.

SG: How was that demonstrated?

RD: By the destruction of any nuclear weapon sent into space. When I was assigned to the Atomic Energy Commission on Independence Avenue in July of 1952 this UFO event happened. And it just so happened that I was out that evening and the incident occurred and looking up, I held my hand up, and they were bigger than my thumb over my head over Washington. They were very visible. I counted nine the night that I saw them. They were the typical disk-type aircraft — spacecraft. But they were there. They were illuminated. They were quite visible. Their configuration was very conspicuous. They were not aircraft because I have been a pilot for twenty years, and I'm acquainted with what aircraft look like.

And then later on our visits to Los Alamos and Livermore we found that people were interested in the extraterrestrial technology, very much so.

SG: Did those conversations indicate that there were materials of extraterrestrial origin that were being studied?

RD: Oh yes. Oh yes. In fact, that was the time when Area 51 became notorious. Well, I guess there's more and more people like me that are getting along in years that would like to recall some of the incidents that they've encountered. And the truth is going to come out sooner or later.

Commanding Officer
AF Cambridge Research Laboratory
Attn: Base Directorate, Geophysical Research

Cambridge, Massachusetts

1. Per request of Dr. A. O. Mirarchi, during recent visit this base, the following information is submitted.
2. Sightings were made on 27 April and 24 May 1950 of aerial phenomena during morning daylight hours at this station. Sightings were made by LAMSAF, Inc., personnel while engaged in tracking regular projects with Askania Photodolites. It has been reported that objects are sighted some number; as many as eight have been visible at one time. Individuals making these sightings are professional observers therefore I would rate their reliability superior. In both cases photos were taken with Askantias.
3. The Holloman AF Base Data Reduction Unit analyzed the April pictures and made a report, a copy of which is enclosed with the film for your information. It was believed at triangulation could be effected from pictures taken on May because pictures were taken from two stations. The films were rapidly processed and examined by Data Reduction. However, it was determined that sightings were made on two different objects and triangulation could not be effected. Report from Data Reduction and the films from the sighting are enclosed.
4. There is nothing further to report at this time.

1. According to conversation between Col. Baynes and Capt. Bryant, the following information is submitted directly to Lt. Albert.

2. Film from station P10 was read, resulting in azimuth and elevation angles being recorded on four objects. In addition, size of image on film was recorded.

3. From this information, together with a single azimuth angle from station M7, the following conclusions were drawn:

- a. The objects were at an altitude of approximately 150,000 feet.
- b. The objects were over the Holloman range between the base and Tularosa Peak.
- c. The objects were approximately 30 feet in diameter.
- d. The objects were traveling at an undeterminable, yet high speed.

he other two movies were made at the White Sands Proving Grounds with Acantha Cine theodolite-scientific tracking camera for following guided missiles. The first was made April 27, 1950. Shortly after a missile was fired and had fallen into the atmosphere and fallen, someone spotted an object in the sky. The theodolites were hooked up by an optical system, and several stations were instructed to try to get pictures. Unfortunately only one camera had film. The movie showed a roughly disk object, not very well defined.

Testimony of Harry Allen Jordan - US Navy

Mr. Jordan spent 6 and a half years in the US Navy and was a radar operator on the USS Roosevelt in 1962. Trained in operations intelligence, he has a classified clearance and also worked in electronic countermeasures. He testifies that as a radar operator on the Roosevelt, he had a radar contact with a huge object above 65,000 feet traveling at about 1,000 knots. The Captain launched two Phantom-2 aircraft to investigate. As the Phantoms approached the UFO, it disappeared and about half an hour later it re-appeared but this time closer to the ship. He described the intimidation which followed the event. He later found out that in the prior year the Roosevelt had a huge UFO event that was photographed where people saw a saucer descend from the clouds. This happened more frequently after the Roosevelt took on nuclear weapons. Many years after Mr. Jordan was discharged from the Navy, he says that he was listening in on his HAM radio to the Space Shuttle STS 48 communications when he heard them speaking about seeing an alien spacecraft. He describes the harassment which followed after it was known what he had heard.

My father was attached to the Anacosta Naval Air Station in Washington, D.C. and I was born in '43. And he was at the Anacosta Naval Air Station in July of '52 [when all of the UFO over-flights of Washington DC occurred]. I remember this later because of a lot of reports. And when I was a young kid one night in the summer when it was very clear, these lights came up the river. They were like sparklers. There were giant ones. There were amber ones. They were a bluish white color and floated over the trees very quietly. Some of them moving very slowly and some moving fast. Kind of like soap bubbles but they weren't moving according the wind or anything. They weren't balloons that were light or anything like that.

And this went on for about one-half hour. And then we heard some kind of a horn and then all of a sudden saber jets were coming up the Potomac River chasing these things. Some of them went straight up and out of sight. And the thing that reminded me of this mostly was when I saw the movie Close Encounters of the Third Kind. The hair kind of stood up on the back of my neck because those little light bulbs that came through the toll gates on the freeway reminded me exactly of what I saw when I was a little kid.

Well, these objects tied in with the famous fly-over in 1952 in Washington, D.C. And I put two and two together and I was there and saw those at that time. There were newspaper articles in the Washington Post, the New York Times and Life Magazine about that.

When I was in High School I enlisted in the military service. After I enlisted I went through classification in Norfolk, Virginia. They sent me to the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Franklin D. Roosevelt. I spent a total of six and one-half years in the United States Navy and was honorably discharged in 1967 as a petty officer.

When I first went into the service I picked up the U.S.S. Roosevelt in 1962 in Palermo, Sicily. I came on board as a radar operator and was trained in OI Division, which is Operations Intelligence Division. But it took me a year to get my classified clearance to work on certain radar and electronic countermeasure equipment. My cruise book is from 1962 to 1963. And in Newport, Rhode Island they trained us on the state-of-the-art radar. I got a commendation for detecting a Russian bear aircraft from Commander Gibson at that time.

I knew what commercial aircraft were. I could check their "is it friend or foe signals", etc. I knew about the tactics the Soviets used. Soviet military aircraft would get into commercial air corridors and try to be masked by the IFF squawk in the back of commercial aircraft, you know.

Anyway, I was on mid-watch during my second med-cruise. It was oh, sometime between midnight and 2:00am. And I had a contact come on the radarscope. This new radar that we had used a SPA 50-inch repeater. We used to have SPA 8's, and a VG, a vector guide that we would plot aircraft on. And I know the difference between surface search radar and air search radar. There are differences in polarity of the radio signal and things like this and how the waves come back. We knew all this stealth kind of stuff, you know, active and passive electronic countermeasures.

So I know the difference between a flock of geese, or wave returns or false echoes. We could even generate false signals: Part of my job was to generate false signals to mid-shipmen who would come on board the Roosevelt for training on radar equipment to see if they could tell the difference between an internally false signal that's generated and a real signal on a radarscope. And in fact, this was the first thing that challenged me to check it out and see if the contact I had on the scope was genuine.

This target was above 65,000 feet and the strength of the signal was as strong as the surface contact on the water of an aircraft carrier so this contact was huge. It got my attention and the attention of others that were on watch. There were four enlisted on watch and two officers at the time that this occurred. We challenged it and checked the codes out. It was not commercial. And then it began to move fairly slowly at first, and then very quickly. It was doing better than 1,000 knots. The first time I picked it up on radar it was hovering, it was stationary. Then it was doing about 1,000 knots. Then when we tried to make contact it was over 500 miles away. When you have that high an altitude you can detect aerial contacts at a much greater distance than a line of sight or a UHF communications.

In this particular case it was showing up on height finding equipment and it was showing up on radar equipment. The CO came in and he wanted to know what the heck was going on here. And they looked at it and asked what the hell was that, you know? And it got the attention of the Captain at that time, Captain Clark- my commander was Commander Gibson. There was only one person on watch in ECM and in the matter of 15 minutes the ship was being turned and two Phantom-2's were being prepared for launch.

Now I got on a set of headphones and I'm on a SPA 8 repeater now. And I'm listening to communications between the pilots and the CO flight ops. And when you go to general quarters you do the same thing and I was used to doing this because one of my jobs during general quarters was to sit right next to the commander of our division and to listen to the aircraft. My job was to log in all the tally-ho's and everything [a tally-ho is when contact is made with the target by the fighter pilot]. My job was as a recognition expert, also-to be able to identify different types of navy ships, foreign ships, commercial ships, maritime ships, and aircraft. Not only electronically but visually and be familiar with electronic fingerprints.

In any event, the Phantom-2's went to after-burners. And they were about 100 miles or so away from this contact and turned on the conical scan radar to lock on and it winked out. Just disappeared. I could see the two Phantom-2 s on my scope and this thing winked out. They flew around for about 10 minutes and then they headed back to the ship.

After they landed, about 35 minutes later, this thing winks back on again and it's about 12 to 15 miles from the ship, hovering at about 30,000 feet. It's a clear night, stars are out and I look out so I can talk to other crew on my headphones. Everybody is connected, your air plotter, your surface plotter, your officer, your flag plot, the Captain, or whoever the officer of the watch is up in the conning tower. On an aircraft carrier this is very serious business because you have a lot of people involved and a lot of safety factors involved. And so it's not a normal thing just to fire things up that quick.

In any event, they went out and the lookouts couldn't see anything. Nobody could see anything. But it was there on our radarscope. It was not a false signal. I never saw anything [either]. I could [tell from] the reports coming over my headphones.

The thing that really startled me the most was that after I got a break I went down the corridor and for the first time I saw two armed marines there. Two marines there, the one that usually stands with the Captain, and they are outside ECM and they wouldn't let me in there. And I had a clearance to be in there. And then I saw other officers there whom I had never even seen before. So something went down.

Now, the next morning we went down to eat breakfast and after mid-watch a lot of the Airedales were down there talking about the weird operation that night and what had happened. And of course I couldn't say anything. I didn't say anything because I was told by my CO that, Jordan, you know, what you have in your log, this never happened. And I wasn't the only one there on watch that night. So anybody who was there at that time knows what I'm talking about and knows that it's the truth. But less than a dozen people knew what went on that night. And that ship had 5,000 men on it.

After that particular med-cruise a few of us started talking about it. And I later ran into a Navy chief at the school up in OCS who told me a story about when he was down in the Caribbean and they had a GQ and they were on operation readiness inspection with the ships. And they saw this large UFO come up out of the water and take off. And he said that the movie the Abyss was based on that particular story and that was a part of the Navy records.

I have since contacted many of my shipmates because of everything that's been going on with UFO's lately. I had been in touch with Mr. Chet Grazinsky who has been a tremendous help because he also witnesses a UFO encounter on board at another time. In talking with Mr. Grazinsky who was with the Roosevelt in '61, the year prior to when I arrived on board, I learned that they had a huge UFO event. This UFO actually came down out of the clouds- not only lights but they saw a saucer. And photographs were taken and we've been trying to get in touch with the photographer who took those photographs. Grazinsky saw it. And there were documents that I have seen that refer to the Roosevelt having several instances of UFO flyovers particularly after they took on board nuclear weapons, there were these UFO events.

[There is a continuing pattern of extraterrestrial vehicles showing concern about our nuclear weapons and related facilities. SG]

You are a little skittish about talking about UFOs with people because they probably think you are bouncing balloons off the wall or something. But people cannot know what they themselves have yet to experience. But this happened. It was real.

In this case, the radar contact was not leaving any kind of a heat signature. It was not leaving any kind of a trail. It was not moving at an usual speed. This thing was moving 10, 15 miles in 30 seconds, 20 miles, then 30 miles, then 40 miles, then 100 miles. And in three and one-half minutes this thing moved almost 500 miles. And then it was moving from one altitude to another in a way that would cause any normal pilot to black out. This was a real contact. This signal from this contact at that distance and that altitude was sending back a signal as strong as the Roosevelt itself and the Roosevelt was over 1,000 feet long.

A Lieutenant Commander whom I didn't know very well came over and he asked, you know, what was up Jordan? What have you got in your log? And he says, you don't need to put that in there. Now to me that was highly irregular, highly irregular to say that particularly on a ship's logs. I did have the contact logged in there. And I started writing in UFO...

As far as I know it was not recorded anywhere on the ship unless it is in the Captains log or the Division Commanders log.

Years later during the [Space Shuttle] STS 48 mission, while they were in orbit, I was listening on the HAM radio. I have an OMNI antennae and the astronauts were saying, 'we have the UFO under observation'. And then I heard them say we have the alien spacecraft under observation. I was one of the HAM operators who did hear that. So I called Dr. Kasher about that, he is a friend of mine who had a son going to school where I teach, and I told him they are talking about alien spacecraft. They actually use that term over the airways. And it just stunned me. It just stunned me...

Now get this: After word got out about this I was in touch with a friend of mine, Vince DiPietro at Goddard Space Flight Center. Next I get a call out of the blue from the payload manager at Johnson Space Center for the shuttle and they wanted to talk to me about the videotape I had on that mission, that videotape we happen to have [showing what appears to be a weapon system attempting to strike a UFO near Earth orbit]. He wanted to know what was up and what I was listening on and what I had on my HAM radio.

Later I saw Inter-Agency cars right across the street and guys in suits taking pictures of me. They also took pictures of me and my wife in Kansas City when we were at Worlds of Fun. I told other people about this because I got very skitish about what was going on here. I took down the license number of the vehicle and it was registered at an Air Force Base.

I also had an Air Force Intelligence Officer visit me at my house. I asked to see his credentials. He wore civilian clothes and he showed me credentials- it was U.S. Air Force. He just wanted to come in and see my HAM equipment and so forth and so on. And of course I can understand that. I've got nothing to hide so I took him down in the basement and showed him all my stuff.

The planet is becoming intellectually celibate in my opinion. People are walking around in a daze. They have no idea, no idea what is going on. Many corporations have been getting wealthy [from UFO related research and materials]. Yes they've been providing humanity as a whole with technological change that benefits us all but they really aren't sharing the meat and the source of where it all came from and ultimately they are not sharing the truth about UFO's.

Testimony of Mr. James Kopf - US Navy/ National Security Agency
October 2000

Mr. Kopf joined the Navy in 1969 and worked in communications part of the time on the USS JFK which was carrying nuclear weapons. He worked for the NSA from 1980 till 1997. In his testimony he tells how in the summer of 1979 all the electronics and communications on board the USS JFK stopped functioning when a huge glowing orange-yellow UFO hovered above. He personally saw this pulsating UFO, as did a number of others. All eight teletype machines were printing randomly and the ship went to battle-station alert for two hours. A radar operator friend of his told him that the radar screens were glowing and then went black - they couldn't detect anything. A few days after this incident the Commanding Officer and Executive Officer came on the ship-wide closed circuit TV system and reminded the crew that certain events that take place on board the ship are considered classified and should not be discussed with anyone. When the ship finally returned to Norfolk, VA, men in suits arrived to interview various crewmembers.

JK: James Kopf

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JK: I joined the Navy in April of 1969 and attended Radio A School in Bainbridge, Maryland. Then I reported to the USS John F. Kennedy, which was CVA 67 at the time; it was already on deployment to the Mediterranean. I worked in the communications section for a few years and then I moved to the navigational section of the Kennedy where I was working with the Quartermasters. I did administrative work for the Navigator. After that, I was transferred to Commander Fighter Wing 1, Naval Air station Oceania in Virginia Beach, Virginia.

In 1979, I applied for a job at the National Security Agency and was hired in 1980. I did that job for three years and then I moved to the electrical division under the General Services Administration at Ft. Meade, Maryland. In 1986, they did away with all the GSA Services so I became an actual NSA employee in 1986 and worked in the facility section at NSA until my termination in June 13, 1997.

The UFO incident occurred on the USS John F. Kennedy. I am not sure of the exact date. It was in the summer of 1971 and more than likely it was the end of June or the first part of July. At the time of the incident, I was working in the communications section of the Kennedy. My job was a broadcast operator, which meant that I retrieved messages from a series of teletypes that received fleet broadcasts from the communications stations in the Atlantic.

We were in the Southern Atlantic. We had been performing an operational readiness exercise in and around Cuba and the Caribbean Sea. They were war games. All the military do these exercises from time to time to keep proficiency up. We had just completed this exercise and we were getting ready to head back to Norfolk the evening that the incident occurred. They had just finished a long flight operation, in excess of 18 hours. So most of the crew had just gone below decks after a rather long flight.

I was on duty in the communications room and the teletypes were crypto. All the communications came through cryptographic equipment, which was very susceptible to interference from time to time. So I kept a close watch on incoming messages and if I noticed any abnormalities, I would call facilities control and have them adjust the receivers to keep their signals clear. This particular night I took a message off the Teletype then I turned around to check the teletypes again and saw something I had never seen before.

All eight teletypes were just typing complete garbage. Totally incoherent. I had seen one or two mistakes in the messages but never anything this extensive. So I immediately called the facilities control on the intercom to inform them that my broadcast was out and they informed me that they were busy because all communications had just gone out, ship-wide. This had never occurred before.

We had an intercom and a pneumatic tube system that went between the communications room to the signal bridge, which is located at the very top of the island structure of the carrier. And we heard a very excited voice come on yelling that "God was here. It was the end of the world." And we looked at each other and thought that that was strange. What was going on there? Another few seconds went by and another voice came on, more controlled. This person said that there was something over the ship. Well, I looked at a friend of mine, a shipmate, and he looked at me and we decided to go have a look.

So we exited the Communications Center and went to the catwalk on the port side of the ship on the edge of the flight deck and we observed a large glowing sphere over the ship. It was hard to decide what size this thing was because there was no perspective. It was late in the evening. The sun had gone down, it was twilight, but it looked huge. I would say anywhere from three or four hundred feet to a quarter of a mile depending on how high it was. If it was high, it was huge. It glowed in a pulsating matter between a yellowish and an orangeish color. I couldn't see any details other than a glowing spherical object. Then, general quarters went off on the ship- battle stations-and we had to go back to our watch station, which was our battle station. We stayed at general quarters or battle stations for about two hours.

It was only several minutes after we got back to the communications center that the messages started coming in again. Incoming worked but outgoing was still not working. So it wasn't that long that we were out of communication. Maybe twenty minutes at the most. I stayed on watch until my watch ended, which was at midnight. After that, I talked to a few shipmate friends that I had on the ship. One in particular worked in the radar department and he was on watch during the incident. He told me that all the radar screens were glowing- and then nothing. They couldn't detect anything on radar. We stayed up most of the night talking about it.

We heard that the compasses were not working on the bridge and that the radar navigational system had gone offline. I heard from some people that the first voice on the intercom that we heard yelling "it was the end of the world" was actually a lookout who was on watch on the signal bridge. We heard that this person had to be sedated; he was very upset. And we heard that the second voice that we heard was actually a signalman that was on watch on the signal bridge; he was the one that said that it was something over the ship in the more controlled voice.

A few days later the Commanding Officer and the Executive Officer came on the closed circuit television system that we had on board. It was the only way that they could address the crew of 5,000. He [the Commanding Officer] looked at the camera - and I will never forget this - and he said, "I would like to remind the crew that certain events that take place on board a major naval combative vessel are considered classified and should not be discussed with anyone without a need to know." And that was all he said.

The Commanding Officer and the Executive Officer were pretty upset during the incident because they had no control over anything. They were very vulnerable, which I am sure is very upsetting for any military people to not be in control.

[See the similar testimony of Merle Shane McDow concerning how Admiral Trane reacted during a major event at Atlantic Command. SG]

The propulsion system still worked. We could maintain a speed and course and we could steer but from all the stories that I heard, anything that was electronic in nature ceased to operate or was malfunctioning. This includes any computer systems.

At the time, it did have nuclear weapons on board. This was a known fact to us but we were in the Mediterranean and we were not supposed to talk about it. They weren't going to deploy a carrier anywhere in the world without nuclear capabilities.

I did get a message from a former Navy serviceman that said that he was on a destroyer in the vicinity and that they had tracked an object on radar sometime that summer. I also got a message from a man who had been a sailor on the ship who had worked with the computers and he remembered somebody getting him up to come and reboot the computer system and he had said, "What happened?" And they said, "A UFO was over the ship." And he laughed it off. He thought it was a joke. And he just chalked it up to a computer crash and rebooted the system. It wasn't until he read my story that he remembered that and he said, "They weren't joking." But all this time he thought it was just a joke.

The UFO was only over the ship for maybe five minutes or less however the ramifications of the disruptions lasted for at least an hour. That is why we stayed at battle stations for two hours. I guess they were waiting to see if it came back.

And they were still trying to restart systems and get things back to fully operational. It took them probably at least an hour.

There were no aircraft in the air. They were all on board when the incident started. They kept two F-4 Phantoms, which were called a Ready CAP, Combat Air Patrol. From what I heard, they would not operate. They were trying to start those jets and from what I heard, they wouldn't start. They were out of commission.

I observed no noise from the object. It was quiet on the flight deck at the time because there was no flying, no aircraft running. So it was rather quiet. We discerned no sound whatsoever.

Some men arrived on the ship when we returned to Norfolk to interview people. They were wearing suits. Lord knows where they came from or what agency they were from. I wasn't a legitimate observer- I wasn't even supposed to be out there, so I guess nobody really even knew that I saw it. But I heard that all the bridge crew, the people who run the bridge, were interviewed by these gentlemen in suits and some people in some operational areas of radar were also interviewed.

We had an organization on this ship called IOIC, Integrated Operations Intelligence Communications, something to that effect. I heard that they were out there taking pictures of this thing during the event.

I am convinced that somebody in the government knows a lot more than we know. I have my own theories as to why it is being hidden. I think that there are many reasons that the information is being kept from the public.

SG: What would those be?

JK: They probably feel that the general public couldn't handle the knowledge of extraterrestrials visiting. I think that they have information that would seriously undermine the economy of the country. I think there are devices that could produce energy at very low cost and with no pollution but corporate greed would prohibit that.

That would be the part that would bother me the most about the cover-up. I think of all the pollution that there is and all that could have been saved. That would bother me more than anything. And also I think that anytime the military discovers something like this, they want to keep it quiet because they don't know who knows about it. There is a paranoia in the military. I have seen it.

It is definitely time for disclosure on this. It has been kept secret too long. I think we have a right to know what we have to face, being it an asteroid heading for Earth or an extraterrestrial visitor. I think as human beings we have a right to know what our future may bring. It is our God given right.

[Once again, this is a significant event involving a nuclear armed ship which resulted in the ship being electronically disabled. See the similarity of this event to the electronic disabling of ICBMs at Malmstrom AFB and other nuclear facilities in the testimony of Colonel Arneson, Colonel Diedrickson, Lieutenant Colonel Salas, et al. SG]

Testimony of Lt. Colonel Joe Wojtecki, US Air Force (retired)
October 2000

Lt. Colonel Wojtecki spent 20 years in the Air Force and retired in 1988. He spent most of his time with Strategic Air Command and Tactical Air Command. He tells of a night in April of 1969 while stationed at Loring AFB in Maine when he and his flight instructor both saw three very bright lights in a perfect equilateral triangle silently moving across the sky. They estimated that this UFO was lower than 3,000 feet. He discovered the next morning when he reported for duty that for six hours, a UFO was seen hovering over a group of B-52's containing nuclear weapons. Every time a plane drew near to the lights, they would part and move in ways that were very unconventional. When the planes left, the lights came together again and focused on the group of B-52's. Many years later Lt. Col. Wojtecki attended a lecture given by Dr. Greer and saw a photograph of a UFO that was the exact configuration that he had seen years earlier.

JW: Lt. Col. Joe Wojtecki

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JW: My name is Joe Wojtecki. I completed a 20-year career in the Air Force and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel in the spring of 1988. During that 20 years, I spent a substantial portion of my assignments within Strategic Air Command and another substantial portion in Tactical Air Command. And then I completed my career in the Pentagon at the Secretary of the Air Force level.

Well, the event in which you and I have a dual interest occurred very early during my Air Force service. It was April 17 of 1969, if my reflections and my log-book help me accurately pinpoint the date. I had just received my private pilot's license the day before on April 16th. And on the evening of April 17th, the next day, my instructor and I had a brief flight wholly contained within the traffic pattern at Loring Air Force Base in Northern Maine. And the purpose of that flight was to give me a night certification check ride. There was a solid overcast that night at 3,000 feet above ground level, which gave us plenty of necessary altitude for the touch and go landings and maintaining VFR - visual flight rules - requirements. We were landing to the south. There was a light breeze from the south. The runways at Loring were aligned, 190 degrees to the south and 010 degrees to the north, northeast. And the breeze was fairly gentle but it was significant enough that we did have the south runway as active.

With my instructor in the right seat and me flying the airplane from the left seat, the tower called us by our Cessna registration number and asked us if we had seen anything unusual north of the Base. And that was the way they posed the question. Did you see anything unusual north of the Base? I was pretty focused on the instruments and trying to impress my instructor with my ability to control the airplane at night but he had time on his hands so he responded to the tower's call and said that, in fact, he had, on our previous pattern seen a bright flash of light north of the Base.

Both my flight instructor and I were living on Loring Air Force Base at that time so it was a matter of minutes to drive back into the housing area after we landed. So from the time we responded to that inquiry from the tower until the time we had driven back into the housing area and were getting out of the car, it was probably something in the area of 30 minutes.

As we got out of the car my flight instructor was looking back to the northeast in the direction of the runway and said, what is that? And I looked up in the direction he was looking in the sky over the runway. What we saw were three very bright but independent lights. I mean, three separate lights; we assumed they were independent. And they were in a perfect equilateral triangle with the point south and the other two points of the triangle directly behind it to the north. The curious thing about this formation of lights that caused us to watch it for an extended period of time - 10 or 15 minutes we watched it - was that first, it was silent. Second, it was moving slowly but in a perfectly constant altitude, perfectly constant velocity, and perfectly constant direction from north to south. We pieced together later it was actually coming from the direction where my flight instructor had reported seeing the flash of light earlier. What was equally curious about this, since there was absolutely no sound whatsoever associated with these lights, was that they appeared to be drifting. But since they were traveling to the south, and having just landed the airplane within the previous half-hour, we knew unequivocally that the wind direction was from the south and anything drifting would have been moving in the opposite direction. So there was some propulsion. It was moving in a purposeful manner. And we also knew, because we had just landed, that there was a 3000-foot cloud ceiling. And the lights that we were seeing were so brilliant that there was no way that they were in any way obscured by cloud or any other atmospheric conditions. So we knew that it was less than 3,000 feet above the ground. We weren't sure how far away it was but it did appear to be over the runway, which based on the formation of the lights would have made it very large if it had been a single craft.

Well, we agreed after watching it with some fascination for a period of 10 minutes or so that we had no idea what it was. But there was also not much we could do about it...

The next morning I reported for duty. This would now have been the morning of April 18th. The first duty I had each day was to report to a wing stand-up briefing in the wing command post. This was a Strategic Air Command base equipped with, as I recall, three squadrons of B-52's, two squadrons of 135's, and a squadron of F-106 interceptors. When I arrived at the command post the next morning about 6:30 in the morning, it was unusually active and unusually well staffed. In fact, it was a beehive of activity. And there were people who had obviously been there most of the night from their general appearance and apparent level of frustration. So I very quickly learned that what had been occurring during the night began at about the time my flight instructor and I saw these lights. And it seems that these lights did position themselves over the alert force of the B-52's, over the alert pad of a number of B-52 s configured for their wartime mission should they be required to perform it. Therefore this was a very sensitive area, naturally.

[See the testimony of Staff Sergeant Stoney Campbell who was at a SAC base in Oklahoma when a similar event occurred directly over the nuclear-armed B-52 alert force. SG]

These lights were very interested in that wartime configuration, it would appear. So this was the center of focus of the lights. They positioned themselves in that area.

It had been a typical training day for the 47th bomb wing at Loring Air Force Base. So there were a lot of aircraft sorties returning to base that night from their daily training missions and that sort of thing. And as sorties returned, I was told by those who had been there overnight they were asked to close with and try to identify these lights. And this included B-52's, KC 135's and some of the F-106 interceptors that had been out during their particular training missions. And the pattern was the same: each time an aircraft would approach, the lights would part in ways that defied any aerodynamic knowledge that anybody there had or could explain. There was rapid acceleration, rapid changes in direction including vertical. They were doing things that something that is flying by the rules of aerodynamics that we understand would not have been at able to do. Then always to return to their point of interest which was the aircraft in the alert area. And then at some point late in the night, early in the morning their curiosity was satisfied and they took off very expeditiously in a straight line and were gone.

I would be guessing how many hours this whole event took from beginning to end but it was probably in the range of six and perhaps more hours in duration.

[See the testimony of Chuck Sorrells regarding the 1965 Edwards AFB event that lasted a similarly long period. SG]

So I filed it away. And I just mused about it and I discussed it with a few people over the years but not too many. Until a day in the early 1990s — I forget the exact year and date but it was about '93 or '94 - that I had occasion to attend a lecture by Dr. Steven Greer in Hampton, Virginia. And saw a photograph of what I now understand is a very familiar sighting among those who have been privileged to actually see a UFO. And when I saw the photograph, I literally jumped out of my seat, grabbed my wife by the hand and I said, that's it. That is exactly what I had seen nearly 25 years ago, at that point. But to see that picture just brought back the image so strikingly clear that there was no doubt in my mind that that was exactly what we had seen over the runway in April of 1969. And it was only then that I had any notion that it was in fact a single machine not three independent machines.

[See the testimony of Clifford Stone and Nick Pope regarding the massive triangular craft seen in Belgium and Germany in the late 1980s and early 1990s. The photo Lieutenant Colonel Wojtecki refers to is one in our collection from an event over Belgium in 1990. SG]

SG: Were these objects at Loring AFB on radar?

JW: I will deduce with some degree of knowledge that they must have been because of the repeated attempts of returning aircraft to close with them, from distances and altitudes where they couldn't have acquired them visually because of the low ceiling that night. So I would deduce from that fact that they were being tracked on radar, both ground control radar and airborne radar on the aircraft that were returning to base. It would be a very reasonable deduction to say that they were easily being tracked on radar.

I was the Public Information Officer at that time so I can say with a high degree of certainty that there was no public statement regarding the incident.

I'm sure that SAC was involved in real time as it was happening. And if there were radar tapes, perhaps there was a record of the events in that regard...

I do remember very clearly that no aggressive action was taken by the Air Force by anybody at the wing in response to the lights because they in fact showed no aggressive or threatening behavior whatsoever. They were simply in airspace that was restricted air space. But they were not doing anything that would prompt any sort of a security response.

Upon reflection and in retrospect it is curious how quickly that subject just was dropped. It just wasn't discussed.

But very clearly having seen the photograph that is part of your presentation, I know exactly what it was. It is what you have photographs of from many different locations at many different times. It was the triangular, very large, ship.

SG: Was it bigger than a conventional plane?

JW: Oh absolutely. That's why I was so surprised when I saw the photograph to learn that those lights which were so far apart could conceivably be part of a single machine. And why I naturally assumed, and for all those years believed, I had seen three separate machines operating independently- although their formation was so perfect that in retrospect, clearly there is no reason to assume they were three, except that for them to be part of one unit it would have to have been so enormously large compared to anything. And at that time, B-52's were considered pretty big airplanes. And this of course dwarfed anything that would have been part of a B-52.

Testimony of Staff Sergeant Stoney Campbell - US Air Force

Sergeant Campbell entered the Air Force in 1966. In the summer of 1967 he was guarding a B-52 at a SAC AFB in Oklahoma when suddenly, directly over one of the B-52's, a huge bluish haze appeared. It was in the form of a boomerang wing and was glittery and not solid. It was picked up on radar and seen by numerous people.

I entered the Air Force in '66. My basic training was in San Antonio. From there I went to Altus Air Force Base in Oklahoma, from there to Vietnam, from Vietnam to Greece and was discharged honorably in Greece and returned back to the States. I went in as an enlisted man, came out with the rank of Staff Sergeant.

This was 30 years or more ago. This happened in Alms, Oklahoma at a SAC Air Force Base. I was guarding a B-52. SAC is the strategic air command and we were guarding nuclear weapons. I was on guard duty, guarding a B-52 bomber in the bomber area, which is divided in two sections with what we called the Hurry House in the middle. And that's where the officers and the flight crew stay on ready if they are on alert to disburse to the planes quickly. This would have been in the summer of 1967, sometime in the summer period. There were approximately four planes on each side. It would have been at night, probably late, midnight to probably sometime in the morning, between that period of time. Suddenly, over one of the B-52's which were armed with nuclear weapons, there appeared a bluish haze, almost in the form of a boomerang or a wing shape. And in this haze there was a glittery light. We had no idea what this was. We do know that the SAC teams were called to ready so they came out to the planes. But prior to that, this [object] just hovered over the plane for a short period of time and then it vanished. We were told later that it was picked up on radar. It wasn't as if you actually saw it glide away. It was like in a whoosh it was gone.

It covered most of the wingspan of the B-52--it was large. It was large. But it was also very transparent. It was not a solid mass. It was not what you would think of if you think of a UFO.

This was something that actually showed up on radar. And the perimeter guard saw it. And the other people on the other post, because there is one guard per B-52 bomber. There is a red zone around each bomber that you are not to allowed in it. So even the guard himself does not go past that red line.

The object was just above the B-52. Just above it, I'm talking like no more than 20 feet. It was just above eye level.

The alarm in the Hurry House must have gone off because the pilots came out to the planes. They boarded the planes and they started them up and were ready to taxi to take-off whenever notified. They just started their engines and then they must have gotten word [that the UFO had gone]. We didn't hear what's going on in the cockpit but they shut down the planes and then they went back in the Hurry House.

We had never seen anything like this so it was unusual. It was something that we were mystified by.

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION (Refer: Summary of Information, Subject: as above, dated 15 Oct 1950.)

On 13 October 1950 Atomic Energy Security Patrol Trooper, Edward D. Rymer, and a caretaker, John Moneymaker, from the University of Tennessee Research Farm, at Oak Ridge, saw an object at about 12,000 to 15,000 feet above Soloway Gate of the "Control Zone." This object appeared to be an aircraft which was starting to make an outside loop, trailing smoke behind. Soon these two men realized that the formerly described smoke behind the aircraft was a tail. This object continued to descend in a controlled dive, much slower than an aircraft would dive, and when it approached the ground it levelled off and flew slowly, parallel to the ground. This object came within two hundred and ten (210) feet of the two observers and was paralleling the ground at approximately the speed that a man could walk, at a height of approximately six (6) feet. Trooper Rymer attempted to approach the object but as he approached the object became smaller and started moving in a southeasterly direction. This object is said to have approached a nine (9) foot cyclone chain link fence and made a controlled movement to clear the fence, then a Willow tree, then a telephone post and wire, after which, the object gained momentum and altitude and cleared a hill at approximately one (1) mile away. The object appeared to be pear shaped. When this object was over the hill it was still visible as the same sized object that was observed when only fifty (50) feet away. (The explanation given was that this object grew larger as it gained altitude and speed.)

Approximately five minutes later the object appeared again. Having reappeared from approximately the same location from which it had disappeared. The object was seen again five minutes later for approximately ten seconds.

During the above happenings, Mr. John Moneymaker had visual reference of this object during its first sight for approximately seven minutes. Trooper Rymer was interrupted twice during which times he called his headquarters in an attempt to get other observers. Also, during the fantastic flight of this object, Trooper Rymer stopped Mr. E. W. Hightower, who was on the highway in his vehicle, to verify what was being seen. Mr. Hightower's statement substantiates the description as before.

By the time the object appeared the second time, Joe Zarzecki, Capt. of the Atomic Energy Commission Security Patrol, was present and also witnessed this phenomenon.

Each of the observers described the object substantially as follows:

- a. When the object was first sighted it appeared to be an aircraft, trailing smoke, or better described as "smoke writing."

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

- b. When the object was approaching the ground in its descent, it took on the shape of a bullet with a large tail.
- c. When the object was sighted on the ground (from approximately two hundred and ten (210) feet) it appeared to be approximately the size of a 2x5 card, with a twenty (20) foot ribbon tail. The object and the tail was alternately moving up and down, and the ribbon appeared to be waving in the breeze. The color was a metallic grey.
- d. When Trooper Rymer came within fifty (50) feet of the object he described it similar to the above except that the first two and one-half feet of the tail appeared more solid, but the last seventeen and one-half (17½) feet of the tail appeared almost transparent and was glowing, intermittently, in sections. The tail appeared to have four or five sections which would glow intermittently.

Trooper Rymer's record is among the best of the troopers at the Atomic Energy Commission Security Patrol. Mr. John Money maker holds badge No. UT-1817, and is employed by the University of Tennessee Agricultural Research Farm as a caretaker for small animals. Mr. E. W. Hightower holds badge No. 6633 and is an employee of the Maxon Construction Company.

The Controller, Capt. W. Akin, of Detachment No. 2, 662 AC and W Sqd., McGee-Tyson Airport, P. O. Box 202, Maryville, Tennessee, at the Knoxville Airport Radar Site, made a report that he had seen peculiar readings on the radar scopes at approximately 1520 hours. Apparently the radar picture was indefinite, intermittent, and inaccurate, because the objects sighted by radar would only make a short "painting" on the scope and would then disappear only to reappear at another location.

On 16 October 1950, at approximately 1520 hours, five persons (as yet unknown) sighted objects hovering over the K-25 plant at Oak Ridge, Tennessee. Further information and description is expected from these sources. However, the radar scopes at Knoxville Airport were giving an unintelligible reading. Apparently the Commanding Officer was reluctant to make any statement concerning these readings due to higher Headquarters doubting the event of the past few days.

Nevertheless, a fighter aircraft from the 5th Fighter Sqd. was sent to identify an object which was reported to be hovering over K-25. Upon approaching the area the radar equipment aboard the aircraft got an image on its scope and the pilot pursued this image and identified it as a light type aircraft. Ground

(G-2 NOTE: This report is a supplement to report, this headquarters, subject as above, dated 3 January 1949.)

1. Following is a list of sightings of unidentified lights over New Mexico subsequent to 27 December 1948:

- a. Los Alamos, 20 Dec 48, 2054 hours. Falling light from 45 degree angle, decreasing to 20 degree angle. Observed by four security inspectors at Los Alamos AEC project.
- b. Los Alamos, 28 Dec 48, 0431 hours. Descending vertical light much slower than falling star. Disintegrated in greenish flash lighting up cloud area between observer and light. Observed by security inspector, Los Alamos AEC project.
- c. Los Alamos, 30 Dec 48, 2010 and 2100 hours. High speed motor sound directly over Los Alamos and above overcast. Sound heard for seven seconds (timed) and repeated 10 minutes later. Heard again at 2100 hours for 8.2 seconds (timed). Positive determination that no vehicles on approaching highways and no planes overhead. Checked and observed by Los Alamos security inspectors.
- d. Sandia Base, 6 Jan 49, 1733 hours. Brightly lighted object from southeast to northwest. Diamond shape, two feet long. Altitude 1500 to 2000 feet. Speed - faster than a jet plane. No smoke or vapor trail. No sound. Observed by Sandia Base sentry who claims experience in aircraft observation.

2. Dr. LA PAZ, Meteorologist at the University of New Mexico, personally interviewed all persons who have made observations. He has made transit sightings to determine altitudes and angles of flight. He has made a report to the O.S.I. of the U.S.A.F., closing with this remark, "I have no hesitancy in testifying that an object possessing the real path and other peculiarities observed by Messrs. WILSON, TRUETT, STROMS, and SKIPPER was not a falling meteorite."

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

1. On 2 Sept 80, SOURCE related on 8 Aug 80, three Security Police-men assigned to 1608 SPS, KAFB, NM, on duty inside the Marzano Weapons Storage Area sighted an unidentified light in the air that traveled from North to South over the Coyote Canyon area of the Department of Defense Restricted Test Range on KAFB, NM. The Security Policemen identified as: SSGT STEPHEN FERENC, Area Supervisor, AIC MARTIN W. RIST and AMN ANTHONY D. FRAZIER, were later interviewed separately by SOURCE and all three related the same statement: At approximately 2350hrs., while on duty in Charlie Sector, East Side of Marzano, the three observed a very bright light in the sky approximately 3 miles North-North East of their position. The light traveled with great speed and stopped suddenly in the sky over Coyote Canyon. The three first thought the object was a helicopter, however, after observing the strange aerial maneuvers (stop and go), they felt a helicopter couldn't have performed such skills. The light landed in the Coyote Canyon area. Sometime later, three witnessed the light take off and leave proceeding straight up at a high speed and disappear.

2. Central Security Control (CSC) inside Marzano, contacted Sandia Security, who conducts frequent building checks on two alarmed structures in the area. They advised that a patrol was already in the area and would investigate.

3. On 11 Aug 80, RUSS CURTIS, Sandia Security, advised that on 9 Aug 80, a Sandia Security Guard, (who wishes his name not be divulged for fear of harassment), related the following: At approximately 0020hrs., he was driving East on the Coyote Canyon access road on a routine building check of an alarmed structure. As he approached the structure he observed a bright light near the ground behind the structure. He also observed an object he first thought was a helicopter. But after driving closer, he observed a round disk shaped object. He attempted to radio for a back up patrol but his radio would not work. As he approached the object on foot armed with a shotgun, the object took off in a vertical direction at a high rate of speed. The guard was a former helicopter mechanic in the U.S. Army and stated the object he observed was not a helicopter.

4. SOURCE advised on 22 Aug 80, three other security policemen observed the same aerial phenomena described by the first three. Again the object landed in Coyote Canyon. They did not see the object take off.

5. Coyote Canyon is part of a large restricted test range used by the Air Force Weapons Laboratory, Sandia Laboratories, Defense Nuclear Agency and the Department of Energy. The range was formerly patrolled by Sandia Security, however, they only conduct building checks there now.

6. On 10 Aug 80, a New Mexico State Patrolman sighted an aerial object land in the Marzano's between Belen and Albuquerque, NM. The Patrolman reported the sighting to the Kirtland AFB Command Post, who later referred the patrolman to the AFOSI Dist 17. AFOSI Dist 17 advised the patrolman to make a report through his own agency. On 11 Aug 80, the Kirtland Public Information office advised the patrolman the USAF no longer investigates such sightings unless they occur on an USAF base.

7. WRITER contacted all the agencies who utilized the test range and it was learned no aerial tests are conducted in the Coyote Canyon area. Only ground tests are conducted.

8. On 8 Sept 80, WRITER learned from Sandia Security that another Security Guard observed a object land near an alarmed structure sometime during the first week of August, but did not report it until just recently for fear of harassment.

9. The two alarmed structures located within the area contains HQ CR 44 material.

EXTRACTS

NORAD COMMAND DIRECTOR'S LOG (1975)

- 29 Oct 75/0630Z: Command Director called by Air Force Operations Center concerning an unknown helicopter landing in the munitions storage area at Loring AFB, Maine. Apparently this was second night in a row for this occurrence. There was also an indication, but not confirmed, that Canadian bases had been overflowed by a helicopter.
- 31 Oct 75/0445Z: Report from Wurtsmith AFB through Air Force Ops Center - incident at 0355Z. Helicopter hovered over SAC weapons storage area then departed area. Tanker flying at 2700 feet made both visual sighting and radar skin paint. Tracked object 25NM SE over Lake Huron where contact was lost.
- 1 Nov 75/0920Z: Received, as info, message from Loring AFB, Maine, citing probable helicopter overflight of base.
- 8 Nov 75/0753Z: 24th NORAD Region unknown track J330, heading SSW, 12000 feet. 1 to 7 objects, 46.46°N x 109.23W. Two F-106 scrambled out of Great Falls at 0754Z. SAC reported visual sighting from Sabotage Alert Teams (SAT) K1, K3, L1 and L6 (lights and set sounds). Weather section states no anomolous propagation or northern lights. 0835Z SAC SAT Teams K3 and L4 report visual, K3 reports target at 300 feet altitude and L4 reports target at 5 miles. Contact lost at 0820Z. F-106's returned to base at 0850Z with negative results. 0905Z Great Falls radar search and height had intermittent contact. 0910Z SAC teams agains had visual (Site C-1, 10 miles SE Stanford, Montana). 0920Z SAC CP reported that when F-106's were in area, targets would turn out lights, and when F-106's left, targets would turn lights on. F-106's never gained visual or radar contact at anytime due to terrain clearance. This same type of activity has been reported in the Malmstrom area for several days although previous to tonight no unknowns were declared. The track will be carried as a remaining unknown.
- 10 Nov 75: Apparently Minot AFB was reportedly "buzzed" by a bright object. The object's size seemed to be that of an automobile. It was flying at an altitude of 1000 to 2000 feet and was noiseless. No further information or description has been received by this organization.

- 16 Nov 75/0644Z: The Command Post received a report from a [REDACTED], Cloquet, MN (phone [REDACTED]). At 0430Z, while driving toward home, he passed through the town of Esko. He saw a cigar shaped objective with red, green and white flashing lights, going up and down and making sharp turns. He observed this for two hours. Sky conditions were clear.
- 18 Nov 75/1255Z: The Command Post was told that sightings of fire balls, vicinity of Mendocino County, California, had taken place. No further information, e.g., time, location, duration, etc., was available.
- 25 Nov 75/1245Z: [REDACTED] Petersburg, Virginia, reported that at about 0600 EST, she saw an object hovering at tree-top level in a clearing near power lines one-half mile distant. It had 4 red lights in diamond shape and 2 white flashing lights. She heard no noise, saw no movement and could not distinguish any color. She was in her car at the time, and slowed to 10 mph but did not stop. At 1340, the Command Post was informed that she had been reinterviewed by local authorities. She stated that the object was diamond-shaped with one red light at each point and that she did not see any wings. The location was reported to be one mile WSW of Petersburg, in a wooded area where power lines were being installed.
- 12 Nov 75/0715Z: Falconbridge Canadian Forces station relayed a report from Mr. [REDACTED], Sudbury, Ontario. He saw two objects with what appeared to be artificial light fading on and off with a jerky motion.
- 14 Nov 75/0530Z: An unidentified civilian, located two miles from Falconbridge Canadian Forces station, saw a dot-like object for 1 and 1/4 hours. It was rotating - going back and forth at a high altitude and had white, blue and red lights.
- 15 Nov 75/0742Z: A Mr. [REDACTED], Sudbury, Ontario, was facing south. He observed one bright yellow object going up and back, leaving a tail. It was very high, but did not change position in relation to other stars.
- 15 Nov 75/1229Z: A Mr. [REDACTED], married student residence, Laurentian University, Sudbury, Ontario, reported he had been looking east. In a partly cloudy sky, he saw one bright object about 70° elevation, like a cup in a bowl. He was looking at it through binoculars. It climbed high out of range of his binoculars. He observed it for 20 minutes and was witnessed by his wife.
- 17 Nov 75/1705Z: An unidentified caller reported a large orange ball was seen on an azimuth of 45° from River Court, Ontario. It had two red lights and was stationary.
- 23 Nov 75/1700Z: A Ms. [REDACTED], Chelmsford, reported she and friends were travelling by car from Sudbury to Chelmsford. They were followed by a huge oval-shaped object with white blinking lights. It remained below the clouds all the while and kept up with the car.

Introduction
From an oral presentation by Dr. Greer

In this section you will hear from people who have been involved in events where objects of extraterrestrial origin have landed or have crashed or been forced down and which have been retrieved. This is, of course, explosive testimony. It establishes the reality of the phenomenon and also of the fact that we have been studying this phenomenon for years. Many people might believe that this is limited to the so-called "Roswell event" of the 1940s; this could not be further from the truth. In fact there have been multiple events, at least a couple of dozen, where objects of extraterrestrial origin have been downed, acquired, and studied.

We believe that this is something which is of extreme importance because one cannot consider that covert programs—having spent hundreds of billions of dollars over the decades on research and development, so-called "reverse engineering" or "back engineering" extraterrestrial technologies—have not had significant breakthroughs. The testimony will show that in fact we have: That we have had breakthroughs that have trickled out to our society in the form of certain advances in electronics, materials, and sciences. However, the central breakthrough dealing with the physics of the quantum vacuum space — the so-called "zero-point energy" phenomenon, as well as antigravity and electrogravitic propulsion—has been withheld from our society. In addition, programs studying extraterrestrial technologies and extraterrestrial life forms are projects that are on going to this day.

This is something that would be of great importance to the world and the scientific community, but more importantly it is of great importance to our public officials who, we know, have not been briefed adequately on this subject.

Testimony of Astronaut Gordon Cooper

[We are grateful to Mr. Fox for sharing this interview with us.]

Gordon Cooper was one of the original Mercury Seven astronauts and the last American to fly into space alone. In his testimony he recounts how he observed UFOs flying in the same formation as his fighter group over the skies of Germany. These UFOs made maneuvers that could not be done by conventional fighters. He felt they must have been under intelligent control to communicate with one another due to the type of maneuvers they were mimicking. At another time, while filming conventional aircraft performing precision landings, a saucer flew directly overhead and landed ahead of them on a dry lakebed. The entire event was filmed including detailed close-ups. The film was sent back to Washington and was never returned.

GC: Gordon Cooper

JF: James Fox

GC: These objects [UFOs] kept coming over flying in the same kind of formation that we fly in our fighters while we were flying in Germany. We were flying F-86's. They would come over and do the same maneuvers that we made except every once in a while one of them would go zip, and make a maneuver that you can't do in a conventional fighter.

What started it was that the weatherman was tracking a weather balloon and he saw these objects with his binoculars. That started people getting out and looking at them and we decided to put some airplanes out and see what they were. But we couldn't get to them. They were higher and faster. So we couldn't tell whether they were large and far away or smaller and closer in. It was difficult to gauge exactly what their size was.

[Astronaut Gordon Cooper and the others know what weather balloons resemble and these UFOs were not "weather balloons", as the absurd government claims have maintained for over 50 years. SG]

JF: Were they in formation?

GC: They were definitely in formation.

JF: What year was this?

GC: In 1951.

JF: Do you think the Russians had that kind of technology back then [that could do this]?

GC: No.

JF: You definitely determined that they were objects that were under intelligent control?

GC: Well, yes. They weren't just random. They were flying fighter formations very definitely under control.

JF: Can you describe what they looked like?

GC: They were just typical saucer shaped, double saucer shaped, and metallic looking. I think they were definitely piloted vehicles. Each one of them had a pilot in it. I think they were very definitely in communication with one another because they would make a turn such that they had to be in communication to be coordinated.

One would zip off to the side, do a lateral maneuver off to the side...

Later at Edwards Air Force Base I was having some of the cameramen film precision landings and we were right on the edge of a dry lake. A saucer flew right over them, put down three landing gears, and landed out on the dry lakebed. They went out there with their cameras ... towards the UFO. It lifted off, put the gear back in the well, and flew off at a very high rate of speed and disappeared.

So while I was going through all of the regulation books and finding out the number to call in Washington to report this, I had the cameraman go over and develop the film. By the time they got back with the developed film I had higher and higher and higher level officers talking to me. Finally, a Colonel told me that when the film arrived on my desk to put it in a courier file. There would be a courier there at my office and they would arrange for him to fly in our base airplane back to Washington with these films. [The Colonel said] to not run prints, etc., etc., etc. So we stuck them in the courier packets.

JF: Did you watch the film?

GC: We didn't have a chance to run it. I had a chance to hold it up to the window to look at it. It was certainly good film.

JF: Were there close-up shots?

GC: Good close-up shots. Nothing like I had ever seen.

JF: Was the vehicle in the close-ups like the vehicles you had seen?

GC: About the same shape. Double inverted saucer shape. It didn't have wings on it or anything. It was pretty much the same shape [as the ones we saw in Germany].

Well, at the time this happened I was involved in research and development and doing very classified projects at the task center. I knew that we didn't have any vehicles [like that] at that time. I am 99.9% sure that the Russians didn't have any of that type either. At that point in time there was no doubt in my mind that it was made someplace other than here on Earth.

But you send it [the evidence] on just like you are told to do and you do what they tell you to do. At the time I was working on a little program that nobody knew about and we weren't allowed to discuss it with our family or anybody. That was the U-2 program. It [this event] was in the same category [of secrecy] really.

I don't know why [it is kept so secret]. In my opinion, I think they were worried it would panic the public if they knew that someone had vehicles that had this kind of performance way back right after WWII. So they started telling lies about it. Then I think they had to cover it with another lie, tell another lie to cover their first lie and now they don't know how to get out of it. Now it is going to be so embarrassing to admit that all of these administrations have told a lot of untruths. It will be embarrassing to get out of it.

JF: Do you think they want to get it out?

GC: I think that basically each and every President would probably like to get out of it, come clean on the deal and not have to continue to tell untruths. Eventually something is going to happen that will make all of them have egg all over their faces and they are going to have to admit that they haven't been truthful at all.

JF: Who has kept this secret?

GC: Well, somebody has kept it pretty secret for quite a while, haven't they?

[When asked about meeting with the United Nations Secretary General about UFOs in the 1970s, Gordon Cooper says:] Kurt Waldheim was really interested in the subject and he thought that it would be a good idea to form a committee and to do the investigation at that level [of the UN] but nothing ever got done. It was typical of the U.N. They talked a good game but they never get around to doing anything about it.

By NASA's own figures there are some 400,000 other planets out there that could be habitable. I just can't believe that God would inhabit this one planet and then leave all of those others bare. In my personal opinion, I just feel that we are out here in the hinterland of all of the galaxies. We are way out in the sticks. All of these other galaxies are closer to one another. I think they probably have a lot of travel to and from one another. Once in a while we will get a few travelers or stragglers or come through from distant other galaxies.

I wrote a letter [to the UN] suggesting that we form a group at the U.N. level and start gathering information around the world and let it be handled and coordinated at that level. There were a lot of countries that had information. There are a lot of countries like Russia is now. The government of Russia right now works directly with the civilian UFO groups. You have differences from country to country to country. But we should have all of this information come together and be correlated in one place.

Just think about what we could do from a technical point of view: some of them may be remotely operated. They may be radio-controlled so to speak like what we call unmanned or unpiloted vehicles. I think that some of them undoubtedly have crews in them and in my opinion I think those people are probably very similar to us.

I think definitely there was something other than a weather balloon that crashed at Roswell.

JF: Do you think the truth was lost?

GC: I think the truth has been very submerged in all of the lies that have been told.

JF: Do you think they would cover up one of those saucers that you saw?

GC: Very likely. I would like to think that they reverse-engineered it, did something of benefit with it. That would be the logical thing to do.

JF: Did you know where that footage went of the flying saucer that landed on the tarmac?

GC: It went to Washington; that is all I know.

JF: Did you ever keep in touch with anybody about it, or discuss it?

GC: How would I keep in touch with anybody? There is no way in the military or within the government of keeping track of something that is classified unless you are directly involved in it and I was not. I had no way of knowing what happened.

JF: Was it included in part of the Project Blue Book investigation?

GC: No, it was not. And that was one of the complaints that I had about Project

Blue Book. In my opinion, Project Blue Book was totally a whitewash.

[Other high level witnesses such as Colonel Brown and Dr. Wood have concluded the same: Blue Book was a PR whitewash while the real research went on elsewhere. SG]

There were a number of other things that I had occasion to know about that were not included in the Blue Book either.

In my opinion, I think they are coming from some other planet. There is no doubt in my mind. I think they are for real and I think that eventually we will find out that there is regular travel to this Earth from other planets.

Who was flying these vehicles we saw? I think there were extraterrestrial pilots flying them, no doubt about it.

[When asked about 'black' or invisible projects, Gordon Cooper says:] That was one reason that we did the U-2 Program the way we did it. We had put no classifications on that program because when you classify a program then a Congressman or a Senator thinks they can go out and tell all of the details. They are privileged to be able to do that. They trample all over security and tell the details to whomever they want to. We didn't classify it at all until Gary Powers was shot down. The world really didn't know about the U-2. At least in the United States we didn't know about them.

[Cooper and others have told me of projects beyond classification and Colonel Corso spoke of the E. T. projects as being conveyed 'brain to brain. Extremely tightly held unacknowledged projects such as those dealing with UFOs really are beyond top-secret and access is blocked to Congress and the public. SG]

I think we have a lot of potential learning from them [the extraterrestrials]. If we can just set up the schedule of how to go about doing it. They can come land in my backyard anytime. If they want to come land in my backyard I would welcome them.

I think they are just the same as we are just a little higher, a little better, and a little faster.

I have a good friend who is a commercial airline pilot and he has had about three different occasions where a UFO has pulled up right alongside his wing and stayed in formation with him. He is in a major airline. The airline has a policy that their crews aren't allowed to talk about UFOs.

Testimony of Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin, Esq.

October 2000

Brigadier General Lovekin entered the military in 1958. In 1959 he joined the White House Army Signaling Agency and served under President Eisenhower and then under President Kennedy with an above top secret clearance. He was familiar with Project Blue Book and related how that project documented highly scientific and specific UFO cases from very reliable sources. They reviewed photos taken from Air Force pilots, Marine Air Corps pilots, and some foreign pilots and multiple reports of radar lock-ons. He was also shown a piece of metallic debris taken from the Roswell crash. While working under President Eisenhower, he discovered that Eisenhower had a keen interest in UFO's, but that Eisenhower came to realize that he had lost control of the subject.

SL: Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin                      SG: Dr. Steven Greer

SL: I graduated from the George School, which is a private co-educational prep school in Philadelphia, in 1958 and went into the military. After going through advanced infantry training, I was transferred to the Pentagon where I worked for the Radio Frequency Engineering Office. I finished there and then joined the White House Army Signaling Agency in May of 1959. I served under Eisenhower from May of 1959 until he got out of office and then I served under Kennedy until I left the service in August of 1961.

My job was to learn to deal with code [and code breaking]. In the process of dealing with that I learned a lot about Project Bluebook [which deals with UFOs]. Bluebook was discussed quite openly in the office. Sections of Bluebook were opened for discussion. There were other matters as well that were brought to our attention: One afternoon when we were just about ready to finish up training, Colonel Holomon brought out a piece of what appeared to be metallic debris; it looked like a yardstick. It had inscriptions on it. And the inscriptions were pointed out by Colonel Holomon to each one of us who were in that class (I think that there were six or seven of us at that time). We were told that this object came from matters connected to Operation Bluebook.

What they were trying to say was, "Look, we have this physical evidence to go along with what you have seen in Bluebook; we have now been able to get our hands on and show you this material" and that is what he did. He went on to further explain that this was the material that had come from a New Mexico crash in 1947 of an extraterrestrial craft and that was discussed at length. If I am not mistaken, we spent perhaps another hour or so discussing this. The next day it was discussed again. He did not describe what the bodies looked like, although they did discuss the fact that there were bodies, extraterrestrial bodies. There were either three or five bodies... three or five stands out in my mind as the number that was taken. One was partially alive at the time that this happened and I do not know what may have happened to him after that.

The Air Force at that time was very, very much concerned with Bluebook and there were strict regulations involving anything that had to do with the reporting of UFOs or talking about a UFO. If you wanted to ruin your career, it was explained to us, the thing that would do this the fastest was to talk about UFO's. I was enlisted then and was the lowest thing down on the totem pole. We were being groomed for Top Secret and above, and that we certainly would not be cleared for any kind of confidential material should this information be released.

We saw an awful lot. We saw a lot of pictures of UFOs. Some pictures that I saw I think were maybe a little bit better than the ones you see today. These pictures of UFOs were taken by Air Force pilots.

SG: So you saw official pictures the military took of UFO's?

SL: Oh, indeed they did. Yes. Not only did the Air Force take these pictures but also some were taken by civilian pilots — and some were taken by Marine Air Corps pilots and some were foreign. It was made quite clear that there were a number of others that were in place in other agencies that were being used at that time that were not being put in the Bluebook. I inferred from that that perhaps those pictures were better than the pictures that they were showing us. I think that Colonel Holoman gave that impression to everybody in the class.

[See the testimony of Colonel Charles Brown of Project Grudge who also confirms that the really significant evidence was compartmented outside of Blue Book and in some cases even Grudge. SG]

This piece of an extraterrestrial craft was a grayish foil-like material maybe eight to ten inches long or so. It seemed giant-like because it was the first time that I had ever seen anything like this before and all eyes were just peeled on that particular thing. And when he told us what it was it was frightening. It was eerie. You could have heard a pin drop in the room when it was first mentioned.

SG: And what did he tell you it was?

SL: Well, he said that it had been taken from one of the ET craft that had crashed in New Mexico and that it had been taken from a box of materials that the military was working on. They didn't use the word "reverse engineering" at that time but it was something similar to reverse engineering that they felt like they needed to work on and it was going to take years to do this. I do remember that at the Army Engineers at Ft. Belvoir, they were doing a lot of experimentation and that surprised me. It surprised me an awful lot.

The inscriptions looked like hieroglyphics. It is hard to describe hieroglyphics but if you have ever seen any ancient Egyptian writings you will know that the hieroglyphics were animated in some form and these appeared to be animated. If I knew the code that was supposed to be used to find out how this language was to be interpreted then we could understand it. The writing was very expressive, you could tell it was expressive.

[Lovekin explained at another time that his group in the Pentagon was shown this item as an example of advanced, difficult to break code. SG]

He had a stainless steel box with a lock on it almost like a carpenter's box but maybe bigger. And that is where he got this from and that is where he put it back. And I gathered that was not the only thing that was in that box. But that is the only thing that he did show. This occurred in the Radio Frequency Engineering Office.

At the Pentagon, you have to remember, we had one instructor, a Lieutenant Colonel. And his job was to not only teach us but to make us believers as well and that is when he produced that piece of material from what appeared to be a stainless steel box. It was maybe a kind of a dusty gray like-foil and it looked like it may have been burned on a grill. He indicated that that was not the only piece of information that he had and the only object that he had. He had several others. Maybe the whole box was filled. I don't know, but that is the only piece that he took out to show us. And the reason he did this was to make sure that we understood we were dealing with something that was totally out of context from what we had been dealing with earlier but that we might be dealing with in the future. I think he intended for us to know that our futures were going to be dealing with this subject matter more and more.

He did describe the inscriptions as being symbols of instruction and that is as far as he would go but he did infer that the instructions, whatever they might have been, were something that was important enough for the military to keep working on a constant basis. He made it quite clear that this was something that was of grave importance. We were in the basement of the Pentagon and in those days. That was in 1959; there was a tremendous amount of security there in that area of the Pentagon. And anybody who has worked there knows what I am talking about. You could almost carry on an entire war in the basement and no one else would know what was going on on the floors above. That is how secure it was.

I was working on top-secret clearance. I had gotten a secret clearance and by the time I finished the school I had been given a top-secret one but I was given one step higher than that because at that time they didn't have a clearance specifically dealing with this (UFO) problem. If you dealt with a problem you got a Q Clearance, which was a nuclear clearance. Maybe later on they decided that they were going to change that but I remembered that that was the big question, "How are we going to give security clearances to these people who have been through this course?"

There were probably 1,500 reported cases at that time that were eligible to be put in Bluebook. The findings that were put in there were highly scientific. This information was information that would never get out to anyone else but it was designed for the use of particular military personnel. So what was there was extremely exact and specific. These cases were as bona fide as they possibly could be. They were talking about people who had sterling reputations either in the military or in the civilian capacity of some form or another but they were not taking any loose cannons. This was information they thought was extremely accurate.

There were stories about radar lock on. Several of those stories came out of Ohio at Wright Patterson Air Force Base but several others came from California, Texas, and Washington from what I can recall. I would estimate that there probably were between two and three hundred cases of radar lock on [with UFOs]. That is why those cases were in there because they were authentic.

I was told that the material they showed us came from the New Mexico site but there were other sites and there were other crashes of ET craft. They did not say where. They were not pinpointed but it was made quite clear that that was not the only site that they had gathered information from and also material.

[See the testimony of A.H., Clifford Stone, et al. SG]

The Wright Patterson Air Force Base was brought up on a number of occasions. Apparently there were more lock-ons at Wright Patterson than at any other Air Force Base. Edwards Air Force Base was mentioned as an experimental station. When I say mentioned, in that context I mean Edwards was involved in testing whatever ET materials they found. It was said that that was what was being done. Radar lock-ons had come from Edwards Air Force Base [too].

[See the testimony of Chuck Sorrells regarding the 1965 multiple UFO radar lock-on at Edwards. SG]

I should note that I was there in the Pentagon at the same time that Colonel Philip Corso was there.

I did not have any more contact with the subject matter of UFO's until after I came in contact with the President [Eisenhower]. I had heard that he did an awful lot of doodling on paper, on notebook paper, particularly at conferences that he wasn't particularly happy with. He would take to doodling and one of the things that he did was doodle various forms of UFOs.

I never saw Kennedy do this but President Eisenhower did it, and he did it in my presence as well as several other people who were attached to the White House Army Signaling Agency where I was assigned. When I first came to work for the President I didn't meet him until probably a month and a half after I had been on board. At that time it was a very formal meeting. Right after that I got an opportunity to travel a little bit with the President. We did some traveling towards Florida. And I had an opportunity to see him under fire, as it were, and how he handled certain people that he didn't like and when he did that he would doodle. He was probably one of the world's best doodlers and everybody would kid him about it. I wouldn't, but I wasn't in a position to do so but the higher officers would kind of say little things every now and then. He would just smile and keep on doodling.

Well, on some of those occasions he had just been given messages or had been given information pertaining to sightings or information about UFO's and I know that for a fact because I was in the COM Center and I saw that information. When he would get these reports it would excite him. He was just a kid. He would get so excited and give orders like D-day was happening all over again. He was very, very interested in the shapes and sizes of the UFOs and what made them go.

The White House itself has a huge COM Center in the basement. It is run by the Air Force but the Army is there. Every place where the President would go including Camp David has a COM Center that deals specifically with presidential traffic. The information would be conveyed usually by a Warrant Officer.

Our Chief Warrant Officer had been in the Army for probably 30 years or more. When he would get that kind of information [about UFOs] he sometimes would close himself off and he would be alone for a while and then he would call in whomever he needed to call in. But dealing specifically with UFOs, I can only remember on one or two occasions where that information came directly from the COM Center to him. Most of the time it seemed to come indirectly to the President.

Most of that material when it is passed through, it is "for eyes only," and that means that if you have a direct interest in it then you will see it. If you don't then you won't. You knew that there were sightings of UFOs. You knew that there were new findings. If you had been around the President long enough you could just judge by his expressions what he was reading and what interested him. It was just something that you knew from being around him.

SG: He showed particular interest in this subject?

SL: Very, very much interest. In fact, I would say that this subject was probably among his highest of interests at that time. Yes indeed.

Reports about these UFOs were not terribly rare. It happened quite frequently. I wouldn't dare say how many times but it happened frequently.

What happened was not one particular agency could handle dealing with the entire subject matter, dealing with the engineering portion, to sighting information, to reporting it into Bluebook. The whole process of dealing with the UFO phenomenon could not be handled anymore by one agency and so in order to keep it alive it was given to various parts of the government to work on. And I guess that they thought that they could also keep the intelligence factor as secret as possible by giving agencies a little bit here and a little bit there. And that type of compartmentalization oftentimes is done with matters like this.

But what happened was that Eisenhower got sold out. Without him knowing it he lost control of what was going on with the entire UFO situation. In his last address to the nation I think he was telling us that the Military Industrial Complex would stick you in the back if you were not totally vigilant. And I think that he felt like he had not been vigilant. I think he felt like he trusted too many people. And Eisenhower was a trusting man. He was a good man. And I think that he realized that all of a sudden this matter is going into the control of corporations that could very well act to the detriment of this country.

This frustration, from what I can remember, went on for months. He realized that he was losing control of the UFO subject. He realized that the phenomenon or whatever it was that we were faced with was not going to be in the best hands. As far as I can remember, that was the expression that was used, "It is not going to be in the best hands". That was a real concern. And so it has turned out to be.

It had been discussed with me on numerous occasions what could happen to me militarily if I discussed this. I would say that the government has done as good a job enforcing secrecy through the installation of abject fear as they have done with anything within the memory of modern man. I really believe they have done a job.

One older officer discussed with me what possibly could happen if there was a revelation. He was talking about being erased and I said, "Man, what do you mean erased?" And he said, "Yes, you will be erased-disappear." And I said, "How do you know all this?" And he said, "I know. Those threats have been made and carried out. Those threats started way back in 1947. The Army Air Force was given absolute control over how to handle this. This being the biggest security situation that this country has ever dealt with and there have been some erasures."

I know he was very convincing when he said this and he was in a position to know. He was much older than I and he had been involved with the CIA. He knew what he was talking about. He wasn't kidding. So I guess fear has done it. I don't care what kind of a person you are. I don't care how strong or courageous you are. It would be a very fearful situation because from what Matt [this older officer] said, "They will go after not only you. They will go after your family."

Those were his words. And so I can only say that the reason that they have managed to keep it under wraps for so long is through fear. They are very selective about how they pull someone out to make an example of And I know that that has been done.

In this country during the early 1950s, numerous bases were built that would allow the President and Congress and VIPs to go in case of attack. That is to maintain the government to function and so forth. Mt. Weather, Virginia was one of those. Ft. Ritchie, Maryland was another. Camp David, Maryland was another. There was another one in West Virginia at that time which we only knew as Concrete. That was the code name. Mt. Weather, for example, is underground. It is designed specifically to be impenetrable, as far as we knew, from atomic weaponry. When I first went on tour there, I was told about special equipment that they had. We had to go through all of these places where the President would go just to familiarize ourselves on what to do and how to do it. And there was equipment up there to deal specifically with the UFO problem. There was a standard operating instruction on what to do. UFOs had been sighted around Mt. Weather not only on one or two occasions but on numerous occasions from what I understand. They also have been sighted in West Virginia at the place that I referred to as Concrete.

We have gotten so much momentum with the secrecy that has shrouded this subject matter that we are liable to wind up in a big, fat crash. And granted I am not privy to the things that I would like to be privy to but as I see it when you propagate a lie and propagate a fear of the truth, you put yourself in a very vulnerable position.

They have been keeping this secret for a long time so evidently they have known how to do it. But at some point in time, because of the interest I think that the media has taken, there will be people coming out speaking that have never thought about speaking before, particularly about Nellis and what has been going on there. And you can't create anything positive through fear. Fear only degenerates the human soul and the human psyche, the human mind if you will.

I think secrecy has been enforced because what would be revealed would totally destroy an economy that was designed by certain capitalists in this country a long, long time ago to maintain them and their corporations from here to eternity. I think oil has a special interest in seeing that it maintains its position where it is, regardless of what kind of pollution or disastrous side effects may have occurred and continue to occur.

I think that what we are dealing with is certain electromagnetic devices that are powered by sources that we just don't quite understand as of yet -well, we are certainly not advertising them anyway. But these devices would generate free power. And free power would be something that corporations panic about. I think this government panics about it. Looking at it from a governmental point of view:

How are you going to tax free power? And from everyone that I have talked to who knows something about this subject matter, they do believe that the sources of energy that keep these vehicles in propulsion are sources of energy that are just as free as free could be. They don't cause any harm to the environment. They don't cause any footprints to be left anywhere...

Given the fact that we are having a real question about how to deal with the high price of Arab oil right now, Bush as you know, is crying to insist that we go into some of the arctic regions and take more oil out. I for one don't see that as an answer. With the global warming situation being what it is, that would just be another nail in our coffin. But at some point in time we are going to have to share this information that would allow us to have free energy. The government knows about this. It is foolish for them to try to make the rest of us look like imbeciles and say that this can't happen. Well, it can happen.

The question was, "Did I hear that we had ever picked up signals which could not be identified or, if they could be identified, were they coming in from strange craft that perhaps had put us under surveillance?" Yes I did hear that. I heard that from at least five or six reports that wound up in Bluebook. In fact, several of the reports had come in through pilots' radios. So whatever intelligence we were dealing with at that time knew how to deal with us. They knew how to communicate with us and we knew they were of extraterrestrial origin.

Testimony of Merle Shane McDow, US Navy Atlantic Command

October 2000

Mr. McDow entered the Navy in 1978 and gained a top-secret, Special Compartmented Intelligence (SCI) clearance with a Zebra Stripes. He was assigned to the Atlantic Operational Support Facility, Atlantic Command, then under Admiral Trane. Mr. McDow was present when a UFO was tracked by radar and seen by pilots visually moving at high speed up and down the Atlantic coast. The Command Center was put on Zebra alert and Admiral Trane gave the order to force down the UFO. Mr. McDow discusses the threats, intimidation and confiscation of logbooks that occurred after the event.

MM: Merle McDow

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

MM: I enlisted in the United States Navy in August of 1978, and was assigned to the USS America, where unfortunately I sustained some injuries on the flight deck while performing my duties. I then went to CINC-ANT Fleet, Atlantic Command Support Facility in Norfolk, Virginia on Hampton Boulevard. I was directly assigned to AOSF, Division 22; we were a group of about eleven people then. We were directly responsible for briefing Admiral Trane who was the Commander in Chief, Atlantic Command. We briefed him on current military operations around the world, what the Soviets were doing that day, what they had done the night before, etc.

AOSF is just an acronym for Atlantic Operational Support Facility and CINC-ANT Fleet is another acronym for Commander in Chief-Atlantic Fleet, which Admiral Trane was at the time. Everyone on the eastern seaboard answered to this man.

After a six month wait I got a top-secret, Special Compartmented Intelligence (SCI) clearance, with a zebra stripe identification badge, which permitted access to all facilities on the base at all times.

I had unrestricted access to any facility at any time as well as the Command Center to which it was specifically assigned. My station was up on the mezzanine, or the third deck as we called it, over the Command Center. My job was to make sure that any incoming and outgoing audio/video information that came into the Command Center was recorded and duly logged for reference in case they needed it later.

I recorded all of the video and audio- everything that is going on- even when they called a Condition Zebra alert. This was generally a training exercise that they would announce beforehand by saying, "This is a drill. This is a drill. Set Condition Zebra." and unauthorized personnel would then be escorted out of the Command Center if they didn't already know that they had to leave.

Condition Zebra is the highest level of alert that the Navy has - or had at that time - for generally dealing with global nuclear threats, in particular the Soviets. Soviet Bearcats were routinely patrolling up and down the eastern seaboard watching what we were doing. And we would set a Condition Zebra if we had the need to put planes in the air to escort the bearcats out of the area if they were a little too close to our airspace or if they had ships in the area that were suspicious acting, for instance. Or we would have a drill, for instance, when they would get out the MAD books to wage nuclear war. The Watch Officer and the Junior Watch Officer, the JOD, had keys to a safe and they would get these books out called the MAD books - Mutual Assured Destruction - and they would have the codes that were necessary to transmit to the submarines if necessary, to launch a nuclear strike. And not many people were allowed in the Command Center when that was going on because they actually did use the codes and so forth. I am sure the Soviets and any others person who were enemies of the United States would like to get their hands on that information.

The Zebra Classification- well, without that you were not allowed authorized access to these facilities during this drill and the Zebra Drill was specifically for the highest level of top-secret information that was being exchanged between the Command Center and ships and/or submarines at sea.

Well, about this incident: The day started out pretty routine. I would say this was around the first week or two in May [1981] to the best of my knowledge. So everything was going along pretty routinely when they dimmed the lights (they did this first in the Command Center when they set a Condition Zebra alert). Most of the time when they set these drills they would say, "This is a drill. This is a drill. Set Condition Zebra." But they turned the lights down this time and they didn't say, "This is a drill." And the Watch Officer and the Junior Watch Officer looked at each other and told some of their assistants to verify whether or not this was a drill as the event was taking place. And the early warning system-I believe it came in from an Air Force base in Greenland or Nova Scotia at that time- said that we had contact with an unidentified flying object that had entered our air space. And they said that this was not a drill and so it was treated with the utmost promptness and everyone started running around like mad once they realized that it wasn't a drill. It took on a whole different air.

Within moments of that, the Watch Officer summoned Admiral Trane over to the Command Center because this was a little out of his area of authorization for lack of a better way to put it. It required Admiral Trane s oversight. And within minutes Admiral Trane was rushed into the Command Center into his viewing booth that he had right under the Mezzanine there and the first thing that Admiral Trane wanted to know was how many contacts we had, where they were, which direction were they going, and were the Soviets responding. Because we knew that it wasn't the Soviets that had entered our airspace. That was verified from the get go, from the start.

At that point, when Admiral Trane found out that it wasn't the Soviets and that he wanted to know were the Soviets responding to this threat also, that was the moment that he gave authorization to put two planes up to go see what this thing was. And that was when the chasing up and down the eastern seaboard began. We launched planes from as far north as Greenland to NAS (Naval Air Station) Oceania. This object, we had it on radar- this event lasted almost an hour. You could hear the pilots live voice transmissions being piped into the Command Center. And they had visual confirmation of the object and made descriptions of the object. Pilots were able to close a couple of times and were able to see that the object was not an aircraft that we were familiar with- it was nothing that we had and nothing that the Soviets had. That was determined very quickly. This vehicle or whatever it was that they were chasing showed very erratic flight up and down the coast, quick flight.

It would actually be off the coast of Maine, for instance, and would leave the airspace in that area so quickly that we were having to have planes coming out of Dover Air Force base just to pick it up just in what seemed like moments. Well, I know for a fact that it would take an F-14 probably thirty minutes to traverse that much distance but this object, whatever it was, was just popping up. One minute it was here and the next minute bam, it was down several hundred miles down the coast, just playing tag.

[See the accounts of Dr. Paul Czysz, Commander Bethune, and many others regarding this type of non-linear and extraordinary propulsion. SG]

It did go all the way down to a point off the coast of Florida around Mayport, the Naval Air station that we have down there at Cecil Field. And that was before it turned and took what would have been an easterly direction from our vantage point back up towards the Azores before we actually lost track of it.

During all this, we were using satellites called the KH-11 satellites that we use for information gathering. And this satellite did have a very high capability of taking really good photographs of things literally within a few feet of the ground from a vantage point out in outer space. And they were trying to get the KH-11 satellite to track this thing to get some photographs of it. The photographs that we did get back in the Command Center later on came from the first encounters that the planes had with it off of the northern North American coast. They did get close enough to get some photographs taken that were later brought over to the Command Center.

Well, from the photograph I remember the shape was more like a cylinder; it was quite flat and long. It had abrupt ends. The ends didn't taper down like most aircraft. It just came to an abrupt end and it did appear to be reflecting sunlight and you could clearly tell that it was metallic. And the pilots were giving information such as it was not leaving behind a vapor trail, no discernable lights or markings on it, no cockpit windows or doors, nothing like that. It just seemed to be one solid thing whatever it was.

What was really bugging Admiral Trane, what was really driving him nuts, was this thing absolutely had complete control of the situation and could be anywhere that it wanted to be in a matter of seconds. One minute we were closing on it off the coast of Maine and the next minute it is in Norfolk heading south towards Florida. And it is all that we can do to get the early warning radar up and down the coast to watch for this thing as it just had it's day with us.

Admiral Trane and his staff were quite concerned about it to say the least. They were quite concerned especially once they found out that it wasn't the Russians and it wasn't us and he wasn't aware of anyone else who had the technology to build such a craft that could move about so easily and so quickly. I remember distinctly looking over the rail of the mezzanine and just watching complete chaos break out because of their inability to keep an eye on this thing, whatever it was.

The UFO was moving around so erratically and so quickly up and down the coast... They were trying to notify as many commands as they could up and down the coast to track this thing or get a plane up. Admiral Trane was scrambling and authorizing planes just left and right up and down the whole eastern seaboard to try and cut this thing off and to get some planes from the north and south to literally track it and to force it down. It was clear that they wanted to recover it, to force it down by whatever means possible.

The order was given by Admiral Trane to try and get this object forced down out of the sky if at all possible, by whatever means possible. After they found out and knew for certainty that it wasn't the Russians, they didn't care who it was as long as it wasn't the Russians. They didn't care who it was or where it was from. They wanted it and they wanted it bad.

The information coming in from the Command Center was being relayed to us from different radar sites that we have up and down the eastern coast that watch our airspace.

I would describe the officers as being scared. Yeah, they were scared to put it in a nutshell. Admiral Trane was usually a very calm man of very mild demeanor a really nice fellow. And you never really saw him lose control or raise his voice or get excited about anything. But this really got him upset to say the least. I would say that was the impression that I had from most of the officers there- they were just as much in the dark and scared as everybody else.

They would actually not track it down the coast. It would just appear hundreds of miles from the last sighting. And the pilots said that one moment it was there and the next moment it wasn't. And I think that that was one of the things that really had Admiral Trane's hackles up because he didn't have any control of it or the situation.

This thing just had a mind of its own and was causing such an uproar up and down the eastern coast. Admiral Trane was ultimately responsible at that time and I am sure it was stressing him out quite a great deal. You could tell by his tone of voice. You could just tell by listening to him that he was very, very, very worried.

But on radar we were keeping track of it one minute and then we would absolutely lose it, and then we would pick it up. It would just appear as an unauthorized vehicle in military airspace.

And trust me, the military knows where every commercial flight is at all times. We knew where every plane we had was at all times. We knew where every commercial flight coming through our airspace was at all times. There just wasn't anything going on that we didn't know about it. All the planes that were scrambled were put up off of the shore facilities- the Navy has shore facilities, the Naval Air station for example, Oceania.

When you set a Condition Zebra, whether it is a drill or not people are not authorized to be there who do not have a Zebra Access Badge. It is a zebra striped area on your clearance badge. They have to leave the Command facility and we have Marines stationed inside and outside the building there that were under orders to shoot any unauthorized personnel that remained in the Command Center during one of these episodes. That was for the interest of national security.

For example, one time a Condition Zebra was called and the Marine comes in and wants to know what is going on. Is this a drill or so forth? They have got orders to start shooting people. And I know because I actually got the Junior OOD's attention and said, "Hey, you guys need to tell this guy something. He is ready to start shooting people." They haven't told him to stand down yet, which he did. And I remember wanting to just get the hell out of there because he came in there and he said, "You have got a minute or two. If I don't find out something"- he was ready to come in there and start shooting people, destroying evidence.

When this event, as I refer to it, ended, the object that we had been chasing up and down the seaboard headed out over the Atlantic, over the Azores. I do remember them saying that it had pulled up at a 66 degree angle as it approached the Azores like this, and it just pulled up at a 66 degree angle without slowing down or anything and left the atmosphere and was gone into space. It just took off into space and was gone like that (snaps fingers). I mean it just absolutely left. You are talking about something that covered thousands of miles in a blink of an eye and it was just gone and it just left everyone sitting around scratching their heads. "Gee whiz, I wonder what that was."

It was comical in a way to see how the vast military might of the United States was put on its knees by something they had no idea what it was, where it came from, where it was going or anything. The only thing that they knew for sure was that it wasn't the Soviets and they were very adamant about finding that out.

So we secured from Condition Zebra. They turned the lights up. Everyone was sitting around talking about it down on the command floor. I am up here by myself on the third deck. Admiral Trane is down here in his briefing area. They stayed for a few minutes before they left. I made a note of it in my logbook like you had to do. Then I really didn't give it much more thought.

Later, these two guys came in, in suits. They weren't in military uniform. They just came in, in suits and they had their little badges on but they didn't have Zebra Striped badges. It was like a visitor badge. You could tell that they weren't regular personnel. And I didn't know them from Tom, Dick, or Harry. I had never seen these guys before. So we go downstairs to the first floor and there were several little conference rooms and they took me into one that they already set up and sat me down- and they had my logbook. They got that and took it down with me.

These two gentlemen began to question me about this event. They were being pretty rough about it to be honest with you. I remember literally putting my hands up and saying, "Wait a minute fellows. I'm on your side. Just a minute," because they were not really nice. They were very intimidating and made it quite clear to the point that nothing that was seen, heard, or witnessed, that transpired was to leave this building. "You are not to say a word about it to your co-workers. And off base, you just forget everything that you may have seen or heard concerning this. It didn't happen." They were nasty, I guess is a good way to put it. I distinctly remember sitting back in my chair and I put my hands up and had to tell these guys, "Wait a minute, we are on the same side fellows. We don't have a problem here."

You got the impression that they would do bodily harm to you otherwise, without really coming out and threatening you. You could just tell by their tone of voice when someone is saying, "Hey buddy, do what I say or else."

If this object had been hostile and wanted to drop weapons or shoot missiles at us, or whatever, it would have been very easy for them to do that. There was no question about that. We didn't have anything at that time that could hold a candle to whatever this was. And it just had its own free run of our airspace and could do anything it wanted as far as traveling. We did not pose any threat to it whatsoever. That was painfully obvious, very much so. I do believe that Admiral Trane knew that too and was quite afraid. Just in a word I would say that that old boy was just plain scared.

SG: Whatever happened to the photographs of the UFO?

MM: That is a really good point that you raised about what happened to the 35 mm slides that we had. That is a really good point that you have there because we never got around to putting them up on the Telesign [sp] for Admiral Trane to actually view. They were just prepared. I can remember her [the technician dealing with the slides] telling me that these two men in suits came in, got up all the film developed and undeveloped and all the materials that they had with it and the slides. My logbook, I never did see that again. I know that we had a new logbook the next day- a brand spanking new one to start with. I don't know what happened to it and nobody really knew what happened to it.

This technician also said, "These two guys came in here and read us the riot act and wanted this, that and the other and rounded up all their stuff and they weren't real nice."

This event went down as just an unidentified flying object. They never did know what it was. I remember the Watch Officer and the JOD and the OOD, Officer of the Deck and Junior Officer of the Deck, I do remember them looking at each other talking. And I am just hanging my head over listening and they are talking to each other about how to put it in their logbook. They just said, "Put it down as an unidentified flying object contact and that is it."

I would say that the facilities that actually had this UFO on radar- there were five that I am sure of, and that is from Greenland all the way to Florida, and there may be some others that I don't know. I know this because Admiral Trane was giving orders to NAS Oceania, "Let's get some planes up from there, scramble some fighters." He did make a call for them to alert Dover Air Force Base, Patuxent River, Maryland, Cecil Field down in Florida...

When I got out, I received an official United States Navy document on the Navy letterhead. They gave me this document where for five years it was absolutely out of the question for me to leave the country under any circumstances whatsoever. And to leave the state of Virginia I had to contact the Roanoke office of the FBI and let them know if I just wanted to cross the state line to go into North Carolina. And that was for five years after I was discharged.

I also wanted to tell you about this member of my wife's family. Jack Booth is his name. He is dead now but he was in the army and he was stationed at Roswell when the Roswell incident happened. He was my wife's uncle- my wife's mother's brother. He was from Bluefield, West Virginia. He said that when he was just a kid in the army, he was at Roswell (NM) when this thing, whatever it was, crashed. And he was there pulling guard duty when they went out to the crash site. A truckload of them went to pick debris up and whatnot, and he was there when they actually did recover the bodies. He said, "I am telling you that they put little bitty guys in body bags and they weren't humans. They were just little odd-looking fellows. They were nothing like a human." And they put them in body bags and one or two of them were still conscious or alive or something like that from the crash. There were actual survivors from this crash according to him.

They were picking up all the little pieces of the craft and he said that they actually put those guys down shoulder to shoulder on their hands and knees and went across the debris area picking up any little speck and scrap that they had. And they did it for days. He said that they were all threatened. He said they just came right out and said, "Look, if you say anything about this you might just turn up missing tomorrow."

[See the testimony of Glen Dennis, John Weygandt, Brigadier General Lovekin, et al regarding such threats. SGJ

He did say that. They didn't make any bones about it and came right to the point about letting them know how much they wanted to keep this under wraps. He said, "I'm telling you - I was there."

Another man I met who knew about this subject was John Michael Murphy. He was a Marine Corp Corporal when I was in the Navy. He was stationed down there at the security barracks at CINC-ANT Fleet. He was part of the security detail there for the base. Murphy swore up and down that when he was still in the Marine Corp that he had actually guarded a spaceship, an extraterrestrial craft at a facility not far from Dover Air Force Base over in Delaware. Knowing Murphy as I did, I would believe him. I would believe Murphy. This would have been 1979 maybe, 1980.

[This testimony is of great significance because the witness had such a high security clearance top secret SCI with Zebra stripes and was personally involved in a prolonged encounter with an extraterrestrial vehicle for over one hour that was on at least five radar scopes, visually contacted by pilots, etc. It underscores the need for a general disclosure on the subject since the dangers to world peace and security resulting from our forces chasing and attempting to down such advanced craft are obvious. In briefings that I have done for senior CIA and Pentagon officials, often we find these men are not at all adequately informed about the subject and might react in a similarly dangerous fashion shown here by Admiral Trane's orders to down the object. In the vacuum of secrecy, terrible mistakes can be made due to a lack of knowledge and perspective. For this reason we continue to call for an ending of secrecy on this subject so that our military and national security leaders can be adequately informed and so diplomats and other leaders in society can formulate an appropriate, safe, and peaceful response to the extraterrestrial civilizations which are already observing our world. The stakes are too high to allow this matter to be the domain of only covert projects or unprepared military leaders. The danger here is not from the extraterrestrial vehicles per se but from a lack of knowledge and preparation in how to properly deal with their presence. SGJ

Testimony of Lt. Colonel Charles Brown (retired), US Air Force
October 2000

After returning from WW II an Air Force hero, Col Brown worked in the Air Force Office of Special Investigations. He was assigned to work on Project Grudge where he was responsible for investigating UFO's and came to recognize that on some cases there were no viable conventional explanations. He later came to believe that Bluebook was a deliberate whitewash to the public. Among others he was privy to reports of cases where four independent radars were tracking objects that were traveling 5000 miles an hour.

CB: Lt. Col. Charles Brown                      SG: Dr. Steven Greer

CB: I'm a retired Lieutenant Colonel in the United States Air Force. I spent approximately 23 years in military service, and the latter seven years as a Senior Foreign Service Officer. In my career I spent about 15 years abroad. I started out as an enlisted man in the army in the West Virginia National Guard in the fall of 1939 [and] enlisted in the regular U.S. Army in the Signal Corp. in June of 1940 upon graduation from high school. I started training as a pilot in July of 1942 and was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant pilot in April of '43, then trained as a B-17 pilot aircraft Commander.

I went to Europe and arrived there in early November of 1943 and commenced combat as a B-17 pilot on 13, December, 1943. I flew my 29th and last complete mission on the 11th of April, 1944. Combat during this period was fairly severe. I just completed a survey of my 31 attempts at missions. And every time we went into the air, we had 235 casualties during those 31 missions. And I was very fortunate to complete it...

[I was] given a regular Air Force commission in early 1950. I left active duty in the fall of '65 and gave up my promotion to Colonel to accept employment as a Senior Foreign Services Officer. I then served seven years with the Agency for International Development. Six of those seven years were spent in Southeast Asia as a regional inspector for the Agency.

Basically, because of my counter-intelligence training and police work in an outfit called Air Force Office of Special Investigations, and because I was one of the few pilot trained investigators, I ended up doing a lot of investigations of aircraft, unusual aircraft accidents in which sabotage was suspected. And as a consequence became acquainted with some outstanding scientists and worked with the Air Technical Intelligence Center on a project called Grudge. At that time Office of Special Investigations was a worldwide investigative unit in the Air Force. We were given the responsibility of investigating what became known as unidentified flying objects. The title within the center was Project Grudge.

My job was in District D-05 of Wright Patterson Air Force Base where we received these worldwide reports. My job was to hand carry these reports over to the technical center and coordinate them with the project officer and answer any questions from an investigative viewpoint that I could assist on. I did that for approximately two years until the fall of 1951.

When I left Wright Patterson, Colonel Dunn was nice enough to give me a two-page letter of appreciation for my work with Project Grudge. And so far as I know, that is certainly one of the early formal recognition's of work of an Air Force officer with Project Grudge. Now, the behind the scenes efforts that could have been going on simultaneously, fortunately, I was not privileged to but I did gain a feeling [of what was going on] in that many of the investigations were never answered. Normally, in the investigative field, you have an allegation of something or in the case of a UFO, a sighting let's say. You carry it through to its conclusion and a result. And, in many of those instances, although it's been a long time ago, I do know that there were no viable scientific results [reported]. And as a consequence, it developed my interest into the unidentified flying objects. Having spent several hundred hours in the air at that point, I followed it throughout the rest of my Air Force career. And in Strategic Air Command, I was a coordinating officer between the Deputy for Intelligence and Continental Army Command, which at that time, had responsibility for the missile defense of the United States.

When an object is moving a few thousand miles an hour, 12-14 minutes is a tremendous amount of time. I do remember speeds in excess of four to five thousand miles an hour, which were far in excess of any known aircraft that we had or any of the enemies. And being an Intelligence Officer one of my responsibilities was to have at least a rough idea of enemy capabilities and of their equipment.

Once, we flew into Nellis Air Force Base and another pilot and I were flying a Gooney Bird [C-47A Skytrain]. The sky was totally clear. And an object went across southwest to northeast and it transited the entire heaven, looking at it from my right, and it went out of sight on the left, in probably less than 15 seconds. It was moving at a speed that I couldn't even begin to calculate. It was certainly no satellite. It was a controlled object in flight.

Some of the objects reported were tracked on radar. We had objects with four-way confirmation, ground visual, ground radar, airborne visual, airborne radar. And so far as I'm concerned, it doesn't get any better than that!

[Here we have a senior military and foreign service official, a hero of our country, confirming the excellent nature of the radar evidence and the reality of these UFOs while in Air Force Project Grudge. This starkly contradicts the official Air Force and government claims that no adequate evidence exists to confirm the reality of UFOs and therefore there is nothing to study. SG]

You are not talking about someone's imagination. And in this same time-frame, I heard so-called experts that the Air Force brought in and concoct stories from swamp gas to things like that. If it's an aircraft with wings and then the laws of air dynamics apply, you don't stop that thing and reverse it in a blink of an eye. And things like that did occur.

It is sort of strange but we send people to prison, we send people to their death because of eyewitness accounts of crimes. Our legal system is based on that to a large degree. Yet in my following of unusual aerial phenomena for the past 50 years, there seems to be some reason to discredit very viable and very reputable witnesses when they say something is unidentified. Well, you show me the individual that can identify everything in the heavens, and I will show you the Second Coming. Just, that simple! Because I don't care how technically qualified you are ~ for someone who is not there to voice an opinion and say oh, they saw such and such [is nonsense]. And my question is, where did they get off, what was the stop that dropped them that qualified them to be experts? And I have a real problem with that.

I truly believe that these phenomena have been visiting this planet long before Project Grudge. I think there is adequate evidence of it. And the more we learn about the planet, the more we learn how little we truly know. And so the advance of science is something that has to keep evolving and we have to keep learning.

CB: I do not remember much of that. And I would do very little in terms of looking at Gun Camera film, for example. Photographs I tried to, to do rather well on.

SG: Had you heard that Gun Camera footage of UFOs exists?

CB: I had every reason to believe they existed. But I also had reason to believe that the Gun Camera film was handled very carefully, not for general observations.

[Note that Colonel Brown repeats what Commander Graham Bethune and others have observed: that the compartmented nature of projects dealing with the UFO subject creates a situation where someone like Colonel Brown, working inside Project Grudge would not have access to other evidence, projects and information. SG]

CB: President Truman, who was a rather direct individual [knew about these objects] over White House airspace. I've seen radar photographs of organized lights of unidentified objects, balls of light, if you will [over the White House]. These are on radar, ground, visual ground radar, airborne visual, airborne radar. Now the airborne visual, strangely enough, by the time you get a couple of fighters down there, those things apparently disappeared whenever they wanted to.

[He is referring here to the multiple encounters of UFOs over the White House and surrounding areas in July of 1952. SG]

So President Truman gets involved. He sees all of the newspaper headlines and things. He says I want the man who is responsible for investigating these things. So, I think General John Sanford was an Air Force Assistant Chief of Staff Intelligence. Someone said, well, General Sanford is the Chief of Air Force Intelligence. So President Truman said, is he the guy that's responsible for it? Well, they said, well yes, sir, overall, but... Truman said, is he handling the investigation? They said, no sir. That would be a man out at Wright Patterson AFB. Truman said, then that's the man I want to brief me. So I do know that they flew into Washington. And I have every reason to believe that he briefed the President.

Later when I was in Britain, they were having a NATO exercise out in the North Sea area. And a couple of these little friendly balls of light got in the traffic pattern. Well, you can imagine what happened when they flew over the deck without landing, needless to say. And it threw the Navy into absolute consternation, as you can imagine. Well, the newspapers picked it up and they were in those days able to talk to the sailors and the airmen involved. And everyone is screaming for an investigation. They [the British] said, we have no investigative agency, blah, blah. Well, to make a long story short, some years later, the group Captain I worked for, who retired as an Air Vice Marshall... we were talking about this incident. And he said that the U.K. agency investigating UFO's was one floor above me in the same building that I worked in for three and one-half years, and yet they did not admit its existence!

[This testimony is corroborated by British Foreign Service Official Gordon Creighton who, while not knowing Colonel Brown, tells an almost identical account of a covert UK office dealing with the matter. SGJ]

Well, this is just the tip of the iceberg, because some of the very unusual sightings were in the U.K.

[See the testimony of Nick Pope, Larry Warren, et al. SG]

And they were also talking about the little Foo Fighters that were over Germany. The Germans thought they were ours and we thought they were Germans. Now in the real world, balls of light do not have a place being guided by an Intelligence, being airborne, and causing consternation or playing games. There is no explanation other than they are from someplace else. So as far as I'm concerned, that is totally inexplicable, based on my judgment, my background, and my research.

I do know that there are agencies of our Government that can manipulate data. And you can create or recreate [whatever you want]. Craft, intelligently operated craft, have basically violated our laws of physics on this planet. And they have done that for a long time. The fact that the Government at this point - I know we have been investigating since 1947 - has not come up with an answer, to me indicates that there is something seriously wrong. Are we this incompetent in science? I don't think so. Are we this incompetent in intelligence? I know we are not this incompetent in intelligence. Now, Project Blue Book, when it was closed by Dr. Condon's group, I have every reason to believe that this was a total deliberate whitewash.

[This is confirmed by Government documents and the testimony of Dr. Robert Woods and others. SG]

And my judgment is that there is an excellent chance that elements of the United States Government, for reasons unknown, have failed to advise the public of everything that has transpired.

UFO's have been investigated for an extended period of time and the general public is not being made aware, fully aware - but are given only bits and pieces, programmed responses and things like that. So it is strange that you should be interviewing me prior to a national election [October 2000] because all you have to do is turn on a television set or listen to a radio and you hear and see the results of professional programming. We make blind men see and injured people walk and things like that. And we make people talk in a certain fashion and we give them intelligence. We can do a lot of things. We also hide a lot of things.

SG: Please tell us about your work with new energy research and how that has been suppressed.

CB: I knew from engineering manuals and from research done at MIT that if we went from totally dry air to totally saturated air, you should improve the efficiency of an engine by about 2%. Well, by humidifying air [through this process we discovered] — at that time I thought it was all I was doing — I was getting 20% to 30% improvement in the efficiency of an internal combustion engine. Well, engineering people and scientists just wouldn't believe it. So I went ahead, not knowing any better, I started selling these devices which improved engine performance so remarkably. Well, some strange things started to happen and Government agencies moved in, and particularly the Federal Trade Commission. The EPA was satisfied that it worked. But there was no Government support. Finally the administrator of the EPA had asked the director of their research lab in North Carolina if he would work with me. So I showed up without knowing that he had called him with a diesel vehicle. Very spectacular results in that, so far as I know, it was the first diesel ever tested in a United States EPA laboratory that simultaneously reduced all aspects of measured diesel emissions, plus improved fuel economy up to 23%. So far as I know, no one has every equaled it.

The Federal Trade Commission later performed, literally, an illegal act. The statement, precise statement made to the attorney for a large dealer in Washington was, we don't care whether it works or not. We just don't want people buying these large American cars. I could not, when I got that report, I couldn't imagine an officer of the United States Government—this is 1979-'80—saying that.

So I flew to Washington and went to the Congress and saw a Senator with the Science and Technology committee, and met the General Counsel. He questioned me at length. I had documentation. He then said they would act. When I pointed out the unfairness of the FTC aspect, they wrote a scathing letter to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission and sent me a copy of it. Within three weeks from that date, I lost my vehicle, about $100,000 worth of equipment, and a test vehicle was stolen. I had sponsored the U.S. Army race team on a little sprite racing car. They stole my unit off of that car after we had just won the race. The Captain of the Army race team was a Master Sergeant in the Army. We'd created a super car. And they stole that car from the U.S. Army in Van Nuys, California. So in three weeks, psychologically I was wiped out. This is no longer just talk. There's a real world out there. And as one who had engaged in, been in and around a combat zone nine years of my life, to have to come back to this... It was quite traumatic.

[Many researchers with devices that could replace fossil fuels or greatly reduce our dependence on them, have been subject to this type of abuse and sabotage. It is unconscionable to me that a hero of our country like Colonel Brown could be treated this way and no aspect of Government or law enforcement has helped him. Meanwhile, the Earth's environment continues to be degraded. SG]

We also had a project with the Maritime Administration, which was very successful. The conclusion was I could either add 20% in horsepower or 20% in fuel reduction, at the same time, simultaneous, with reducing emissions by 40%.

[I have the results of these studies and they are remarkable. Imagine: 20 years ago we could have reduced emissions by 40% and increased fuel mileage by 20%, had suppression not occurred. SG]

Near the end of the project, two months before, they said, our agreement is off. We are going to cancel the project. And I said, you can't do this. [They said] we've done it. So I said, well, I'm going to finish the project, and I paid for the last two months of it. They said, we are not going to distribute the test results. Not only that, they said, we want all of your notes and all of your records. I'm saying, you really don't have a right to those. And they say, yes we do. We paid for them. So, you don't argue with the Government. So I made copies of everything I had, several copies, distributed them at various points, and sent them the originals of all of this. What I did not know at the time, I put in a call to the chief engineer who had set up the project and he was never available. The number two engineer was never available. So I finally called the comptroller. And he said, they are no longer with us. I said, what are you talking about? He said, they have eliminated the research division in the Maritime administration! So someone did not want this concept to be successful.

Then, later on a business trip, at two minutes after midnight, just into my birthday, a call comes into my hotel room when I'm just getting ready for bed. A voice says, please get out of your room immediately. I said, well if you tell me who you are and why, I'll get out. Well, this is the desk clerk, and this poor man's voice was breaking. He said, we just got a call there's a bomb in your room. I said, I don't think I'll discuss this any further. So, I hung up and went out. By this time they are evacuating the whole motel. And so I said, I'll check in to a Holiday Inn, which I did. I parked in a lighted area, right in front, this beat up old car I had with this device in it. I had several thousands of dollars of equipment in it and was taking it over to Purdue University to do some air tests.

Anyway, next morning quarter of seven, I look out, there's a blank space where my car was. They had stolen my car. Police recovered it two or three weeks later, and found drilled holes in the gas tank and all of my test equipment gone. I had built a prototype carburetor. That was the last time I ever did that. I had actually built the thing. And everything was gone. And psychologically again, it sort of zapped me.

So we have a call that there was a bomb in my room. Somebody was following me. My phone was tapped. No question about this. And there was no logical reason for it. My unit was offered by this car dealer free with every new American car, truck, or van purchased. I made that stipulation it had to be American made.

My concept really just opened a door on a whole new field of science. This is not just my judgment but that of at least three or four Ph.D.'s, in physics, chemistry, and engineering.

There are combustion stimulating molecules and radicals generated in this process. It creates a thunderstorm in a bottle [and creates molecules which greatly increase fuel efficiency and decreases emissions.]

My concept can work as a retrofit item on older vehicles for people who want to keep them. But particularly on the polluting, major polluting vehicles, which are 18 wheelers, diesel automobiles, diesel buses in cities, tow boats, and ocean going vessels. I think the potential is there for power generating plants, based on research done in Europe, in England, and by Max Planc in Germany. I have every reason to believe it can be made to work on power generating plants. You would not even see white smoke coming out of one. I'm 90% certain this can be made to happen with a minimal investment.

So anyway, my concept adds oxygen to the air among other things. Everything it adds is an oxidant. It helps the planet. It even reduces CO<sub>2</sub>: when you use less fuel, CO<sub>2</sub> is reduced. So far as I know, it is probably the most fault free concept.

And in essence I was advised by an agency of the United States Government a few years ago, if I can do what I say I can do, it was a new field of science. Well, I've known it's a new field of science since I can find no competitive concepts. It is a method of enriching the combustion air, or charged air on any heat cycle engine. I've tested it on propane and done extensive multi-million mile testing on diesel and gasoline. I've tested it on gasoline from 75 to 125 octane. I can run a vehicle that normally requires 92 octane on 75 octane without knock. And I have done so for a period of three months. In terms of the potential [of this technology], I've just scratched the surface.

Had at the beginning, 25 years ago, the oil companies gotten fully behind me, it might extend the useful life of existing oil on this planet, which is a finite resource.

Testimony of Dr. Carol Rosin

December 2000

Dr. Carol Rosin was the first woman corporate manager of Fairchild Industries, and was spokesperson for Werner Von Braun in the last years of his life. She founded the Institute for Security and Cooperation in Outer Space in Washington DC and has testified before Congress on many occasions about space based weapons. Von Braun revealed to Dr. Rosin a plan to justify weapons in spaced based on hoaxing an extraterrestrial threat. She was also present at meetings in the '70s when the scenario for the Gulf War of the '90s was planned.

CR: Dr. Carol Rosin

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

CR: My name is Carol Rosin. I am an educator who became the first woman corporate manager of an Aerospace Company, Fairchild Industries. I am a Space and Missile Defense Consultant and have consulted to a number of companies, organizations, and government departments, even the intelligence community. I was a consultant to TRW working on the MX missile, so I was part of that strategy, which turned out to be a role model for how to sell space-based weapons to the public. The MX missile is yet another weapon system that we didn't need.

I founded the Institute for Security and Cooperation in Outer Space, a Washington DC based think tank. I am an author and have testified before Congress and the Presidents Commission on Space.

When I was a Corporate Manager of Fairchild Industries from 1974 through 1977, I met the late Dr. Werner Von Braun. We first met in early 1974. At that time, Von Braun was dying of cancer but he assured me that he would live a few more years to tell me about the game that was being played- that game being the effort to weaponize space, to control the Earth from space and space itself. Von Braun had a history of working with weapons systems. He escaped from Germany to come to this country and became a Vice President of Fairchild Industries when I had met him. Von Braun's purpose during the last years of his life, his dying years, was to educate the public and decision-makers about why space-based weapons are dumb, dangerous, destabilizing, too costly, unnecessary, unworkable, and an undesirable idea, and about the alternatives that are available.

As practically a deathbed speech, he educated me about those concepts and who the players were in this game. He gave me the responsibility, since he was dying, of continuing this effort to prevent the weaponization of outer space. When Werner Von Braun was dying of cancer, he asked me to be his spokesperson, to appear on occasions when he was too ill to speak. I did this.

What was most interesting to me was a repetitive sentence that he said to me over and over again during the approximately four years that I had the opportunity to work with him. He said the strategy that was being used to educate the public and decision makers was to use scare tactics... That was how we identify an enemy.

The strategy that Werner Von Braun taught me was that first the Russians are going to be considered to be the enemy. In fact, in 1974, they were the enemy, the identified enemy. We were told that they had "killer satellites". We were told that they were coming to get us and control us - that they were "Commies."

Then terrorists would be identified, and that was soon to follow. We heard a lot about terrorism. Then we were going to identify third-world country "crazies." We now call them Nations of Concern. But he said that would be the third enemy against whom we would build space-based weapons.

The next enemy was asteroids. Now, at this point he kind of chuckled the first time he said it. Asteroids- against asteroids we are going to build space-based weapons.

And the funniest one of all was what he called aliens, extraterrestrials. That would be the final scare. And over and over and over during the four years that I knew him and was giving speeches for him, he would bring up that last card. "And remember Carol, the last card is the alien card. We are going to have to build space-based weapons against aliens and all of it is a lie."

I think I was too naive at that time to know the seriousness of the nature of the spin that was being put on the system. And now, the pieces are starting to fall into place. We are building a space-based weapons system on a premise that is a lie, a spin. Werner Von Braun was trying to hint that to me back in the early 70s and right up until the moment when he died in 1977.

What he told me was that there is an accelerated effort in place. He didn't mention a timeline but he said that it was going to be speeding up faster than anybody could possibly imagine. That the effort to put weapons into space was not only based on a lie but would accelerate past the point of people even understanding it until it was already up there and too late.

When Von Braun was dying in front of me, the very first day that I met him, he had tubes draining out of his side. He was tapping on the desk telling me, "You will come to Fairchild." I was a schoolteacher. He said, "You will come to Fairchild and you will be responsible for keeping weapons out of space." The way he said it with this intensesness in his eyes, and added that very first day, the first time I met him, that space-based weapons were a dangerous, destabilizing, too costly, unnecessary, untestable, unworkable idea.

The last card that was being held was the extraterrestrial enemy card. The intensity with which he said that, made me realize that he knew something that he was too afraid to mention. He was too afraid to talk about it. He would not tell me the details. I am not sure that I would have absorbed them if he had told me the details or even believed him in 1974. But there was no question that that man knew and had a need to know, I found out later.

There is no doubt in my mind that Werner Von Braun knew about the extra-terrestrial issue. He explained to me the reasons why weapons were going to be put into space, the enemies against whom we were going to build these weapons, and that all of that was a lie. He mentioned that extraterrestrials were going to be identified as the final enemy against whom we were going to build space-based weapons back in 1974. The way he said it to me, there was no doubt in my mind that he knew something that he was too afraid to talk about.

Werner Von Braun never spoke to me about any of the details that he knew related to extraterrestrials except that one day extraterrestrials were going to be identified as an enemy against whom we are going to build an enormous space-based weapons system. Werner Von Braun actually told me that the spin was a lie - that the premise for space-based weaponry, the reasons that were going to be given, the enemies that we were going to identify - were all based on a lie.

I have been tracking the space-based weapons issue for about 26 years. I have debated Generals and Congressional Representatives. I have testified before the Congress and the Senate. I have met with people in over 100 countries. But I have not been able to identify who the people are who are making this space-based weapons system happen. I see the news. I see the administrative decisions being made. I know that they are all based on lies and greed.

But I have yet to be able to identify who the people are. That is after tracking this issue for 26 years. I know that there are big secrets being kept and I know that it is time the public and decision-makers pay attention to the people who are now going to be disclosing the truth. Then we need to make some definite changes and build a system in space that will benefit every single person, and all of the animals, and the environment of this planet. The technology is there. The solutions to Earth's urgent and long-term potential problems are there. I have a feeling that once we start studying this extraterrestrial issue, all of the questions are going to be answered that I have had for 26 years.

But I have concluded that it is based on a few people making a lot of money and gaining power. It is about ego. It is not about our essence and who we really are on this planet and loving each other and being at peace and cooperating. It isn't about using technology to solve problems and heal people in the planet. It isn't about that. It is about a few people who really are playing an old, dangerous, costly game for their own pocketbooks and power struggle. That is all it is.

I believe that this entire space-based weapons game is initiated right here in the United States of America. What I hope is that with this information that is being disclosed, the new administration will do what is right. That is to transform the war game into a space game so that we use the technologies that are available not just as spin-offs of war technology, but as direct technological applications to build a cooperative space system that will benefit the entire world and that will allow us to communicate with the extraterrestrial cultures that are obviously out there.

Who would benefit from these space-based weapons? They are the people who work in that arena, people in the military, in industries, in universities and labs, in the intelligence community. This is not just in the United States but it is worldwide. This is a worldwide cooperative system. Wars are cooperative. Just as peace will be when it breaks out. But right now there are a lot of people benefiting. This is what our economy has been based on in this country and spreading around the world- war. People suffer as a result. It is not fair. It never has been. People have screamed: "out of swords let us build plow shares, let's have peace and hold hands around the world," but it hasn't worked because too many people are benefiting. Not only are they benefiting financially, but from what my experience is there are people who actually believe that Armageddon should happen so we have to have these wars.

So it is going from the pocketbook, to the religious right: some people actually believe that we have to have wars for these religious reasons. There are people who just love war. I have met warriors who just love to go to war. Then there are the good people, the soldiers, who just take orders. They have to feed their children and send them to college so they want to keep their jobs. People in laboratories have told me that they don't want to work on these technologies for war but if they don't they won't get a paycheck. Who is going to pay them? But what I see is that there are not only dual uses for these technologies but there are many uses for the same technologies.

We can build space hospitals, schools, hotels, laboratories, farms, industries. It may sound far out but if we don't do that we are going to build battle stations and weapons pointed down all of our throats and into space. Apparently we have been doing some of that already. We have a choice now that can be made. We can all benefit - all of the people in the military industrial complex, in the intelligence community, in universities and labs, in the United States and all over the world - we can all benefit. We can just transform that industry so easily with just a decision based on our highest consciousness, our spirituality, and on the fact that we have no choice unless we all want to die. And we don't. So we can all benefit financially, spiritually, socially, psychologically; it is technologically and politically feasible to transform this game now and everybody will benefit.

In 1977 I was at a meeting in Fairchild Industries in a conference room called the War Room. In that room were a lot of charts on the walls with enemies, identified enemies. There were other more obscure names, names like Saddam Hussein and Khadafi. But we were talking then about terrorists, the potential terrorists. No one had ever talked about this before but this was the next stage after the Russians against whom we were going to build these space-based weapons. I stood up in this meeting and I said, "Excuse me, why are we talking about these potential enemies against whom we are going to build space-based weapons if, in fact, we know that they are not the enemy at this time?"

Well, they continued the conversation about how they were going to antagonize these enemies and that at some point, there was going to be a war in the Gulf, a Gulf War. Now this is 1977, 1977! And they were talking about creating a war in the Gulf Region when there was 25 billion dollars in the space-based weapons program that had yet to be identified. It wasn't called the Strategic Defense Initiative, at least. Not until 1983. This weapons system, then, had obviously been going on for some time and I didn't know anything about. So I stood up in this meeting in 1977 and said, "I would like to know why we are talking about space-based weapons against these enemies. I would like to know more about this. Would someone please tell me what this is about?" Nobody answered. They just went on with this meeting as though I hadn't said anything.

Suddenly I stood up in the room and said, "If nobody can tell me why you are planning a war in the Gulf when there is a certain amount of money in a budget so that you can create the next set of weapons systems that will be the beginning of the sell to the public about why we need space-based weapons, then consider this: my resignation. And you will not hear from me again!" And nobody said a word, because they were planning a war in the Gulf and it happened exactly as they planned it, on time.

SG: Who was at this meeting?

CR: The room was filled with people in the revolving door game. There were people that I had seen once in a military uniform and other times in a gray suit and an industry outfit. These people play a revolving door game. They work as consultants, industry people, and/or military and intelligence people. They work in the industries and they revolve themselves through these doors and right into government positions.

I stood up in this meeting and asked if I was hearing correctly. That when there was 25 billion dollars expended in the space-based weapons budget, that there was going to be a war in the Gulf, stimulated, created, so that they could then sell the next phase of weapons to the public and the decision-makers. This war was going to be created so that they could dump the old weapons and create a whole new set of weapons. So I had to resign from that position. I could no longer work in that industry.

In about 1990 I was sitting in my living room looking at the money that had been spent on space-based weapons research and development programs and I realized that it had come to that number, about 25 billion dollars, and I said to my husband, "I am now going to stop everything. I am now going to stop and sit and watch CNN television and I am going to wait for the war to happen." My husband said, "Well, you have finally gone over the edge. You have flipped out." Friends said, "You have really gone too far this time. There is not going to be a war in the Gulf, nobody is talking about a war in the Gulf."

I said, "There is going to be a war in the Gulf. I am going to sit here and wait for the war in the Gulf." And it happened right on schedule.

As part of the war game in the Gulf, we in the public were told that the United States was successful in shooting down Russian Scud Missiles. We were rationalizing new budgets based on that success. In fact, we found out later, after the budgets were approved for the next phase of weapons, that it was a lie. We did not have successful shoot-downs the way we were told. It was all a lie, just to get more money put in the budget to make more weapons.

I was one of the first people to go independently to Russia when I heard that they had "killer satellites."

[See the testimony of Dr. Paul Czysz. SG]

When I went to Russia in the early 70s, I found out that they didn't have killer satellites, that it was a lie. In fact, the Russian leaders and people wanted peace. They wanted to cooperate with the United States and with the people of the world.

Another time I called Saddam Hussein when he was lighting his oil fields on fire. My husband was in the kitchen while I was making this phone call. I got a call back from his First Attache with Saddam Hussein nearby and he asked, "Are you a reporter? Are you an agent? Why do you want to know?"

I said, "No. I am just a citizen who helped to start the movement to prevent the weaponization of outer space and I have found that a lot of stories that I have been told about weapons systems and the enemies are not true. I wanted to find out what would satisfy Saddam Hussein so he would stop making these oil fields catch fire and stop antagonizing people." He said, "Well, nobody has ever asked him that question, what he wants."

So when I hear that there is a possible threat of extraterrestrials - and I look at the history of thousands of years of possible ET visitations, and hear the disclosures of honest military-intelligence-industry people who have had experiences with UFO's, with crashes and landings, with live and dead bodies of extraterrestrial beings - I know it is a lie. And if I am ever told that these are enemies against whom we have to build space-based weapons systems, based on my own personal experience of having worked in the military industrial complex on weapons systems and military strategy, I am going to know it is a lie. It is a lie.

Not only will I not believe it, but I am going to go out as loudly as I can and tell everyone to take a look. They [the ET's] have not taken us away yet. We are still here after thousands of years of visits. In fact they are still visiting us now and we have not been harmed then we have to look at this as something that is not a hostile occurrence.

It would be my hope and my intention to do everything I could to work with people who are working to communicate with and cooperate with these extraterrestrial beings. They are clearly not hostile. We are here. That is enough proof for me.

There is no limit to how people can choose to live on this planet. We have a chance to do that and I think that the window is closing rapidly. I don't think that we have much time in which to make that decision. We are too close in too many ways to having some horrible disaster happen, having some sort of war take place, whether it is from high technology or an exotic weapons system.

We need leadership and it has to start with the United States President and that is who we all have to reach. If you are international, if you are around the world, if you are in the United States of America, whether you are from any party, any belief system or religion- the United States Commander in Chief, the President of the United States is the person that needs to be reached. We need to say that we want an ultimate, comprehensive, verifiable ban on all space-based weapons.

Testimony of "Dr. B."

"Dr. B." is a scientist and engineer who has worked on top-secret projects almost all his life. Over the years he has directly worked on or had involvement with such projects involving anti-gravity, chemical warfare, secure telemetry and communications, extremely high-energy space based laser systems, and electromagnetic pulse technology. "Dr. B." has direct knowledge of the fact that certain groups have used these space-based systems to successfully shoot down extra-terrestrial spacecraft and their occupants. On at least one occasion he has seen extraterrestrial spacecraft in person.

DR. B.: "Dr. B."

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

DR. B.: I was born in 1943. And Norman Miller delivered me and I became a project of Mk Ultra and this is how it started. My dad worked with Henry Ford. My dad became a world-renowned scientist. He worked with Howard Hughes.

So, as Trump would say, I came from the lucky sperm bank science club. So I was around all this as a kid. Many of these kinds of situations where there were children of prominent parents, there were DNA studies going on, (which really surfaced in Vietnam, which is another story and is one of the reasons why the war was extended). But anyway, they were watching me. And sure enough, I had scientific ability.

So, at 9 years of age, in Ann Arbor Michigan, I was working on science projects with the University...

I left Michigan when I was 15 years old... The Government came down and they wanted me in the Air Force. So I filled out my paperwork when I was 15 to go into the Air Force. And then the Government came in and they changed my name. I was B. B. and then they changed it [to] F. B.

[This is not an uncommon occurrence in very deep cover arrangements. See Denise McKenzie's testimony regarding her supervisor's name change, SG]

My mother never could understand the name change. And my dad was all the way out in California at the time.

And so they came out here. This is like out of a book, but it is true. They had a CIA agent and an FBI agent, one of each. I guess they had both to overwhelm me. And so, I signed the thing and I went into the Air Force when I was 16. They took me to Little Rock and kept me right outside this Army base down there that was responsible for chemical and germ warfare.

So they kept me up there for six months until I was 17 years old. I went into the military and I went to Lackland Air Force Base and got trained and they then took me on to Keesler and then on to USAFI. I studied for about a year in the United States Armed Forces Institute, USAFI, early warning radar, which took me to Point Arena. I got up to Point Arena, and we are running radar sets that were 325 to 425 MHz local oscillator frequency...

We had an ANF PS35 Radar. It is nine stories tall with a 466 foot antennae, and its power was five megawatts, which is way lower than HARP. And its range was 455 miles. That was all classified information at that time.

It was what's called a search set. And we'd look out every night over northern California, and thousands of bogies (UFOs) would come down about 20 miles out from Point Arena. And they come down at 20,000 miles an hour. Go down just about to Baha and then they would turn left and go across Mexico where they are seen going 5,000 mph. They had a vertical descent [of] 20,000 miles an hour, lateral speed of 5,000 miles an hour, almost every night. We had a room with what were called PPI Scopes, Planned Position Indicator Scopes.

So they would fill out these DDS Form 332's. And then they would hand them to the Sergeant who was the guard, because this was a double security area.

If something went wrong with the equipment I just went in, troubleshoot it and fix it. And my serial number was 186017 either 69 or 89. That was my Air Force number. Check that out.

But they'd shred about half the reports [of the UFOs]. And that was really weird, you know. A lot of shit went on up there. But that was the beginning of me in the military, big time, really deep, you know.

This would have been about 1961, 1960. A thousand. We would report this over to [unintelligible] Air Force Base, which is right inland from Novato [California] there. We were a SAC Squadron, Strategic Air Command. I mean all year round this went on.

One afternoon I told Colonel Harry Bunting the NCO in charge that we are shredding these reports, these DDS 332's. I said why, if I'm a taxpayer, do I have to hide the truth about UFOs? He says, because the Government says we have got to do it. I said I don't believe in that anymore. I can't believe in the Government.

Later, I became a consultant to [a number of] companies. I used to go to EG&G up there in Vegas when they'd go to Area 51. I used to go to the Atomic Energy Commission at Amarillo, Texas. I used to go to Bell Telephone, Murray Hill with all the stealth CIA people. I used to go to Langley all the time for the CIA. I used to go to Quantico where I worked for the FBI. You name it, I was there. Now, why was I there in all these companies? Because, as you look around here, obviously, everything in here I create. I'm an instrumentation specialist. I was very good at it and I started out when I was about 7 years old.

I had my own company, it was called Scopes Unlimited. Before that I worked for EH Research. I was very high paid, very well paid so I retired in '71.

When I was still at Autonetics prior to my NASA days with the Rockwell contract, I worked on a project called E Y E L A S S. Which became a billion watt laser system that we launch from space to shoot down aliens, which I've seen. So I worked on that.

Then, when I got over to the Government side, I began to see some strange communication stuff coming out of Bell Telephone, Murray Hill.

SG: Are you confirming that we actually have targeted and hit ET craft?

DR. B.: Oh yeah, definitely.

I have a friend of mine named Norm Hayes, who just lives down the road here, who's another rocket scientist friend of mine, that, is really hooked up in the laser area.

We developed these systems in '62, '63. It was really going strong in the early '60s.

SG: Please explain how we are doing this.

DR. B.: It's called plasma. It is called electro-plasma light beams.

SG: And they are based on platforms in space?

DR. B.: Yeah. They are actually. They are on platforms in space, but they also have them in 747's now. There was one on the front cover of Popular Science about a year ago. It's a new laser plasma device that they've developed.

[Several witnesses who are reluctant to come forward without a Congressional subpoena have confirmed to me the fact that we have and are targeting extraterrestrial spacecraft and have destroyed several. If true, and my sources would suggest it is, this is one of the gravest threats to world security in human history and underscores how dangerous secrecy can be to our security when it escapes rational oversight. SG]

I also used to work with Hughes Aircraft and TRW. I was in on all those projects over there. Hughes was mostly working on telemetry stuff for communication in space with astronauts on channels that nobody else could listen in and on.

[See Harland Bentley's testimony regarding monitoring an Apollo transmission about a UFO encounter on a secret channel. SG]

And I worked at the skunk works at Lockheed. And so, I was there watching all this stuff happen, you know? I mean, that's what I did. But I couldn't talk about it.

And so, believe me, you needed me. And, not to brag, but I've got all the articles here. I was in the newspaper all the time, Electronic News, etc.

I knew when I was over at EG&G that the security was not very friendly over there. I mean, I went to a lot of EG&G plants, and the one in Las Vegas. And the reason I was always in there was because when I was at EH Research, we worked on what were called single shot testing. And we were working on a technology which later on became known as EMP, electromagnetic pulse technology. I was one of the pioneers making measurement equipment. I worked a lot on EMP technology, and that was over there.

Now, EG&G was all around the country. I think it's a German company. But the plant in Las Vegas was always a little strange.

Martin Marietta, TRW, just photo my book, they are all in there ~ you can prove I worked at all of these places.

Also, we did the magnet project back in Canada back in the '50's, which was over the Great Lakes, which I explain in my book. We did Wright Patterson and Martin Marietta in Denver. The Ball Brothers; I've been in their plant many times. They make glass jars, but they also make some really hot aerospace stuff. Rockwell, Lockheed, Douglas, Northrop, Gruman Aircraft, TRW. Hughes Aircraft was involved big time. I used to work in a Hughes facility in L.A. - the one up here at Fullerton. I worked both facilities on a lot of hush-hush projects in those days.

SG: What were they dealing with?

DR. B.: Anti-gravity. As a matter of fact, I used to go out to Hughes in Malibu. They had a big think tank up there. Big anti-gravity projects; I used to talk to them out there. I'd give them ideas, because they bought all my equipment.

[Refer also to the testimony of Mark McCandlish, Colonel Williams and Don Johnson, who all saw a Hughes blue print of an anti-gravity project. SG]

But the American public will never, never hear about that.

I have buddies of mine that work in aerospace. We have our little get together every once in a while. And a friend of mine flew a disc. You've probable seen that disc, you know, from Area 51.

This flying disc has a little plutonium reactor in it, which creates electricity, which drives these anti-gravity plates. We also have the next level of propulsion, it is called virtual field, which are called hydrodynamic waves.

Taking that idea into the laboratory, using 12 different lasers in a plasma system, we create hydrodynamic waves. And so we create the triangle craft that you photographed. Those were built near Bentwaters, England and that's where they are flying them, in England.

This is how I left NASA: I started talking about spaceships. I had some friends that I was working with down at Seal Beach where we were building up the Saturn II, the second stage. And I started to realize, what are we doing down here? This is stupid [using rocket propulsion]. And Werner Von Braun was in there, him and his storm troopers. They used to always wear black suits, ski pants and gold helmets. I mean, these guys dressed up like Nazi's. They really did. We got into some heavy conversations about how stupid the Saturn was and how we should start using electrogravitic [anti-gravity] propulsion around some pretty high people in NASA. And I got into some pretty serious trouble for it. I was basically warned to cool off on that level. There's more to it, but I won't take you through it.

SG: Did you know Werner Von Braun?

DR. B.: Yes, personally.

SG: What did he know about this subject of UFO's?

DR. B.: He didn't talk a whole lot about it. I knew some of his family. He was a big family man. But he was incredibly uptight. I mean, this guy had to have ulcers all his life. What he wanted from me was the quality control of Rockwell, because we were having a lot of fires, this is what led to the explosion down there [at the Cape which killed the astronauts]. We had what were called cost overruns. We had so much money, we were so profitable [at Rockwell], that they had extra money and they had to blow it on anything.

They just had to blow money out. That's the way it was. Cost overruns. Plus, they are hiring all these Mexicans. We are engineers and we had to use Mexicans to sign our work off. And so, pretty soon a lot of these engineers didn't give a shit about the work. You just hand the paperwork in and you sign it off. So you end up with a broken bird and it goes to the Cape. Somebody is going to die from this.

Not only was I talking to people about this anti-gravity propulsion issue, I'm also talking to Von Braun about it. I mean, I'm loud, you know me, I'm very loud. And I was no quieter then.

Then, the first night we are bringing the Saturn rocket out of the hanger I get a shake. I'm sitting there at the computer console, sound asleep, it's 4:00 in the morning. One of my engineers comes up and shakes me. Mr. B, come on outside, there is something big happening. You said it was going to happen. I said, what, what what? They had just pulled the bird [Saturn] out and we are taking pictures. And a big disc came down in Seal Beach, California. I don't have a picture of the ship hovering over it, but the disc came down and 400 employees saw it at 4:00 in the morning, early spring. It was 1966, about April of '66.

SG: How has all of this been kept secret?

DR. B.: I know that some people I worked with did disappear on certain programs and were never heard from again. They just disappeared. There has been evidence of that all through my work. You know, that people go out on projects [and disappear] . But [to protect myself from this] I wouldn't go any further on a project because I could see something strange coming. So, a lot of people have disappeared you know, that are higher up.

At Bell Telephone, Murray Hill, they talked of some materials that, later on, I found out came from the Roswell crash, not just fiber optics but some other optical materials.

[See the testimony of Colonel Philip Corso, Don Phillips, et al. SG]

Another guy that I know dealt with the ship, the reverse engineered ship called the ARV.

[Alien Reproduction Vehicle. See testimony from Mark McCandlish, et al. SG].

That's what it was called out there at Area 51. He and his elite buddies were on a strike force for the CIA and found a craft out in Arizona. It got confiscated. They hid it as long as they could. They were going to try to sell it to a museum, but it got confiscated. Little things like that come up all the time. And one of my friends, I can't think of his name, he lived in Las Vegas and works with the CIA. I was responsible for him getting inducted in there. They took him to Area 51. He's a medical doctor, and they showed him this huge underground facility and demonstrated to him an actual ship flying, one of the triangle ones, that was extraterrestrial.

This was a friend of mine who had become an informant for them, through me, and he scared the hell out of them when he first became involved in that. But he had worked for the FBI previously, and we were friends then. So these people have a way of coming into my life. Some of my buddies work at the FBI and Secret Service and they'll just bring them in. They don't work directly, but they are doing jobs and being like informants. I don't know how to describe it: National Security, whatever. And so they end up getting indoctrinated at some point, and then they become different.

[See testimony from Clifford Stone about "The School" and how those who entered it came out with unpleasantly changed personalities. SG]

At some point I'll give you some names but right now I don't think I better because these people would get mad. But they are very high profile. Some of them are way up in the entertainment industry I might add. Yeah, way up there.

I went high profile back when I was in the Air Force because that's the only way I could stay alive, and it worked.

SG: That's what I've done.

DR. B.: Yeah, you have to. I went very high profile. Millions of people knew my name in the '80s.

When I was up at Aspen, I was staying in the FBI house up there. That picture that you saw of those [UFO] ships was taken from the director of the FBI's house who lives in Los Angeles. And I took a shot right out his window [of his house in Aspen]. Tell me how that went over. You know? He knew about it. I mean, it's there. I'm in that crowd but more reclusive now. But I got some very powerful political friends right now that really, really like what I do. And so, this is a slow process but we are bringing this out.

I'm staying out of some of it, like that Kathy O'Brien thing that we talked about. Although I know a lot about it, about project Monarch [the clandestine importation of drugs by a rogue Government program]. The reason that I got exposed to that was because during my tenure with the Government, I was witnessing some cocaine drops but didn't know what they were at the time. Later on I found out what they were and they were down in Arkansas. I came close to it because the black box money [rogue super secret projects funding] comes from that [drug money].

SG: From what?

DR. B.: From the cocaine. Basically, what the DEA does is if you are a Mafia guy and you are working with the CIA and you are cooperating, you are fine. But if you don't cooperate, you become like Manuel Noriega. That's what happened to him. But the mobsters of course aren't that high profile so if DEA takes them down you don't get a national profile and a great stay in Florida.

[As bizarre as this testimony may sound, I have interviewed other, very well placed people who have connected these black projects to the drug trade. One, a senior SAIC (Science Applications International Corporation) executive directly told me of this and how there was an army of 8000 men who did nothing but import drugs under the cover of classified, need-to-know operations. He stated that of the 8000 men involved (as of 1997 when we spoke of this) that 2000 of them had been killed for sometimes minor infractions of security. He assured me that this was a major covert funding source and that it was destroying our country, but nobody is willing to take on such a lethal and powerful group to stop it. SG]

Being in the black box projects, this was going on around me, and in those days, it was there. This goes back to the '60's. It isn't just now. Later on, when I started reflecting back, talking to friends of mine, and working up here with the Bohemian Club, for example... and having my book up there, and talking about what goes on up there to the director, whew, it was all brought into focus. You know? Very big time. Big...

SG: Which industries in particular?

DR. B.: Which ones would I think? Oil industry. You see, you didn't see one peep out of either candidate about the gas prices. They just let it go. And they'll keep jacking it up until it gets to be $4.00 a gallon like it is in Europe.

I work with this guy named Jim who used to work with Howard Hughes. Howard Hughes even knew about it. Howard Hughes had Jim, a scientist I used to work with who was definitely into anti-gravity stuff. He was way into that stuff. And they made some real headway in it.

SG: Did Lockheed have any anti-gravity involvement?

DR. B.: Oh yeah, yeah. Magnet, this goes back to Project Magnet, and Bell Aerospace—they did that project, Magnet. I talked to people who worked on that over the Great Lakes. Project Magnet was the first joint American, Canadian anti-gravity project. And they had an actual disc that flew. And there are pictures of it around.

SG: What year was that?

DR. B.: '51.

[See the Wilbur Smith document from Canada and related testimony of Colonel Philip Corso and his son and others such as Clifford Stone. SG]

A few years ago a guy came down from Moffett Field, NASA Ames and he took me to dinner. He showed me his Government card and everything. He said, we have a little $50,000 grant we want to give you. I said, well, that's pretty interesting. I haven't done anything for NASA in a long time. He says, all we want you to do is come up with an idea to cut down wind resistance on commercial airliners to get better fuel economy out of a jet. I said, fine. I'll do that.

This is also in my book. I have pictures of it. So I showed him a design. I took a 737, and said let's make the engine a flame jet generator, because it's a very great source of static energy. There are millions of ergs of electricity being wasted from that thing. We'll hook that up. We'll put a positive charge across the front of the plane, the wings. We'll put a negative charge on the trailing surfaces. We'll do the rudder, the elevator, and the forward part of the wings. We'll use Mylar as insulation. We'll use platinum rhodium plates and we'll put a big positive charge. The faster the thing goes, the more energy it puts out. It'll shoot out a positive charge of particles out in front in a trail, so it'll cut the wind resistance to almost nothing in this plane.

It'll start working around 200, 250 knots, just after the thing does take off: it'll be at V-3. When it gets to altitude it'll be awesome. I sent him some drawings. And the guy calls me back in a week and says, Mr. B, this is way beyond what we wanted from you. He says we can't do this. We can't do this. I said, why not? It'll work. He says, yes it'll work, but we didn't want anything this technical. Well, I realized this is really weird, this conversation. (I should show you his card before you leave.)

So then, I talked to my friends over at Aviation Weekly, Mark McCandlish and I found out what I had just done was to design the front-edge of a B-2 Bomber, which goes supersonic. I had just given them the design to what they already had, and it freaked them out, because I gave them a classified design, which I had from the Lockheed Skunk Works

That came from my buddy over at Lockheed skunk works. Who, finally, disappeared, by the way. He got started talking a lot, and he disappeared. He's not around any more. He just disappeared one day. Nobody knows where he went. His place was closed. Overnight he was gone. Yeah, he was a great contact. He told me all about the Aurora.

Geo-Magnetics

MEMORANDUM TO THE CONTROLLER OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS:

For the past several years we have been engaged in the study of various aspects of radio wave propagation. The vagaries of this phenomena have led us into the fields of aurora, cosmic radiation, atmospheric radio-activity and geo-magnetism. In the case of geo-magnetics our investigations have contributed little to our knowledge of radio wave propagation as yet, but nevertheless have indicated several avenues of investigation which may well be explored with profit. For example, we are on the track of a means whereby the potential energy of the earth's magnetic field may be abstracted and used.

On the basis of theoretical considerations a small and very crude experimental unit was constructed approximately a year ago and tested in our Standards Laboratory. The tests were essentially successful in that sufficient energy was abstracted from the earth's field to operate a voltmeter, approximately 50 milliwatts. Although this unit was far from being self-sustaining, it nevertheless demonstrated the soundness of the basic principles in a qualitative manner and provided useful data for the design of a better unit.

The design has now been completed for a unit which should be self-sustaining and in addition provide a small surplus of power. Such a unit, in addition to functioning as a 'pilot power plant' should be large enough to permit the study of the various reaction forces which are expected to develop.

We believe that we are on the track of something which may well prove to be the introduction to a new technology. The existence of a different technology is borne out by the investigations which are being carried on at the present time in relation to flying saucers.

While in Washington attending the NARR Conference, two books the other "The Flying Saucers are Real" by Donald Keyhoe. Both books dealt mostly with the sightings of unidentified objects and both books claim that flying objects were of extra-terrestrial origin and might well be space ships from another planet. Scully claimed that the preliminary studies of one saucer which fell into the hands of the United States Government indicated that they operated on some hitherto unknown magnetic principles. It appeared to me that our own work in geo-magnetics might well be the linkage between our technology and the technology by which the saucers are designed and operated. If it is assumed that our geo-magnetic investigations are in the right direction, the theory of operation of the saucers becomes quite straightforward, with all observed features explained qualitatively and quantitatively. 309

I made discreet enquiries through the Canadian Embassy staff in Washington who were able to obtain for me the following information:

- a. The matter is the most highly classified subject in the United States Government, rating higher even than the H-bomb.
- b. Flying saucers exist.
- c. Their modus operandi is unknown but concentrated effort is being made by a small group headed by Doctor Vannevar Bush.
- d. The entire matter is considered by the United States authorities to be of tremendous significance.

I was further informed that the United States authorities are investigating along quite a number of lines which might possibly be related to the saucers such as mental phenomena and I gather that they are not doing too well since they indicated that if Canada is doing anything at all in geo-magnetics they would welcome a discussion with suitably accredited Canadians.

While I am not yet in a position to say that we have solved even the first problems in geo-magnetic energy release, I feel that the correlation between our basic theory and the available information on saucers checks too closely to be mere coincidence. It is my honest opinion that we are on the right track and are fairly close to at least some of the answers.

Mr. Wright, Defence Research Board liaison officer at the Canadian Embassy in Washington, was extremely anxious for me to get in touch with Doctor Solandt, Chairman of the Defence Research Board, to discuss with him future investigations along the line of geo-magnetic energy release. I do not feel that we have as yet sufficient data to place before Defence Research Board which would enable a program to be initiated within that organization, but I do feel that further research is necessary and I would prefer to see it done within the frame work of our own organization with, of course, full co-operation and exchange of information with other interested bodies.

I discussed this matter fully with Doctor Solandt, Chairman of Defence Research Board, on November 20th and placed before him as much information as I have been able to gather to date. Doctor Solandt agreed that work on geo-magnetic energy should go forward as rapidly as possible and ordered full co-operation of his board in providing laboratory facilities, acquisition of necessary items of equipment, and specialized personnel for incidental work in the project. I indicated to Doctor Solandt that we would prefer to keep the project within the Department of Transport for the time being until we have obtained sufficient information to permit a complete assessment of the value of the work.

It is therefore recommended that a PROJECT be set up within the frame work of this Section to study this problem and that the work be carried on a part time basis until such time as sufficient tangible results can be seen to warrant more definitive action. Cost of the program in its initial stages are expected to be less than a few hundred dollars and can be carried by our Radio Standards Lab appropriation.

Attached hereto is a draft of terms of reference for such a project which, if authorized, will enable us to proceed with this research work within our own organization.

Testimony of Lance Corporal Jonathan Weygandt

October 2000

Lance Corporal Jonathan Weygandt enlisted in the Marine Corp in 1994. Stationed in Peru to provide perimeter security to a supposed drug-traffic radar installation, one night he and two other Sergeants were told to secure a possible crash site in the forest. When they arrived they saw a 20-meter egg-shaped UFO buried in the side of a gorge. He was called back from the craft arrested, handcuffed and threatened and abusively interrogated. One of the men told him that the interrogators basically did what they wanted and that they were not under Constitutional law. Weygandt believes that this UFO was shot down by a HAWK missile.

JW: Lance Corporal Jonathan Weygandt                      SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JW: I enlisted in the Marine Corp under the delayed entry program in July of 1994 while still in high school. I enlisted, of course, in a delayed entry for a year or so. I went to boot camp on the 18th of June. I graduated 8 September 1995. And from there my MRS was 0311, which was a grunt.

In late January of 1996, I was given new orders and was given a new MOS, Military Occupational Skill listing as a 7212 Stinger Avenger. So I was in training to be an air defense gunner on the FIM 92 Alpha stinger missile, the surface to air missile, and the avenger weapon. And I was in training from February to late May of 1996.

After graduating from that school, I was reassigned [to] a first duty station, second marine air wing, 28th Marine Air Control Group, Second air defense battalion troop in North Carolina. I was assigned Battery B in June of 1996 and I went on several Ops, Operations - we call them Ops for short. Basically I was there and I was transferred over to the section for laser strike in February of 1997. When I got back, I was asked if I wanted to go and I said, "Sure" so I volunteered and I was sent to the section. We shipped out in March of that year to Peru.

We were sent there to provide perimeter security to this radar installation. Basically this radar station was tracking- supposedly -drug aircraft that were exiting in and out of Peruvian and Bolivian air space. One night Sergeant Allen and Sergeant Atkinson came to us and said, "Look, we have got a situation where we have an aircraft crash and it is possibly friendly and they need us to go and secure the crash site." This is late at night, about 11:00 or 12:00 at night.

I was on guard duty that night so I was already up and it was my shift. So we got up at about 3:00 or 4:00 in the morning and headed out with about five or six hummers. We drove to where we needed to go and from there we had to hump through the bush. So we got there at about 6:00 or 7:00, just when it started to get light.

Well, we found the area real easy because there was a huge gash in the land where something had crashed. It didn't break anything- I don't know if you have ever been to a crash site where you had trees and they had just broken like in half. Everything was burned and it was like something had almost cut warm butter with a knife. It was like something on fire or had some kind of energy like a laser had cut it. It was really strange. Anyway, I was in the front with Sergeant Allen and Sergeant Atkinson. And we were ten or twenty meters ahead of everyone else. We all had maps and radios and compasses so we wouldn't get lost.

We were the first ones to see this thing. It had gone up the hill and then off in the side of the ravine and ridge. This is about a 200-foot ridge, at least -Solid rock. It was buried in the side of a cliff. Anyway, we didn't go straight up, we went to the left and walked up to the top of the ridge and that is when we saw the craft.

This was a huge ship. And when I first saw it I was scared. It scared the heck out of me. I didn't know what to do. It was really confusing. We all climbed down and it was buried at about a 45-degree angle in the side of the cliff there at the ridge. This was a steep cliff. It was straight up and down. And it was dripping a syrup-like liquid. It was everywhere. And it was greenish-purple and it kind of fluctuated. You would look at it one time and then you would look at it again and it was almost like it was alive and changing but every time that you looked at it you saw a different shade of greenish-purple.

There was one light on the ship that slowly went around. And the machine, I could hear it because it was still functioning and it had like a hum to it. It was like a bass, like say if you unplugged an amp from a guitar, that kind of deep sound and it kind of fluctuated and then finally it just cut off and everything just seemed to stop.

When I was looking at the craft, it was buried so I could see the back of it and there were these large things that looked liked vents, sort of like a fish gill on the back. I couldn't see around the other side and I guess that it was the same way on the other side. Again, this liquid that had come out of the ship got on my cammies and it discolored them and ate them almost like acid. It ate some of the hair off my arms- I didn't know that until later on.

I was down there with the ship. There were three holes in it. I assumed that they were hatches but there was no way to tell. They were not flush with the main body of the craft. They were, I don't know, a few inches below. I knew that there was one on top because you could slightly see it. I don't know about the other side. There was another hatch the same width and diameter of the top hatch and it was kind of crooked to the side and it was half open. I didn't see any lights or anything coming out of it but I felt this... presence.

It is real strange. I think the creatures calmed me. It was weird and I think they were trying to communicate with me, like, I guess, telepathically. It is really weird and I don't believe in any of that stuff. It is like basically sitting in your car and turning on an a.m. station that is just noise and just turning it up real high. That is what I heard when I first got in there.

The ship was about ten meters in width and about 20 meters in length, that is just an estimate from what I remember. But it was huge. It was shaped like something between an egg and a teardrop. It looked really aerodynamic at least in the shape. I was close enough to make out detail on it but it was not just smooth. There were bumps and notches and things on it. It was really organic -it was almost like art. It looked like something that someone made in a shop. It looked like it could have been hand made but out of what and what materials, I don't know. Definitely nothing like titanium.

It looked metal but it didn't have any reflection on it. The sun is shining on it and I could see the different shades of the craft and it didn't reflect anything. I guarantee that if I had shone a flashlight on it, it wouldn't have reflected it.

I wanted to get inside because someone- the creatures I think were calling me to help them. Everything was going to be all right. I was so mesmerized and into it and suddenly Sergeant Allen and Sergeant Atkinson were hollering and cussing at me to get the hell out of there.

SG: Why?

JW: I think that they were scared and they didn't want me to get hurt. I don't know. And they were real pissed off at me. Basically what happened was after we climbed back up, the DOE, Department of Energy people were there. They knew about it so I don't know why we went there still to this day. But anyway, I was arrested. I had all my gear taken from me by men in black cammies. They had no nametags. They were older men, probably in their late 30s or 40s. I was at the site probably fifteen or twenty minutes- we were the first people on the position. Then there were other people. They had containment suits. They must have just gotten there. I don't know because we were down in the gorge. When we climbed up, there were the guys in the black cammies. They took me and put me on a cot that they had. They had me cuffed, both hands down, and they had my legs tied together with those plastic fasteners that the police use. They are kind of like cuffs. And they took me in this huge 47 and we took off.

SG: Did they explain why they were treating you this way?

JW: No, they were cussing at me saying that I was a "dumb asshole." "Why don't you fucking people ever pay attention to orders?" "You weren't supposed to be there." "You are not supposed to see this." "You are going to be dangerous if we let you go." I thought that they were going to kill me, really.

Your question again is how long was I contained or subdued. I don't know. For about two days I think. They had a Lieutenant Colonel from the Air Force and he did not identify himself. And he told me, "If we just took you out in the jungle, they would never find you out there."

[See the similarity of these threats with those made to Glen Dennis at Roswell 50 years earlier. SG]

I didn't want to test him to see if he would really do that so I just said, "Yeah." And, he said, "You have got to sign these papers. You never saw this." I "don't exist" and "this situation never happened." And if you tell anybody, you will just come up missing.

He was real abrasive. Just a cynical asshole I guess is the best way to put it. They had me segregated with Air Force personnel for approximately three weeks and after that I was sent back.

At this facility, I saw there were Americans but there were a lot of other nationalities there. There were Chinese. I think Germans were there. A lot of other people were at this other base. All they did was take me to an interrogation room.

I sat in there for, I don't know, fifteen hours with a light. They put this light in my face and they were yelling at me. I couldn't readily identify any of these guys but I knew one of them was at the crash site because I recognized him and he was in black fatigues. He was saying, "What did you see?" He was like growling. He goes, "Are you a patriot? Do you like the Constitution?" I'm like, "Yeah." He said, "We are on our own program. We don't obey. We just do what we want." And they are growling and they are relishing it. They are yelling at me and hollering and cursing. "You didn't see anything. We will do you and your whole goddamn family."

It was basically that for about eight or nine hours... "We are going to take you off in a helicopter and we are going to kick your ass out in the jungle and we are going to end you." They didn't physically put their hands on me but I was sitting in a chair and I was handcuffed to the chair and I couldn't move so basically it was just harassment. I didn't eat anything for a whole day. No water. No nothing. I just sat there.

The group, my section was about eight to ten guys but just me, Sergeant Allen and Sergeant Atkinson saw this ship. We were the only ones that saw it. Now the others saw the crash area where it came through the jungle. They saw all that. They didn't go into the ridge. Like I said, we were ten to twenty meters in front of them and we radioed that we found it and everything was fine. It was in late March, early April of 1997 when this happened...

When I got back to the US I approached Sergeant Allen about it. He is married and has about one or two kids and I went to his house on base. He got all upset and threw me out of his house. He said he didn't want to talk about it. I guess they scared those guys too. You have got to understand I can't speak for the rest of the armed services but in the Marine Corp everything is monolithic: When they are told to do something, they are going to do it. If you don't want to go along, they will basically railroad you.

I didn't want to keep my mouth shut about it. I told First Sergeant Powell about it. I don't think that he is still there anymore. We are talking three years ago.

There was no debris that I saw but there were big gashes in the rear of the aircraft. What it looked like is it had been hit with maybe a surface to air missile. There were a couple of HAWK batteries, that's Homing All the Way Killers - that's a low to medium anti-aircraft missile.

Basically, it doesn't have to hit the target in order to destroy the target. What it does is it gets in proximity of it and it has a high explosive fragmentation warhead and it basically explodes like a big shotgun in the vicinity of the targeted area. And by fragmentation it is suppose to destroy the target or damage it so it won't be able to continue its mission. So I think that we shot it down.

This is what I think happened. We shot it down. The other guys [at the radar facility] knew it was flying. I knew that these aircraft were flying because I had been in the Command Center there at the radar installation and I heard a couple of women there in the Air Force talking about aircraft flying in and out of the atmosphere at mach ten plus. So these aircraft were flying around there. They would reenter the atmosphere. I believe that the higher ups knew it was flying in the area.

This ship was not one of ours. In Stinger School they teach you about all different kinds of aircraft and I knew a lot of aircraft anyway. Essentially, when I saw it I said, "This is nothing that I knew of."

Basically, the radar was sitting on a hill and it rotates. There is a command bunker that was built under the earth. It looks like Star Wars in there. It is totally air-conditioned. It is really nice. There are computers and they have the control panels that control the radar and I guess they are linked to other sites and get other data coming in.

Well, one night I was in there checking people going in and out. They have IDs and I would check them. So these two girls came walking out and they were talking, "Well, we have these aircraft flying again." And the other girl said, "Yeah, they are coming in and out of the atmosphere." And they log all these flights coming in. Later a man comes and gets the logbooks and I had to sign off for him to take all that.

When you have objects that reenter the atmosphere and then stop on a dime and then turn around and go exactly the opposite direction - that is kind of strange. Meteors don't do that.

SG: Is this something that was rare or something that was happening all the time?

JW: Oh, this was happening all the time. There were about three or four instances where I was on duty there that the same Air Force Officer came in there to get the log books. So these craft were tracked from this particular radar and were logged in. I guess the reason they were taking them is that they didn't want people to know that they were tracking these craft. I am just assuming that.

So I think they knew this craft was coming in. "We can't identify it. It is violating airspace here. They could have radioed the Peruvians and said to take them out and they shot them down. I am confident that when I saw the aircraft, it had been hit by something. Something had taken it out.

I am not doing this to make money or publicity or anything but I think it needs to be told. I think that people need to hear it. Whether they agree with me or not is of no consequence.

It is not from Earth. I knew that when I looked at it. I wondered if those facilities were built for the intent to track UFO s or other objects and their cover was there to track drug aircraft. I don't know, but from what I understand they were doing a whole lot more than just tracking drug aircraft. They had laser range finders and all kinds of high tech stuff that I have never seen before. I couldn't really explain it. They [the laser range finders] looked like big telescopes but they had them in a bunker and it was able to rise up and zoom around- Just a bunch of weird stuff.

The base I was taken to was definitely something like NATO or some multinational deal. I keep going back and really thinking about that. Why are all these guys here? Why would the Chinese be concerned with drugs being smuggled into the states? I know for a fact that our government is the one that is importing drugs. I think that this Command Center was permanent. This thing has been in operation for while...

At the crash site there were about thirty of those guys with hazard suits on, at least. They marched right by me as I was being taken away. They were marching to get down the cliff. I guess they were there to check this thing out. I think they went in there and they took everything out and they shipped it back home.

The behavior of these people was like this is routine and these guys were squared away. They knew exactly what they were doing. They had been trained to do this stuff before. That was the atmosphere: professional, cold, unassuming nature. We are here to do a job. Get the fuck out of our way is basically the attitude.

[See the testimony of Clifford Stone who in the 1970s and 80s served on such a retrieval team. SG]

I almost lost my mind after this happened.

SG: Why is that?

JW: I was raised in a Christian home to believe that there was a God and that he created everything in the Universe and here they are - these creatures that I have never seen before and this happens. It made me almost crazy. Not suicidal, but I had to reevaluate everything that I knew. It is sort of like when you were a kid and you had been told that Santa Claus is real and then you find out that he is not. It is like now that you know that there is no going back.

There is no denial. There is no way to say, "I didn't really see this." What do I do? Do I tell people? Who is going to believe that a Lance Corporal in the Marine Corp in the middle of the fucking jungle is going to see an aircraft like this?

If I had to I would go with these creatures right now. I had this obsession with that I guess because of the pain and the experience in the Marine Corps, but I just wanted to escape and I was thinking about being with these creatures and wanting to go with them and wanting to get out of here...

[See the testimony of Larry Warren regarding Airman Burriss and how he reacted after the encounter at Bentwaters AFB in the UK. SG]

These different agencies are on their own. They don't obey the law. They are rogue. Do I think that this is a project that goes up through the government and everyone has a piece in it? No. I think these guys operate on their own and no one knows what they do. It is so easy to do today. And there is no oversight, no control. They just do whatever they want. They are evil. These people are evil. Do I think that it goes to Bill Clinton and the Congress? There may be guys up there that know about it but they are not going to say anything. If they say anything, they are through.

Lethal, deadly force has been used. For those of you who don't know, I know marine snipers and I have heard other guys talk about it and I've heard that these guys go on the streets and they stalk people and they kill them. I know that the Army Airborne snipers do the same thing. They use Delta Force to go grab these people and silence them by killing them. If this goes on, where do they get the money to finance all this. Very simply, they are selling arms. They are selling drugs. A lot of this business is about having the spec ops and how they get these unlimited amounts of money. Well, it is not coming from the government coffers - it is coming from running drugs or weapons - the selling of hardware or whatever.

I have lived in honorable circumstances but I confessed to having smoked marijuana so I could get out of the Marines. That is what I told them because I wanted out. Well, there were two ways to do it: I could have either told them that [or that] I was homosexual. That wouldn't have gone over too well. So I went over to First Sergeant Powell and I told him that I wanted to get out and what was the quickest way to get out and he said, "Tell them you smoked marijuana. Only tell them that you smoked it once." So I told them that and they had the CID guy come and talk to me and I said, "Yeah, I smoked marijuana. I took one puff and I inhaled." I was desperate to get out...

SOURCE STATED THAT THE VEHICLE WAS SPOTTED ON TWO DIFFERENT OCCASIONS. THE FIRST WAS DURING THE MORNING HOURS OF 9 MAY 80, AND THE SECOND DURING THE EARLY EVENING HOURS OF 10 MAY 80.

_____ SOURCE STATED THAT ON 9 MAY, WHILE A GROUP OF FAP OFFICERS WERE IN FORMATION AT MARIANO MALGAR, THEY SPOTTED A UFO THAT WAS ROUND IN SHAPE, HOVERING NEAR THE AIRFIELD. THE AIR COMMANDER SCRAMBLED AN SU-22 AIRCRAFT TO MAKE AN INTERCEPT. THE PILOT, ACCORDING TO A THIRD PARTY, INTERCEPTED THE VEHICLE AND FIRED UPON IT AT VERY CLOSE RANGE WITHOUT CAUSING ANY APPARENT DAMAGE. THE PILOT TRIED TO MAKE A SECOND PASS ON THE VEHICLE, BUT THE UFO OUT-RAN THE SU-22.

_____ THE SECOND SIGHTING WAS DURING HOURS OF DARKNESS. THE VEHICLE WAS LIGHTED. AGAIN AN SU-22 WAS SCRAMBLED, BUT THE VEHICLE OUT-RAN THE AIRCRAFT.

Testimony of Major George A. Filer III

November 2000

Major George Filer was an Air Force Intelligence Officer who not only had an extraordinary encounter with a massive UFO on radar over the United Kingdom, but later, in the 1970s while he was at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey, found out that an extraterrestrial biological entity had been shot at Fort Dix. The Extraterrestrial fled to adjacent McGuire Air Force Base, where it died on the tarmac. He testifies that this life form was then picked up and taken to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. Afterwards, many of the key personnel on the base who had a connection with this event, were quickly transferred. Major Filer also points out that the ridicule factor has been very effective at silencing people who have seen ETs or UFOs, and has helped to maintain secrecy.

GF: Major George Filer

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

GF: My name is George A. Filer, III. I was in the U.S. Air Force and my final rank was major. I was a navigator in various aircraft and tanker transport aircraft. I was an intelligence officer most of my career, and in that period, frequently briefed generals and congressmen on our capabilities and the threat to our forces.

Well, I was a briefing officer, and I would come to work [at] 4:00 or so in the morning. On the morning of January 18, 1978, I drove through the main gate at McGuire, and I noticed that there were red lights out on the runway, and that probably something was going on out there. [I] didn't think too much about it until I got to the 21st Air Force Command Post, [which] was where I worked. I was the Deputy Director of Intelligence for the 21st Air Force, which controlled half the military aircraft that flew the presidents and the various VIPs from the Mississippi River around to India. We had some 300 aircraft, and we were flying all kinds of missions—almost anything that had to do with military airlift, we accomplished.

This particular morning, when I went into the command post, I was met by the head of the command post, and he said that it [had] been a very exciting evening—that [we'd] had UFOs over McGuire all night, that one had apparently landed or, possibly, crashed at Fort Dix, and that when a military policeman came upon the alien, that he had pulled out a gun and shot him. And I said, foreigner, [that kind of] alien? I was a little bit confused by him saying alien. And he said, "No, an alien from outer space." He was very specific about the fact that an alien from outer space had been shot at Fort Dix, and that he had run away after being wounded, and headed for McGuire. Now McGuire and Fort Dix just have a fence between them, and this alien apparently climbed the fence or went under it, and got to McGuire and died out on the end of the runway. The security police were out there and had captured the body, so to speak, and were guarding it. He said that a C-141 from Wright-Patterson was coming in to pick up the body. That made me stand up, because I didn't realize that Wright Patterson had C-141s—I thought Military Airlift Command was the only one who owned C-141 aircraft—so I was like, my gosh, what's going on here? He said, "We want you to brief us at the standup general briefing this morning and explain what happened to everybody." And, I said you want me to tell General Tom Sadler and everybody in the command post that we captured an alien?!

They said, "Yes, we want you to brief [them] this morning." Well, I did some checking around, and I called the 38th Military Airlift Wing Command Post to check with them to see if the story was the same as I was given. They said, yes, that they had heard the same information; they said that this actually did happen—that an alien was found on the base.

Later that morning, I was told that they decided not to brief it in the standup briefing, so I didn't actually brief it. Later that morning, I carried the code word down to General Sadler's office, and I noticed some commotion going on in there, and that some of the security police people were there, looking rather disheveled. Since General Sadler was a stickler for everyone looking perfect, it was surprising to see these people that obviously needed shaves and were in fatigues, so then I knew that this might tie into the story that I had heard.

After the briefing I went to the photo lab; almost every day I went to the photo lab, because in these briefings, you have four screens and you have to keep them all filled up with pretty pictures, and so on. There, they indicated that they had taken pictures of something extraordinary, and I said, well, let me see them. The sergeant was handing them to me, when his master sergeant said, "He can't see those," so all I knew is that they had some pictures that I wasn't allowed to see—but normally, being the general's briefer—I had never been stopped from seeing any pictures that they had.

It was a very serious operation. There are nuclear assets on the base—they used to carry nuclear weapons back and forth to Europe—and I talked to one of the security policemen who [claimed] to have been out there. He indicated that he essentially saw a small body that could have been like a child, but it seemed to have a larger-than-normal head.

One interesting thing is that many of the key personnel on the base at that time who had a connection with this event, were quickly transferred—from the wing commander on down—indicating that if you knew something, they tended to split you up, so to speak, so you couldn't talk about it. This was done within a matter of weeks. The security policeman told me that he was transferred within a few days—as a matter of fact, he was taken to Wright Patterson within a day or two, debriefed by a number of people, and essentially told not to talk about it anymore.

I also heard that they listened to this going on, on the radios, and they heard that this chase was on; that the alien had been shot at Fort Dix. They were chasing ic cowards McGuire—for whatever reason, it chose to run towards McGuire Air Force Base—and that both the state police and the military police were chasing this person or alien that came from what looked like a UFO. As I understand it, it was a disc-shaped craft.

They indicated to me that the UFOs had been in the area for quite some time that evening, that they had [them] on radar, and that the tower operator had seen them. Some of the other aircraft in the area had apparently seen them as well.

There were six or eight people guarding the body; then there was the commander of the security police, and a few of us in the command post [who knew of this event]. I assume that General Sadler was briefed about it.

SG: Have you learned of other UFO events while you were in the military?

GF: Well, I happened to meet a lady who was at White Sands, and was an engineer working out there. She was out hiking one day, and she told me that she and a couple of her friends had come up to the top of a hill, and they had looked down in this valley, but only their heads were showing on the top of the hill. They just happened to be looking over, and down the way the path was, and they saw a UFO on the ground with a couple of little aliens picking up rocks and things. They watched it for an extensive period; it was only several hundred yards away from them, and they got a pretty good look at it. And eventually the aliens did see them, and they jumped in the craft and took off.

I had personally never seen anything until about 1962, when we were flying tankers over England, and London Control asked us to intercept a UFO. We happened to be done with our refueling mission, and we accepted the assignment. We were just over the North Sea, and they asked us to fly to the center of England. We were doing some 400 miles an hour in a dive down to intercept this object. They gave us headings, and it was pretty much hovering in the Stonehenge area—Oxford, to the Stonehenge area, at 20-30 miles out. I got it on radar, and it was a very large return.

We used to fly up by the Forth of Frith Bridge, which was kind of like the San Francisco Bridge—it is a very large bridge, and the return of the UFO was similar to that in size and intensity. In other words, it was a very large radar return. Obviously, London Control had it on their radar, and they were vectoring us to this object. When we got about a mile from the UFO, it just took off into space—several thousand miles an hour, almost directly up. Frankly, at least to my knowledge, we had nothing like that capability.

My best guess is that it was a disc-type craft, but a fat disc—at least, there were lights something like this at the top and at the bottom. It was more than just a straight plate-like object; it had a dome on the top of it.

If the radar return was accurate, it was probably 500 yards across in size, or something—I mean it was a huge thing. We wrote it in the navigators log.

I also had a sighting here, where we live. This is Briarwood Lake in Medford, New Jersey; we had just moved into this house. We were asleep—I'm just guessing it was 3:00 in the morning, asleep with my wife—and, suddenly, the room got very bright in the middle of the night. I got up out of bed, and opened up the shade, and looked outside. I don't know if most people have seen a submarine surfacing with all the water coming up—well, this was like a disc about 30 feet in diameter surfacing, and what looked to me like water coming off of it.

Around the craft was this ionization—very similar to the Aurora Borealis. It moved across the lake for a while, and then flew off at a fairly high rate of speed. Because of that, I have checked with a lot of the neighbors, and it's amazing how many people have actually seen craft on these lakes.

Also, occasionally I used to do briefings on the UFO sightings that had occurred around the world, to the generals. One that sticks out in my mind is 1976—there was a famous encounter near Tehran.

Around that time, this particular colonel was telling me that the F-106 had set the world's record for speed. They had these aircraft going as fast as they could, and they would be diving on this UFO that was hovering in a valley in Colorado. Just like my experience in England, when they got near the craft, it took off and left them standing still. They were doing 1,500 mph or something—whatever the top speed was at that time for these aircraft in a dive—but whoever was flying these had capabilities far beyond anything that we had for years and years—I think even today.

I think these are something alien: it is a non-human [craft] that has a different form of propulsion and is coming here and doing reconnaissance.

I've talked to a number of astronauts who have seen them; I've talked to other military pilots who have seen them, and I remember Captain Ramidge who I used to work for in Athens, Greece—he had one during the Korean War fly right off his wing, stay with him like for an hour—not only off his wing, but [doing] acrobat things around his aircraft! I don't know the exact percentage of people, but something like 10 percent of the pilots and aircrews that you ask about it have had sightings.

I sat in this room here a few years ago, and a colonel who was in Intelligence told me he had his whole B-52 crew see a UFO. You know, these people don't volunteer and sit in front of the camera and tell about it, but there are an awful lot of people who have seen them. They know that they have advanced capabilities. They usually see some kind of a solid object that appears to be made of some kind of metal—usually a gunmetal gray. Particularly at night, people usually report various lights around them.

SG: What happened to the ET at McGuire?

GF: It seems to me that I was told that it was put in some kind of a casket and flown away.

I also think that in 1947, in that time frame, something crashed out West. I think that something happened out there, at least based on what you might say is the talk in the military.

The tendency is to make things classified when you don't know what's happening—secret, top secret or whatever—and if it comes down from the President, it's a very high classification: probably a code word above top secret. In other words, need to know that kind of thing, and once that caveat or designation is put on something, it's very difficult to get it downgraded. You can go to the archives and despite what they tell you, they have things going back to the Second World War that you still are not allowed to look at. Once these things are top secret, it just kind of moves on and forever stays top secret. You can base it on the fact, for example, that this craft had advanced technological capabilities, so you don't want the other side to know what you know, and how these things work—it's to your advantage to keep this secret.

But, I think that it's time that these various programs come out. The way that it's been kept secret to this extent is through ridicule. If it was just a matter of it being top secret, I think most of the world would know about it today, but they put in a kind of ridicule factor. You will hear someone telling a story like this, and people will say, well, he must be crazy—he believes in UFOs. And, they brought this ridicule out when anyone saw anything, but my experience has been an awful lot of policemen have seen these; an awful lot of FBI have seen these; an awful lot of military have seen these.

At times I used to carry nuclear weapons. In other words, I was mentally fit to carry nuclear weapons, but I'm not mentally fit if I see a UFO. This criticism and this ridicule have done more to keep the story [from] coming out than almost anything else.

[We hear this over and over from military and other witnesses: the media and official ridicule is so intense, that it has served as a powerful force for silence and secrecy. Most people do not want to expose themselves or their families to such ridicule, and instead choose to remain quiet. SG]

Testimony of Mr. Nick Pope, British Ministry Of Defense

September 2000

Nick Pope is a British Ministry of Defense official, still currently employed at the Ministry of Defense, who headed up the Ministry's office for research and investigation of the UFO phenomenon for a number of years in the 1990s. In his testimony, we will learn of incontrovertible evidence in several events with massive objects moving at extraordinary speeds, witnessed by military personnel with impeccable credentials, and tracked on radar—objects which are not manufactured on this earth. He will also confirm the Bentwaters case and other cases within the United Kingdom, and acknowledge the existence of extensive government files on the UFO phenomenon. Mr. Pope supports total openness and honesty on the UFO issue, and believes that there should be a full disclosure of all information on UFOs, held by governments all around the world.

NP: Mr. Nick Pope

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

NP: My name is Nick Pope. I'm a serving official with the British Ministry of Defense, which I joined in 1985. I've done a number of different tours of duty there, the most relevant of which is from 1991 to 1994, when I was posted to a division called Secretariat Air Staff. My duties there were to research and investigate the UFO phenomenon for the British government.

I received somewhere between two and three hundred UFO reports each year. My job was to evaluate these [and] to come to a decision about whether there was evidence of any threat to the defense of the United Kingdom. After an in-depth investigation, 90-95 percent of those sightings turned out to have prosaic explanations, but we were left with a hard core of sightings, which defied any conventional explanation whatsoever. These were a number of interesting cases involving sightings by military personnel, near misses between UFOs and aircraft, instances where UFOs were tracked on radar, and cases where UFOs were captured on film and video.

Over the years in which the British government has been looking at the UFO phenomenon, there have been numerous cases in which uncorrelated targets have been tracked by military flight controllers and, certainly, on a number of those occasions, military jets were either diverted from task or, indeed, scrambled, to try and intercept these objects—not to engage them in any hostile sense, but merely to close with them to identify them.

Now, on those occasions, I have to say, we have not been successful in our attempts to make an interception. Invariably, we find that the speeds and maneuvers of the UFOs are way ahead of the best things in our inventory, with regard to aircraft. They run rings around us, frankly.

On occasion—when military jets have actually been chasing UFOs to try and get gun camera footage, or to try and close within visual range to get an ID on what the mystery craft is, these things have shown that not only are they capable of phenomenal bursts of speed, but also the capacity to just stop and turn in an instant, raising all sorts of issues about the G-force implicit in such a maneuver—G-forces, which frankly, even with the best G-suit, would be far too much, I think, for any human to survive. That, in itself, raises interesting questions about who's operating these things.

To pick a few cases to talk about which are particularly impressive, I think one has to perhaps start back in 1956, with a radar visual sighting that took place near the Bentwaters area. Incidentally, this was one of the cases written up in Project Blue Book and judged to be particularly specific. To cut a long story short, there were fighter controllers who picked up a radar target, which was not readily identifiable as one of our own aircraft. So, we simply took a look at that and judged that there was indeed a solid structured craft in the air. It was traveling at a phenomenal speed compared to the envelope, as it were, of our own fighters.

Jets were launched, and, indeed, the pilots did manage to close and get a visual sighting on this object. They just described it as some sort of structured, possibly disk-shaped craft, but frankly, it was just too fast and maneuverable for them to get a really clear view. Again, it ran rings around them. So, that was an interesting example—one of many of these craft displaying speeds and maneuvers which we couldn't hope to match.

To throw in an example of a [much more] modern sighting and one that I was directly involved in the investigation of [was] on the 30th and 31st of March, 1993 [when] a series of UFO encounters took place over Great Britain—the most interesting of which involved an occasion where two air force bases were actually overflown by a large triangular or diamond-shaped UFO. The two establishments involved in this are RAF Cosford and RAF Shorebury, in the Midlands.

At RAF Cosford, this part of the sighting happened in the early hours of the 31st, about ten past one in the morning. The guard patrol at Cosford saw this UFO fly directly over the base. They, of course, phoned in an immediate report, and found, interestingly, there was nothing showing up on radar at all—even though they had this thing going right over their heads. They phoned, amongst other people, their colleagues at RAF Shorebury, which is about ten or twelve miles down the road. The meteorological officer took the phone call. You have to understand, there is only a skeleton staff at these establishments, so the "Met" officer there took the call, went outside, perhaps just thinking, really, that this was people playing a trick on him.

But, sure enough—in the distance he saw a bright light heading his way. This thing got closer and closer. The way he described it to me, voice shaking with emotion the following morning, was like a massive flat triangular-shaped craft, possibly raised a little bit like a diamond, passing over his head at a height of maybe no more than 200 feet, slightly to one side, emitting a low frequency humming sound, which he said he could not only hear but feel.

Intriguingly, this craft was firing a narrow beam of light down at the fields just beyond the perimeter fence of the military base. He said that this object came toward him at a speed of probably no more than 20 or 30 miles an hour—very slowly.

Suddenly, the light retracted up into the craft and, in an instant, it shot off to the horizon in a matter of seconds. Bear in mind, this is an Air Force officer with eight years experience in the service. He sees aircraft and fast jets every day of his life. He said the speed of this thing was probably about ten times the speed of an Air Force jet. When I asked him to estimate the size of this mystery craft, with typical military precision he said it was probably midway between a C-130 Hercules transport aircraft and a Boeing 747 jumbo jet.

I launched a full investigation into this incident, and in fact, this was one of a series of sightings that took place over the entire country on that particular night, involving not just members of the public, but numerous police officers, particularly in the southwest of England and in Wales, and also in the Midlands. I made all the usual checks. We impounded the radar tapes and had them sent up to the Ministry of Defense main building. We made all the series of checks that we could possibly make—checking for everything from satellite tracks and reentry into the Earth's orbit of space debris, to astronomical phenomena, meteorites, fireballs, military aircraft exercises, weather balloon launches—however unlikely this was, we checked. That was always the philosophy—you check everything in this business.

We drew a complete blank, and at the end of about a week or so of pretty solid work on this, I put a report up the chain-of-command through my Head of Division to the Assistant Chief of the Air Staff—an Air Vice Marshal Two-Star Air Force Officer. We put this up to him, and we basically said that an uncorrelated target, an unidentified craft—but not just a light or a shape—a structured craft of unknown origin, penetrated what we call the UK ADR, the United Kingdom Air Defense Region.

On that particular night, it flew without being tracked on radar, without any aircraft being launched, and flew with total impunity over two military establishments and over a large part of the rest of the country—and then disappeared, object unexplained. The Assistant Chief of the Air Staff thought long and hard about that. I suppose it was a Catch-22 situation. He simply came back and he said, "It's a very interesting case, but you've clearly run all the checks that you can make. There is frankly nothing more we can do, but it's fascinating."

Now, I think when that went up the chain-of-command, we certainly changed a few people's minds there about the whole nature of the UFO phenomenon, and we got, I think, a number of senior civil servants and military officers to really realize that on their watch, as it were, this occurred and was not just nonsense. The UFO phenomenon is not just lights and shapes in the sky. It's real, it's solid; it can involve the military as much as anyone else. I think that that remains one of the most significant cases ever to have taken place in Britain, and frankly, it shows—if indeed there is any doubt remaining—the serious defense and national security issues raised by the whole UFO phenomenon.

Over the years, there have been a number of films taken by military aircraft through gun cameras. Now, unfortunately, this film footage does not seem to exist anymore, but one of my predecessors who headed up the division where I worked under its previous title of DS8, that is Defense Secretariat 8, was a man called Ralph Noyes. He is someone who, before his death, also as a Ministry of Defense employee, spoke out publicly about the reality of the UFO phenomenon and made the point to all who would listen that there was a serious phenomenon here, and it did need and deserve serious study. Now, Ralph certainly did see those bits of film footage [gun camera footage of UFOs from military aircraft]. Ralph told me—and indeed, I think his testimony has gone onto the written record as well—that he was called to a briefing of senior Air Force personnel, and that they all gathered around to look at some of this footage that had come after a chase where a military jet had been sent up to try and get a closer look at a UFO. Ralph Noyes told me that he and all these people on the Air Staff just sat around gasping with astonishment—looking, pointing, wondering—but frankly, not able to really take it that much further, except, again, the implicit acknowledgement that there are things operating in our airspace that have better capabilities than we do.

When I say that, of course, I include the point about prototype craft, because one of the points that is often put forward about the UFO phenomenon is the fairly reasonable question: Couldn't it be that what you are seeing when you talk about structured craft with high speeds and extraordinary maneuvers, is just the next generation of Air Force planes—prototype devices, whether they be aircraft or remotely piloted vehicles?

Well, speaking as a serving member of the Ministry of Defense and having done the UFO job for three years, I can tell anyone who makes that point that yes, of course, at any given time, there are prototype aircraft and devices that we operate, but we know where we operate our own bits of kit. We operate them in very carefully controlled and defined ranges and danger areas, and we do not make mistakes about UFOs and prototypes. We don't go chasing UFOs if it's a prototype. We can tell the difference.

So, when the public sees something—who knows? It depends where they see it. But, when we're talking about military sightings, and when we're talking about the research and investigation that I did, if I had stumbled onto a prototype test, then "A" I would have known, and "B" if I hadn't known, I would have been told. And, of course we would have butted out of that pretty quick.

Britain's most famous UFO case is the Randelsham Forest incident, which is sometimes also referred to as the Bentwaters Case. That involved a series of UFO incidents over a number of nights in December of 1980, involving nominally the Royal Air Force Bases, but in fact, they were operated by the United States Air Force. They were RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge in Suffolk.

[See the testimony of Larry Warren, Lori Rehfeldt, Clifford Stone, Lord Hill-Norton, et al. SG]

Now, in this case, there were a series of encounters where some people saw lights in the sky performing extraordinary maneuvers, but much more significantly, on the first night of activity, people saw a structured metallic craft actually moving—not up in the sky—but right down pretty much at ground level. It was moving through Randelsham Forest, which adjoins the two bases. At one point, this small metallic, roughly triangular-shaped craft seemed to actually come down and land in a particular clearing.

Now, all the witnesses to this are military personnel: they're trained observers; they don't make mistakes. Some of the skeptics have suggested that this could have been a mistaken sighting of a nearby lighthouse. That's nonsense for two reasons: firstly, these were trained military observers who actually were familiar with the lighthouse and saw it pretty much every night of their tour of duty, [and] secondly, certainly at one point in the encounter, the lighthouse was clearly visible at the same time as the UFO. So, this simply could not have been the lighthouse, as the skeptics sometimes suggest.

Although this case predated my own tour of duty by ten years, a little more, I reviewed the case and I looked through the file. I tried to reopen the investigation into this incident. The most important thing that I was able to focus on was, in fact, physical evidence that something had taken place, because after this craft had touched down, people went back in the light of day to the landing site and found that where they'd seen this craft land there were, in fact, three triangular indentations on the forest floor. What I mean by that is there were three indentations which, when you drew lines between them, were pretty much in the shape of a perfect equilateral triangle.

One of the things that was done, was that the area was checked for radiation. This is where I came in. I took the readings that were taken, [and] it's important to say these readings peaked in two places: they peaked in the indentations themselves, and also [in] some damage that was done to the sides of the trees in the clearing - as if this thing had come down and snapped off some branches and stripped off some bark; as it had done so either coming in or going out.

I sent the figures that had been recorded at the time by Lieutenant Colonel Charles Halt, who was the deputy base commander—himself a witness at some of these incidents. I sent the data from Halt and his team to the Defense Radiological Protection Service, which is part of the Ministry of Defense. They came back to me, and they were frankly bemused by this whole thing, and they said that the radiations from the indentations in the ground were ten times background for that area—ten times what they should have been.

Now of course, it is important to say that the levels were still comparatively low: Halt and his team were not endangered by this. This was still low-level radiation. But again, looking at it from a scientific point of view, that's not the point. The point is that when compared with control readings immediately outside of the area, you had this peak of ten times normal right where this craft came down on the forest floor.

So, that, I think is extremely significant, because it involved sightings by trained military observers and, also, at one point, this craft was tracked on radar from a nearby base, RAF Watten. So, you had sightings on radar, sightings by trained military personnel, and after the event, in the cold light of day, the undeniable, scientific, methodological evidence of the radiation readings. So, that, by anyone's standards, has to be an extremely significant event, and proof, I think, beyond all question of doubt, that there was an unknown craft in that particular clearing on that particular night.

I have seen witness statements from the military personnel, and I've heard testimony from some of those involved that suggests that much more went on that particular night, than even went into the file that ended up in the Ministry of Defense.

There are also incidents where it's claimed that UFOs have taken an extreme interest in civilian nuclear power stations, military installations with nuclear assets, etc.

[At the time it was secret that nuclear weapons were at the Bentwaters Air Force Base under U.S. control. SG]

During my tour of duty in Secretariat Air Staff at the Ministry of Defense, I operated a very open policy with regard to the UFO issue. I made it my business to be quite open and honest about the official research and investigation that I was doing, and not to suppress any data on this. I believe that governments and the military, and indeed private researchers, politicians—whoever—should place everything in the public domain on this issue. Governments can't, I think, have it both ways. You cannot say on the one hand, as the party line often goes, that UFOs are of no defense significance, and then on the other, keep back some of the data.

You simply can't do that. You have to have it one way, or the other. And if, as governments consistently say when the politicians probe on this issue or when the media inquire, that there's really nothing to worry about, then okay, let's see all the data. Let's check that that decision is a valid one, reached through a proper methodology.

I, in support of that aim, believe that there should be a full disclosure of all information on UFOs held by governments all around the world. I think there are some encouraging signs that that's beginning to happen. I know, for example, that early in 2000 at a conference in San Marino, which was part sponsored by the Ministry of Tourism there, so it had an official flavor to it, the Italian Air Force actually sent a delegation on duty, in uniform, to talk about UFO cases received by the Italian Air Force and Ministry of Defense over the years. I'm also aware that this has happened in Chile. As I've said, my own efforts to try and be very open with this and to push data into the public domain as well, I hope, have taken the issue forward somewhat.

Yes, I am a supporter of total openness and honesty on this issue. Clearly, it's a very important issue: one that raises important defense and national security issues, but these are not issues that should be addressed by a small clique and any one grouping of people. These are issues of global significance, which should be addressed and debated by everyone. Indeed, we cannot make a full and proper assessment of the phenomenal data we have, without bringing in all sorts of people—scientists, politicians, military experts—in a much wider way than perhaps this information is available now.

I've made no secret of the fact that I believe some of these UFOs may well be of extraterrestrial origin. I know that that's an extraordinary statement for a serving officer in the Ministry of Defense to make. I don't make it, of course, as an official announcement—it is me speaking in a private capacity—but it is me speaking on the basis of three years official research and investigation; three years of me looking at new sightings coming in, and reviewing the 250 or 300-odd case files held by either the Ministry of Defense or the Public Record Office on the UFO issue, some of which were classified secret at the time. So, I don't make these statements lightly, and I don't do so on the basis of a blind leap of faith. I do it on the basis of the data held by government.

It's important, as well, to say that I am not alone in this assessment; that even within the Ministry of Defense in Britain and at the Air Force and indeed political establishment, I am not a lone voice here. The Ministry of Defense is not a great indivisible organization—like anything else, it is a collection of individuals. So, when you talk about government, the military, and the establishment—whatever grouping you talk about—what you're really talking about is a group of individuals.

I've found that there are skeptics and believers in the world of officialdom, and there are more believers in an extraterrestrial presence than many might expect—particularly in the Air Force. When you go out and speak to the Air Force in Britain, somebody may have had a sighting, somebody may have tracked an uncorrelated target on radar, or [have seen] it do maneuvers that we couldn't possibly match. Either somebody has had these experiences themselves, or knows of somebody—a friend, a colleague—who's had the same thing.

At the beginning of my tour of duty, I did make some effort to establish a dialogue with opposite numbers, particularly in America. I was given the party line, I guess, that officially the Americans had been out of UFO investigations since 1969, when Project Blue Book was closed down. I didn't, frankly, have time to follow that up and probe deeper.

SG: How much assistance did your investigations receive from, for example, the NSA facility at Menwith Hill or the National Reconnaissance Office satellite programs that do reconnaissance? Did you receive any confirmations from those entities or assistance from those entities?

NP: I don't want to talk, I'm afraid, about any liaison with certain agencies on this. All I will say, in very general terms, is that if I had a particularly interesting case on which I felt I needed assistance from any other agency, with any other capability or bit of hardware, then, I would ask through channels. But really, most of the UFO cases that came my way I was happy with the assets that I had, and really did day-to-day research and investigation using national assets such as the UK Air Defense Region radar stations, the ballistic missile early warning center at RAF Fylingdales, and such like. I don't want to go much further than that.

Suffice to say that there have been a steady stream, over the years, of good-quality cases which I think would convince any open-minded observer who actually looked at the data, that there was something here which went significantly further than just lights in the sky. And something which, whatever the claims that are sometimes made about this phenomenon, suggests that something of extreme defense significance is happening, not just in UK airspace, but indeed I think, in airspace all around the world.

In Britain, at the Public Record Office at present, there are about thirty UFO files open to the public. In total, I believe, there are between around about 250 and 300 files. Some of those were classified secret; now, of course, [are] declassified. Britain will get its Freedom of Information Act shortly. I hope and believe that most, if not all, of the British government and military UFO files will soon be released.

What there is, however, is a body of evidence which when placed end to end and looked at by any dispassionate observer with any military or scientific experience, will constitute proof of the reality of this phenomenon.

One important fact about the British wave of sightings in March, 1993, was that it happened three years to the very night after the wave of sightings that rocked the establishment in Belgium, and led to the scrambling of F-16s. That, again, was late on the 30th and in the early hours of the 31st of March. So, it's one of those very interesting facts that perhaps two of Europe's most significant UFO waves actually happened on the very same night of the year, three years apart.

Although it predated my involvement, one of the most significant waves of sighting in Europe took place over Belgium in March of 1990. On that occasion, UFOs were seen by large numbers of people on the ground, and tracked on radar, resulting in two F-16 fighter interceptors being scrambled. These aircraft then picked up the UFOs themselves on their airborne radar, and an intriguing game of cat and mouse played itself out in the skies of Belgium over the next hour or so.

Although that happened before I was posted into Secretariat Air Staff, I made contact with the British air attache in Brussels. I asked him, really for my own peace of mind and for my own background research, to confirm the reality of that. He had certainly spoken directly to one or both of the F-16 pilots and to the senior military officer involved in this, Colonel DeBrouer. And certainly the word that came back to me officially, via our embassy, was yes, this incident happened pretty much as reported.

Yes, there was a solid-structured craft there, which made some maneuvers way ahead of the F-16s. And as a sort of unofficial aside, there was a comment going around the Belgian Air Staff, which was to the effect of, "Thank goodness they were friendly."

Reports on Aerial Phenomena

1. Recent reports on aerial phenomena show that some units are unaware of this Headquarters letter reference 110/G.2802/S/Int. dated 16th December, 1953, and Fighter Command Headquarters letter FC/S.45405/Signals, dated 13th January, 1953, which was sent to Headquarters Metropolitan and Southern Sectors (for onward transmission to appropriate Radar units) under reference 110/S.3281/GPS, C & R, dated 21st January, 1953. These letters give instructions for reporting and the action to be taken in regard to the detection of unusual aerial phenomena. So that units may know the action to be taken in future sightings, the letters referred to above are summarised in the following paragraphs. E-1

2. Sightings of aerial phenomena by Royal Air Force personnel are to be reported in writing by Officers Commanding Units immediately and directed to Air Ministry (D.D.I. (Tech.)) with copies to Group and Command Headquarters. In addition, any reports from civilians received by units should be acknowledged formally in writing and copies of the reports themselves forwarded direct to Air Ministry (D.D.I. (Tech.)).

3. It will be appreciated that the public attach more credence to reports by Royal Air Force personnel than to those by members of the public. It is essential that the information should be examined at Air Ministry and that its release should be controlled officially. All reports are, therefore, to be classified "CONFIDENTIAL" and personnel are to be warned that they are not to communicate to anyone other than official persons any information about phenomena they have observed, unless officially authorized to do so.

4. Radar detection of unusual targets is to be reported by stations through the normal channels. They should make a special report of any unusual response, i.e. any response moving at a ground speed exceeding 700 kts. at any height and at any speed above 60,000 feet.

5. When an unusual response is seen, the supervisor or N.C.O. i/c watch should be informed and he should then check that the echo is not spurious, and arrange for the necessary records to be made to provide the information listed in para. 6 below.

6. Reports on such phenomena should contain, a personal assessment of, and where applicable a copy of, the following:-

- (a) Appearance of the echo.
- (b) The signal strength of the echo (strong, medium and weak) throughout the time of observation, including pick-up and fade points.
- (c) Range and bearing of initial plot and fade points.

Unidentified Objects at West Freugh

1. On the morning of April 4th radar operators at West Freugh detected unidentified objects on the screens of their radars. A summary of this incident is given below.
2. The object was first observed as a stationary return on the screen of a radar at Balsalloch. Although its range remained appreciably constant for about 10 minutes its height appeared to alter from about 50,000 to 70,000 ft. A second radar was switched on and detected the "object" at the same range and height.
3. The radar sets used were capable of following objects automatically besides being manually operated. The information is obtained in the form of polar coordinates but it can be converted to give plain position indication together with heights. This information can be fed into a plotting board which displays the position of the object by means of an electronically operated pen, while the height is shown on a meter.
4. The unidentified object was tracked on the plotting table, each radar being switched on to the table in turn to check for discrepancies. After remaining at one spot for about ten minutes the pen moved slowly in a N.E. direction, and gradually increased speed. A speed check was taken which showed a ground speed of 70 m.p.h., the height was then 54,000 ft.
5. At this time another radar station 20 miles away, equipped with the same type of radar, was asked to ~~search for the object~~. A echo was picked up at the range and bearing given and the radar was "locked-on".
6. After the "object" has travelled about 20 miles it made a very sharp turn and proceeded to move S.E. at the same time increasing speed. Here the reports of the two radar stations differ in details. The one at Balsalloch tracked an "object" at about 50,000 ft at a speed of about 240 m.p.h. while the other followed an "object" or "objects" at 14,000 ft. As the "objects" travelled towards the second radar site the operator detected four "objects" moving in line eastern about 4,000 yards from each other. This observation was confirmed later by the other radars, for when the object they were plotting passed out of range they were able to detect four other smaller objects before they too passed out of range.
7. It was noted by the radar operators that the sizes of the echoes were considerably larger than would be expected from normal aircraft. In fact they considered that the size was nearer that of a ship's echo.
8. It is deduced from these reports that altogether five objects were detected by the three radars. At least one of these rose to an altitude of 70,000 ft while remaining appreciably stationary in azimuth and range. All of these objects appeared to be capable of speeds of about 240 m.p.h. Nothing can be said of physical construction of the objects except that they were very effective reflectors of radar signals, and that they must have been either of considerable size or else constructed to be especially good reflectors.
9. There were not known to be any aircraft in the vicinity nor were there any meteorological balloons. Even if balloons had been in the area these would not account for the sudden change of direction and the movement at high speed against the prevailing wind.
10. Another point which has been considered is that the type of radar used is capable of locking onto heavily charged clouds. Clouds of this nature could extend up to the heights in question and cause abnormally large echoes on the radar. It is not thought however that this incident was due to such

11. It is concluded that the incident was due to the presence of five reflecting objects of unidentified type and origin. It is considered unlikely that they were conventional aircraft, meteorological balloons or charged clouds.

SUMMARY: (U) NUMEROUS UFO SIGHTINGS HAVE BEEN MADE IN BELGIUM SINCE NOV 89. THE CREDIBILITY OF SOME INDIVIDUALS MAKING THE REPORTS IS GOOD. SOME SIGHTINGS HAVE BEEN EXPLAINED BY NATURAL/MANMADE PHENOMENA, SOME HAVE NOT. INVESTIGATION BY THE BAF CONTINUES.

TEXT: 1. (U) NUMEROUS AND VARIOUS ACCOUNTS OF UFO SIGHTINGS HAVE SURFACED IN BELGIUM OVER THE PAST FEW MONTHS. THE CREDIBILITY OF THE OBSERVERS OF THE ALLEGED EVENTS VARIES FROM THOSE WHO ARE UNSOPHISTICATED TO THOSE WHO ARE THE WELL EDUCATED AND PROMINENTLY PLACED.

2. (U) SOURCE A CITES MR LEON BRENG, A 43 YEAR OLD PROFESSOR AT THE FREE UNIVERSITY OF BRUSSELS (PROMINENT) IN THE FIELD OF STATISTICS AND PHYSICS. HE CLAIMS TO HAVE TAKEN PICTURES OF THE PHENOMENA WHICH ARE STILL BEING DEVELOPED BUT WILL BE PUBLISHED BY THE BELGIAN SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF SPACE PHENOMENA IF THEY ARE OF GOOD QUALITY.

3. (U) MR BRENG WAS DRIVING ON THE ARDENNES AUTOROUTE IN THE BEAUFAYS REGION EAST OF LIEGE, SUNDAY, 18 MARCH 1990. AT 2030 HOURS WHEN HE OBSERVED AN AIRBORNE OBJECT APPROACHING IN HIS DIRECTION FROM THE NORTH. IT WAS IN THE FORM OF A TRIANGLE ABOUT THE SIZE OF A PING-PONG BALL AND HAD A YELLOW LIGHT SURROUNDING IT WITH A REDDISH CENTER VARYING IN INTENSITY. ALTITUDE APPEARED TO BE 500 - 1000 METERS, MOVING AT A SLOW SPEED WITH NO SOUND. IT DID NOT MOVE OR BEHAVE LIKE AN AIRCRAFT.

4. (U) MR BRENG CONTACTED A FRIEND VERY NEAR THE AREA WHO CAME OUT AND TOOK PICTURES OF IT WITH A ZOOM LENS AND 400 ASA FILM. BOTH INSISTED THE OBJECT COULD NOT BE AN AIRCRAFT OR HOLOGRAME PROJECTION AS THE SKY WAS CLOUDLESS.

5. 6. (U) DEBROUWER NOTED THE LARGE NUMBER OF REPORTED SIGHTINGS, PARTICULARLY IN NOV 89 IN THE LIEGE AREA AND THAT THE BAF AND MOD ARE TAKING THE ISSUE SERIOUSLY. BAF EXPERTS HAVE NOT BEEN ABLE TO EXPLAIN THE PHENOMENA EITHER.

7. (U) DEBROUWER SPECIFICALLY ADDRESSED THE POSSIBILITY OF THE OBJECTS BEING USAF B-2 OR F-117 STEALTH AIRCRAFT WHICH WOULD NOT APPEAR ON BELGIAN RADAR, BUT MIGHT BE SIGHTED VISUALLY IF THEY WERE OPERATING AT LOW ALTITUDE IN THE ARDENNES AREA. HE MADE IT QUITE CLEAR THAT NO USAF OVERFLIGHT REQUESTS HAD EVER BEEN RECEIVED FOR THIS TYPE MISSION AND THAT THE ALLEGED OBSERVATIONS DID NOT CORRESPOND IN ANY WAY TO THE OBSERVABLE CHARACTERISTICS OF EITHER U.S. AIRCRAFT.

8. (U) MR BRENIC HAS SINCE ASSURED THE COMMUNITY THAT HE IS PERSONALLY ORGANIZING A NEW UFO OBSERVATION CAMPAIGN AND SPECIFICALLY REQUESTS THE HELP OF THE BELGIAN MOD.

9. [REDACTED] RELATED A SIMILAR UFO SIGHTING WHICH APPARENTLY HAPPENED TO A BELGIAN AIR FORCE OFFICER IN THE SAME AREA NEAR LIEGE DURING NOVEMBER 89. THE OFFICER AND HIS WIFE WERE ALLEGEDLY BLINDED BY A HUGE BRIGHT FLYING OBJECT AS THEY WERE DRIVING ON THE AUTOROUTE. THEY STOPPED THEIR CAR, BUT WERE SO FRIGHTENED THEY ABANDONED THE VEHICLE AND RAN INTO THE WOODS. THEY COULD NOT PROVIDE A DETAILED DESCRIPTION BUT WHATEVER IT WAS DEFINITELY APPEARED REAL TO THEM. [REDACTED] UNDERLINED THEIR CREDIBILITY AS SOLID.

COMMENTS: 1. [REDACTED] COMMENT. HE COULD PROVIDE VERY LITTLE CONCRETE INFORMATION EXCEPT TO VERIFY THE LARGE VOLUME OF SIGHTINGS AND THE SIMILARITY OF SOME DURING NOV 89.

2. [REDACTED] THE BAF HAS RULED SOME SIGHTINGS WERE CAUSED BY INVERSION LAYERS, LAZER BEAMS AND OTHER FORMS OF HIGH INTENSITY LIGHTING HITTING CLOUDS. BUT A REMARKABLE NUMBER OCCURRED ON CLEAR NIGHTS WITH NO OTHER EXPLAINABLE ACTIVITY NEARBY.

3. [REDACTED] THE BAF IS CONCERNED TO A POINT ABOUT THE UFO ISSUE AND IS TAKING ACTION TO INVESTIGATE INFORMATION THEY HAVE. [REDACTED] DOES ADMIT, HOWEVER, THAT HE IS NOT OPTIMISTIC ABOUT RESOLVING THE PROBLEM.

4. [REDACTED] FIELD COMMENT. THE USAF DID CONFIRM TO THE BAF AND BELGIAN MOD THAT NO USAF STEALTH AIRCRAFT WERE OPERATING IN THE ARDENNES AREA DURING THE PERIODS IN QUESTION. THIS WAS RELEASED TO THE BELGIAN PRESS AND RECEIVED WIDE DISSEMINATION.

Testimony of Admiral Lord Hill-Norton

[We are grateful to James Fox for sharing this interview.]

Lord Hill-Norron is a five-star Admiral and the former Head of the British Ministry of Defense who was kept in the dark about the UFO subject during his official capacities. In this short interview, he states that this subject has great significance and should no longer be denied and kept secret. He emphatically states, "...that there is a serious possibility that we are being visited—and have been visited for many years—by people from outer space, from other civilizations; that it behooves us to find out who they are, where they come from, and what they want. This should be the subject of rigorous scientific investigation, and not the subject of rubbishing by tabloid newspapers."

I know a good bit about the Bentwaters incident. I've interviewed a number of the people who took part in it, and what I have decided after careful thought, is that there are only two explanations for what happened that night in Suffolk. The first is that the people concerned—including Colonel Halt, who was, at the time, the Deputy Commander of the Base, and a lot of his soldiers—claim that something from outside the earth's atmosphere landed at their air force base. They went and stood by it; they inspected it, they photographed it.

The following day they took tests on the ground where it had been and found radioactive traces; they reported this. Colonel Halt wrote a memorandum, which was sent to our Ministry of Defense. He has appeared on British television at least once, to my knowledge—possibly more often—in which he has repeated, effectively, what he said in that memorandum. What he said is what I have just described. That is one explanation—that it actually happened as Colonel Halt reported.

The other explanation is that it didn't. In that case, one is bound to assume that Colonel Halt and all his men were hallucinating. My position is perfectly clear—either of those explanations is of the utmost defense interest. It has been reported and claimed—and I, myself, have raised it to ministers at the Defense Ministry in this country—that nothing they have been informed about regarding UFOs is of defense interest. Surely, to any sensible person, either of those explanations cannot fail to be of defense interest. That the Colonel of an American Air Force Base in Suffolk and his military men are hallucinating when there are nuclear-armed aircraft on the base—this must be of defense interest.

And, if indeed what he says took place, did take place—and why on earth should he make it up—then, surely, the entry of a vehicle from outer space (and certainly not manmade) to a defense base in this country also cannot fail to be of defense interest. It simply isn't any good for our ministers—and the Ministry of Defense in particular—to say that nothing took place that December night in Suffolk, or that it is not of defense interest. It simply isn't true.

Since my name has become connected with UFO matters in quite a big way in this country, and in one or two other countries too, I have frequently been asked why a person of my background—a former Chief of the Defense Staff, a former Chairman of the NATO Military Committee—why I think there is a cover-up, or what the reasons may be for government's wishing to cover up the facts about UFOs. A number of explanations have often been put forward. The most frequent, and perhaps the most plausible, is the government's concern (which [is] primarily that of the United States, and that of my own country) over the public's reaction if they [were] told the truth—which is that there are objects in our atmosphere which are technically miles in advance of anything that we can deploy, that we have no means of stopping them coming here, and that we have no defense against them, should they be hostile.

I believe governments fear that if they did disclose those facts, people would panic: people would rush about and jam switchboards like they did that famous day in New Jersey, when there was a spoof that the Martians [had] landed—people will go mad, and they will jump up and down. I don't believe that at all—I've said so in print. I do not believe that people today, in the 21st century, are going to panic at that sort of information. After all, they have put up with the introduction of nuclear weapons and the destruction of two Japanese cities 50 years ago. They take as a matter of course that we can land vehicles on Mars—land to the precise instant, forecast years before. So why should they panic? They are much more interested in doing the pools or the lottery. They would shrug their shoulders and take it as a matter of course. Anyway, they don't trust politicians, in my experience.

What I'd like to say is that there is a serious possibility that we are being visited—and have been visited for many years—by people from outer space, from other civilizations; that it behooves us to find out who they are, where they come from, and what they want. This should be the subject of rigorous scientific investigation, and not the subject of rubbishing by tabloid newspapers.

It seems to me that the Benwaters incident is a classic case where an apparent intrusion into our airspace—and indeed, a landing in our country— occurred, which was witnessed by serious-minded people in the military— responsible people, doing a responsible job. And, Bentwaters is, in a sense, a benchmark for how not to deal with these matters in the future.

[See the testimony of Larry Warren, MOD official Nick Pope, Clifford Stone, Lori Rehfeldt, and others regarding the Bentwaters landing event in the UK. I should also mention that I personally spent a couple of hours with Lord Hill-Norton, and he was very concerned about the secrecy surrounding this subject—and the fact that he had been deceived about it. Notwithstanding his five star Admiral status and his position as former head of the Ministry of Defense, he was never officially briefed on the subject. This is consistent with my experiences with President Clintons staff and his first Director of Central Intelligence (CIA Director) James Woolsey, senior members of Congress, very senior Pentagon officials, including the Director of Intelligence (J-2) for the Joint Chief of Staff, and a sitting Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA)—all of whom

I have personally briefed, and had been left out of the loop on this very important matter—or were directly denied information when inquiries were made. This is, of course, a dangerous situation. The secrecy itself is a great threat to the national—and world—security, makes a mockery of democracy and our constitutional form of government, and must be corrected by official action. SG]

Testimony of Security Officer Larry Warren, United States Air Force
September 2000

Larry Warren was a security officer at Bentwaters Air Force Base in the United Kingdom. He was present during an event in 1980 when an extraterrestrial vehicle landed, hovered, and interacted with Air Force personnel on base. Afterwards, the many personnel who had witnessed the events were intimidated, debriefed, and forced to sign documents telling a false version of the story. Warren's testimony is corroborated by multiple other military witnesses who have been identified. There are official documents related to this event; there is a photograph related to the event; and there is physical landing-trace evidence. This entire event is also corroborated by Ministry of Defense official Nick Pope, and five-star Admiral, Sea Lord, former Ministry of Defense head Lord Hill-Norton, and Sergeant Clifford Stone.

LW: Officer Larry Warren

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

LW: My name is Larry Warren. In December of 1980, I was assigned to the 81st Tactical Fighter Wing in Suffolk, East Anglia, at the NATO Air Base Bentwaters, which is next to Woodbridge. I was a security specialist and worked with securing the nuclear arsenal we secretly housed there at that time.

On December 11th, 1980, my security clearance notice, PRP, came through and I was approved. My clearance was a secret clearance at that time.

The UFO incident took place near Woodbridge, which is our sister base, six miles [away] and separated [from Bentwaters] by a pine forest known as Rendlesham Forest. I was into my second week on the flight line, working the night shift.

We had just come off a break. The previous flight, C-flight, had a UFO encounter on Boxing Day [the first weekday after Christmas] morning, early in the hours—two nights before my event. A security policeman named John Burroughs and an Airman Parker were at the East Gate at Woodbridge. Airman Burroughs saw what appeared to be an object in the forest at the east end of the runway, just within the trees. There were multi-colored lights, and he suspected maybe an aircraft had crashed. He called in Central Security Control on Bentwaters and reported what he was seeing. A shift supervisor named Jim Penniston responded—he was a Staff Sergeant—[and] a few other personnel arrived.

I wasn't involved in this, but this is what I know of it: they pursued the phenomena into the woods—they definitely thought there was an air crash, and started to begin those procedures...

They found that it was not an aircraft, but a triangular object about six feet at the base, that rose to a nine-foot point. It was black like glass, with a great density to it. They didn't know if it was on a tripod or on legs of some sort, but it had multi-color lights around it. I do know this—based on his own testimony—that Sergeant Penniston and these men did bring their side-arms, which are 38-calibers that the law enforcement people carried. Sergeant Penniston drew his revolver when they encountered this object and saw clearly that it wasn't anything they were familiar with. These are all highly trained observers—as we all were at that time—for aircraft or unusual things. Sergeant Penniston drew his revolver and aimed it at the object.

At some point he approached this [phenomenon], very close to it, and observed a panel on its side with some sort of language similar to hieroglyphics. It was somewhat familiar to him, but he couldn't identify the script. It was raised from the surface; he touched it and felt the surface—it felt warm to a degree, and [was] the texture of glass, almost—the consistency and hardness. They sensed there was movement within, through this opaque kind of glass. Sergeant Penniston heard a voice. These men had four hours of missing time [and] their radio communication had failed with the base. Luckily enough, some other personnel obviously did respond to see what was happening with these people—and some brought cameras and snapped some photos.

[See the testimony of Sergeant Clifford Stone who confirms that film and photos were taken of these events and how they were handled. SG]

These men were debriefed the next morning. They were retrieved, dazed, [from] the forest; they made statements immediately. They were given injections of what they were told was sodium-pentathol by some element of the Air Force.

Airman Burroughs told me directly that he knew within the next two days that this phenomenon was going to return—and it indeed did. Their shift had ended that day; my shift came on.

There was evidence left by this encounter—pod indentations on the ground. The British Suffolk Constabulary responded to this the next morning, because it was an incident. It was reported to them from the Base Security Police Operations desk. Col. Charles Halt can explain this very accurately, because he was present on-site for the investigation. These pods were in a perfect nine-foot separation, forming a triangle. It represented something [weighing] two and one-half metric tons sitting down on the ground. There was a break in the canopy of the Corsican pines where something clearly came through it. There were background radiation readings taken, and Nick Pope can actually offer some more information on this via the Ministry of Defense.

[See the important testimony of British MOD official Nick Pope which confirms this event and the radiation readings which were taken. SG]

The readings were 25 times higher than the normal natural background radiation in that area. How these readings came up, is that Sergeant Nevels, who was the disaster preparedness man at the base at the time, had the Geiger counters and knew how to read them. These readings were taken from this ground-zero area—there was residual radiation on the trees and everything.

I was put on a very remote post at the end of the RAF Bentwaters flight line, called Perimeter Post 18; it was an alert-man position. I went to my position. It was uneventful for about an hour and one-half. What I noticed first, was an animal disturbance where some deer ran down to a rather low fence we had at that time surrounding the base. This herd of deer jumped the fence and ran past my position, right over the runway. They seemed spooked, or I had that feeling.

Suddenly, I started to hear chatter on the open frequencies. We had Motorola radios at that time. We had four channels of security police and operational active channels. I started to hear commentary about lights over the forest toward Woodbridge: "Those lights are back again," and I was looking up. Suddenly, at this point I [got] a call from Lieutenant Bruce Englund, who is a security police officer. He was the shift commander at that time, and said, "Warren, deactivate your post. You are going to be picked up by a GOV," which is government-operated vehicle. A truck pulled up and Sergeant Bustinza, who [was] my reporting officer, was the driver. Lieutenant Englund was in the passenger seat, and there were other personnel—new personnel like me—in the back. I was told to get in.

We went immediately to the Bentwaters motor pool. There was a lot of chatter about people trying to find the Base CO [Commanding Officer], and they were saying, "Change frequencies, put all the radios down." All of this, I must tell you, was recorded in CSC on the tapes they made of that night. Those were stolen, and so were the logs of that period—[Col.] Charles Halt can confirm this, also. They came up missing in a few days when he went looking—that list of personnel on duty and a lot of different things: incident reports and everything. They were gone...

We had our NATO rounds in the weaponry, which is very unusual, and there was an urgency among senior people. We went down a logging trail into the forest, and there was an armored vehicle after [we got] about a half a mile into the woods. I haven't talked about this in a while, because I wrote it and thought I'd never have to... The feeling in the forest was very strange. Movement was odd. Perception was odd the minute we entered the forest. I will tell you this—there was a problem. Something was wrong. We pulled up. There were some other vehicles. They took our weapons off us. We broke up into four man units and headed down a trail into the forest. [Col.] Charles Halt was out there that night with a smaller party of senior people. Lieutenant Englund joined them at one point. There was a lot of radio contact, but we had to maintain radio silence—the lower ranking guys. But, I could hear on other open channels [the others] saying, "You guys coming in have to avoid those hotspots. We don't want you walking all over them." I think they had anticipated these objects returning.

Sergeant Burroughs, by the way—from the first night—knew it was coming back, and arrived at the field, off-duty, in civilian clothes, obsessed to get back near the [phenomenon].

You can hear on the actual tape [Col.] Charles Halt made that night: one of the people on the perimeter securing an access to the forest, calling [Col.] Charles Halt on the radio, saying, "Airman Burroughs and two other individuals wish to rendezvous at your location." And [Col.] Charles Halt responds, "Tell them negative at this time; we'll tell them when they can come out here. We don't want anyone out here right now." This tape you will have, and [it] should be heard by all interested parties.

What I saw—I wish it was much simpler than what it was. As we moved through this forest in this small group, I was with Sergeant Bustinza; Robert Ball was there, shift supervisor, and a lot of other people. We came to a clearing called Capel Green at the end of the Corsican pines, and there was a phenomenon on the ground in this field: it was like a mist; it looked like a fog on the ground. There was a cinematic film camera—a movie camera—present, and there was a very large video camera there—they were very large at that time. These came from public affairs on Bentwaters. There was anticipation of the return of the [phenomenon]. There is a trail on this film, which has been established; this isn't just me talking.

Anything I'm telling you can pretty much be backed up in any court of law—especially with the body of the evidence, and I'm willing to do that.

I was observing this—it was like watching a movie. This mist was on the ground and it was being observed. There was disaster preparedness present. There was a house off to the left, a farmer's house. I had never been out in this forest before. There was a light on in this house, so those people were home. There was a dog barking, I remember clearly. I saw a light come in. We could see the beam of the Orford Lighthouse in this clearing, by the way—very clearly. This case has been written off as a misidentification of this lighthouse—an exaggeration, or whatever. In reality, it has been there for over 100 years and was no surprise to anyone. This object, a red basketball-shaped object, came in from the North Sea area over the trees. I thought it was a taillight on an aircraft, but it moved so quickly. The mist on the ground appeared to have structure, and it was 50 feet across. This basketball-sized amber light didn't seem solid—I couldn't tell you what it was—but it was 20 feet above the object, this mist. As soon as I got a fix on that and everyone else did, the cameras were upon it—these people were reacting. Then there was an explosion—it's very hard for me to describe it: this thing broke up into multiple shards of extremely bright light!

I, and others, suffered burns to the eyes—I have documents of this, because I stole them from Bentwaters when an officer advised me to. He said, "Your military record is going to vaporize as soon as you are gone." So my eyes were damaged—flash burns to the retinas and all. This is established medically—it was as if I'd stared at an arc welders torch for about 10 minutes, which is inadvisable. Everything was very bizarre at that point.

This explosion of light was very silent, and where the explosion of light happened, there appeared a structured, solid object, rather large—probably 30 feet at the base, to a pyramid-type shape. It was very rough—it would distort if you looked at it, with a rainbow-like effect. And yet, through peripheral vision, you could get a clear fix. I will tell you, there is real evidence for this thing—where it sat—to this day. This one won't let anyone down—this case—believe me!

This thing was there, on the ground—and it was filmed, and it was photographed.

There were some British bobbies present on Charles Halt's tape. You hear the Suffolk Constabulary pull up in the forest, with their British police vehicle, because their siren was on for a bit. These police are unattainable—they won't talk to anyone. They had a camera, and one was taken off of the British police. Already, an international incident was brewing here.

Our Wing Commander, Gordon Williams—who was at a party, I believe, that night—arrived on-site with other senior people. There were British military present. They could have been at the party. And, I will say, they seemed to know how to deal with an event like this.

I have no recollection of any sound emitting from this object. It was almost like a mirage, and yet, I know it was solid because it left traces and evidence and all, but it was so beyond anything I have ever seen, and it [was] right in front of us. I was only 30 feet away from it at one point—too close.

There was a life form in association with it—so I can just cut to the chase: I remember thinking, what are these children doing here? And the mind starts scrambling. There was a bright light, and there was movement. These things had an upper body, I clearly saw, and when I saw an arm move—my, you know—you just, you are in another place at that point. And, these senior people were very close to that [phenomenon].

What I saw was on the right side of this bizarre machine: this bright light moved out, and it was bluish-gold and about a foot off the ground. It split—it was only about four feet in height from the ground up, but it split away—and three individual, oblong cocoons of light with these three individual people in [them], were there.

SG: But they looked like humans?

LW: They were humanoid. Yeah.

SG: Do you know the height of them?

LW: Yeah, they would have been about, in height, four feet. I mean, you think of children. The light diminished, and that's when you could see what was in it. They were hairless, but there was clothing. There was an apparatus attached—I can't describe—a dark thing. I could not see the lower extremities because of the light—these were not walking on the ground—these things. And, I wish I never saw this, but there was a white membrane around what are large eyes—and the white membrane was moving, adapting. It was like your eyes adjusting to light.

The Commander was there—and this is where I swear there's got to be a protocol, in the event of something like this. He moved forward, and at that point we were called out of the area by rank. In fact, a lot of lower-ranking people were involved in this, and [were] sent back to the vehicles. On our way back, there was a lot of phenomena in the forest. These light beings, or whatever, were there; and there were other craft around, above the trees, almost as if they were guarding this thing and backing it up. I will tell you that Airman Burroughs was in the parking area where all the vehicles were. They would not let him out to the sites.

Charles Halt was pursuing other light phenomena and had beams fired down to the ground right in front of him—literally—pencil-sized beams from these crescent-like objects. Col. Halt was making a tape recording as it all happened—four hours of audio; you've got 18 minutes of dynamite!

My event was happening about a half a mile away. In fact, on that tape, you hear the beginning of my event. I will clarify this: I was on the record long before the whole tape became public, and I was the one that made the whole tape go public. I turned it over to CNN—and I've never taken a penny for anything I've done with this, ever. I never have.

As we left, Airman Burroughs told me another object appeared—right in the midst of a lot of security personnel at the parking area where all the trucks [were]. It appeared right in the midst of them. Airman Burroughs grabbed this object, and it moved over the ground—ten meters—with him holding onto it! It's an absolute fact: he physically touched it! He moved with this thing on it. It took off. It got away from John... Another beam of light came down. There was one guy, a part of the security personnel, in a pick-up truck. This thing was following him—one of these beings and the light—literally following him. He jumped into the pick-up truck, slammed the door, and it passed through the glass right in front of him, and he freaked and kicked the windshield right out of the truck! This thing went out the other window. I know this person—this was happening in front of many people too! It went out the other window, which was rolled-up because it's December. As he turned away from the vehicle, a blue beam of light came down from above the trees, and this thing got on it and ran right up into something that was dark and looked like a pinecone with white pins of light on it. It was dark against the night sky, and was watching over this event. Another Officer has said that he felt that these objects had been there looking for something. They were conducting grid searches the night before. There were three nights of activity.

They were there for a reason, and it was kind of like, okay, we are here for a purpose; you guys are bothering us, so we are going to show you what you need to know—but we are going to accomplish what we need to do.

I will tell you that [Col.] Charles Halt said to me later, "Were you aware that on that night, there were three massive triangular objects over the base, over the forest, and over the Woodbridge base the whole time?" And there was missing time with so many personnel over this period—it was amazing.

Afterwards, I noticed I had a shock of gray hair that did fall out—literally, a shock of gray hair on the right side. My eyes were watering profusely. I had a metallic taste in my mouth, and I was sweating profusely, and had cold chills.

I decided: I'm going to go call my mother, but we had secured phones on the base, obviously. Being rather young and naive, I didn't pay attention to the COM-SEC rules: communication security. We had a phone where I knew they'd always listened in on your calls, so I went to a public phone box (when they used to have them here on the base) and reversed the charges to my Mom. I said, Mom, you won't believe this. I said, last night a UFO landed on the base, and we saw everything, and you wouldn't believe it! And, I'm just thinking, she's not responding: Mom? Mom? She's gone. I looked at Greg [a friend with me] and I go, oh my God, I got cut-off! I called the operator, and I said, listen, can you reconnect me? She goes, "Are you calling from the base?" I go, yeah. She goes, "I'm sorry, you were cut off from the base," and then she hung up on me. I looked at Greg, and said, man, I think I'm in trouble. So, we ran back to my dorm.

[Before I called my mother] we were called to the office. Malcolm Zickler, a Major, was the Chief of Security Police, and his underling Major Carl Drury—all were involved in one aspect or another with these events. There was a Jaguar outside the office, and there was another expensive car—I don't remember what it was now. I thought, oh, here we go—the debriefing. Well, first of all, there were all the lower-ranking guys. There were no people above sergeant in my group. We were debriefed in a compartmentalized way, which I understand now, but then I didn't. And, I said, oh my God, they are going to tell us to shut-up; I know it! I'll name names. There were people in plain clothes going in and out of the security police law enforcement desk, and that was unusual. And, I'm like, oh boy!

They said, "Did any of you retrieve or remove anything from the forest while you were in there? Anything—a rock, twig, anything?" They kept asking us over and over. And, they said, "If you have, and are not going to tell us now, you are subject to the UCMJ," all these rules: Article XV, beyond that, JL-11, everything. We were young; we were all new—we were like, oh my God, we haven't even started here, and we are in trouble. We were gone over with a Geiger counter, and there was one return on one of the guys, and something was taken out of his pocket. This guy was removed very quickly, and I will swear on my life—I never saw him again! He was removed. This happened to a lot of people. It led to a suicide that the Air Force is responsible for—this is a real person with a real name. That base, by the way, after that, eventually had the highest rate of suicide in NATO—this is an established fact. One of the Captains involved was found hanging in his back garden from a tree—married, with children—everything. All these people started to shoot and kill themselves. I've lived it—and I'm amazed I got out of there alive.

So, we were brought into the office. There were rows of seats, a very small law enforcement desk. The law enforcement operators that day were kept out of the office. Everything was different on that base now. We were brought in and there were sheets on top of the law enforcement desk. There were about 10 of us, and there were one, two, three, four, five, six, seven stacks of documents—pre-typed. One was a pre-typed statement, all generic, of what we saw—which was not what we saw. It said we were off-duty and saw only unknown lights flipping amongst the trees. I clearly remember that. I said, what if we don't sign this, Major Zickler? And, he [said], "You have no choice." And he [said], "I have no choice but to ask you to do this." I kept seeing these other personnel in his office, because we were heading there next. He [told us to] sign—I think there were four—documents. One was the UCMJ secrecy thing—I forget, JANAP-1-something—and that clearly said, JANAR But, there were other things that we couldn't read. They said, "You'll be able to read them later; put your signature on; social security number." Then we were filed into his office. There was a movie screen set-up. There were two rows of chairs, metal chairs, folded out. Major Zickler left, and there were two gentlemen in civilian clothes—big people, very business-looking: American. They had a plastic ID with a photo and it said Armed Forces Security Services. I don't know if that's Air Force—we have been told that is a field arm of the National Security Agency. They were intimidating people.

[See the testimony of Merle Shane McDow and others regarding this pattern of intimidating debriefing protocols. SG]

They didn't smile or anything. We were in uniform—they asked us specifically to wear the uniforms we were wearing in the field. I think that was for the Geiger counter thing.

So we sat down, and a Naval Commander from the U.S. Navy ONI [Office of Naval Intelligence] in London, named Commander Richardson, was there. He had the reins. He was in uniform and was very affable with us.

Basically, it went like this: I am sitting next to a friend of mine from Alabama, who we called Alabama. Alabama was religious—at this point, he was so unwrapped...He had a handheld Bible and was reading it. He was gone. And being so young, at 19, the human condition isn't apparent to a lot of people—people's pain and trauma—but I was watching this guy I knew melting down—next to me. He is one guy that didn't make it—and he is a name, and he had a family, and everything. They didn't care about that.

But what Commander Richardson did say is that—we were all numb, but this is very clear—in a nutshell, "You airmen have been exposed to something that we have known about for longer than any one of you in this room are aware of." And it was all matter-of-fact. He said, "There is a phenomenon that has been coming here for many, many years. Some of it comes and goes; some of it is a permanent presence." They didn't say a phenomenon, they said various civilizations—advanced civilizations. And, there was a lot of talk about the reasons for secrecy—national security. He said, "You're best to go on with your lives." One of the guys in the room said, "What if we say something?" And he goes, "Know this now—your mail and phones will be monitored for as long as you are in the military." He said, "The best way to go about it is not discussing this with anyone, even each other, from this point on. Go about your lives; forget about all this. Move on with your lives, with the knowing that you have seen something that few people will ever get to see." Every other word was loyalty to national security, our oath, serving the country—it was brainwashing, because all-of-a-sudden it was repetitive lines, and there was a drone to his voice.

Then they showed a film. They said, "We are going to show you a film that might help you best put into perspective what you gentlemen have witnessed, and help you, maybe, put it to bed a little bit for yourselves." We were also told, though, if any of us [had] any unusual dreams, there's a number we were to call, daily, for the next month. If anyone was trying to pry information out of us we were to let [the authorities] know. They said that there would be a possibility of Soviet infiltration of the area—to try to get information from us. At that time, it was the Cold War, and they said [to] be aware of anything; we were to report that immediately.

They ran the film—I mean, it was just a film on a reel—it was not narrated; he did not narrate it. It began with gun camera footage [from] what I can only assume [was] maybe the 1940s. It showed some propeller-driven aircraft in broad daylight. It looked like the Florida Keys, and a fleet of silver discs [went] under the aircraft. That was one of the first frames. [The] clip [changed]. This thing went all the way up to the space program. The best clip on it showed the berets of the 5th Special Forces in Vietnam on a red clay hill [with] low scrub brush and a guy with a camera.. I don't even know the year, but it was in color. He turns the camera and this giant, green, delta-shaped thing rises out of the brush, very slowly and deliberately, below where they are, up to face level, camera level, and then continues—but, shrubbery and brush is falling off this massive thing, and a flock of big pelicans or [other] birds goes right under it—I'll never forget that in my life! I remember that better than the incident in the field.

The space program: I swear to God, this film showed structures on the moon—these box kind of things—that looked sand-colored.

[See the important corroborating testimony of these structures by Karl Wolf. SG]

It showed that lunar car moving around. I remember those clearly, because I remember being a child when all that was happening. Then—at a distance—the astronauts pointing at these box-looking things, and structured objects moving off the surface of the moon—filmed by Apollo missions.

SG: What did the structures on the moon look like? What shape were they?

LW: The structures looked like a continuation of the color of the moon, but there was structure to it. Like, huge box-kinds of things—very square and angular structures without windows. But they were artificial, clearly, and, they were being filmed; and then, there were lights and weird things on top of hills.

SG: Are they in good condition or old?

LW: Oh, no—they looked pristine.

SG: And were the UFOs moving?

LW: Very clearly, in different scenes. A lot of it was with the lunar car—that mission. Some of it was the astronauts on space walks, and something dark coming right up near them, with points of red light. I remember that. All of this was very quick. They never showed it again. The Apollo mission is the era where it ended.

So, after this meeting, and calling my mother and getting cut-off, I knew I was in trouble. I was called to the communications section of Bentwaters. I knew what was coming. A Staff Sergeant was there, and the Captain debriefed me. I was asked questions. There was a reel-to-reel tape machine present in the debriefing, and they kept asking me, "Have you given sensitive information out over land lines?" Over, and over. And, I said, no, no. And they said, "Do you want to go with that?" And I said, yes. I was lying through my teeth. And they played the tape—here's me, 'Hi Mom, you'll never believe...'. They said, "Warren, you have to understand, every phone on this base is monitored all the time anyway." I was told that I was not given an Article XV because that is traceable. I would be fined $300.00, and if I caused any more trouble, I'd lose my stripes. There is a paper trail on that fine, and no explanation. Later, I was threatened with the IRS and everything. Madness. They are crazy. The machine is crazy.

Later, we were eating, and Sergeant Penniston was sitting right there. Someone asked me, "What the hell happened to us last night?" And, Sergeant Penniston, who was senior, he goes, "Shut the fuck up, Warren, shut the fuck up." Just like that. I was like this: oh my God, and I threw my tray down and just walked out. It was all downhill from there, my friend.

Later that night, Sergeant Bustinza, myself—and I swear it happened to others—received a phone call to meet a vehicle in the parking lot. Sergeant Bustinza and I were to meet this vehicle at 5:00 p.m. that afternoon. It was dark at that point in England. We both walked up. I said, hi, Busty, how you doing? He goes, "All right." And, we both walked toward this vehicle. The door was open. There was a guy sitting there. In reality, what happened is, two people came up behind each of us—and I do remember someone heading towards him—and I heard the sound of what sounded like an aerosol, and I went black. My conscious memory for years was that the interior lights in the car were too bright, and I just blacked out. In reality, we were hit with an aerosol of some sort. My nose ran profusely, and my chest got tight. I, obviously, was not getting into the car properly, so I was beaten—literally hit in the ribs and pushed. I was resisting, and I know Sergeant Bustinza was doing the same thing.

I had identified myself as a problem. It turns out, years later, that he had made some phone calls too. We were taken somewhere on the Bentwaters flight line. I knew this by the sound of where we went. When I was removed from that car, I cut my face, because I fell out of it—obviously, being immobile—and hit a patch of concrete and ice, and was carried, literally—bodily, face down. I remember my nose running so profusely, and I couldn't wipe it or anything. I didn't know if it was bleeding or what. I know we descended. I will tell you there is an underground facility on that base that is—to this day—there.

I have more memories of it being a very clinical situation. We do know, at this time, a lot of outside people were on the base. There were teams in the forest. Aircraft came into Woodbridge, and even the commanders of the base had no access to get near it, or ask why they were there. Teams in white coveralls were going throughout the forest. There were Intelligence people on the base that were never there before. These are all things that can be established as fact, from many other people.

[See the testimony of Sergeant Clifford Stone who was involved with this external team investigating this event. SG]

Anyway, I have 20 minutes of recall, and I'm gone for a day—and, it's established with other people. People said I was on emergency leave, or on leave, or off the base—but I was just under the base—and there were other personnel down there.

There was a lot of high tech machinery, huge vaulted, glass-like ceilings, panels of glass walls—like a subway wall—old, but huge glass panels. We were brought to one area, and I have a conscious memory, whether it is real or not, of looking into a very dark void, and having someone to this side of me explaining that there were tunnels from the base to the North Sea.

My next conscious memory is just broad daylight—walking out into the sunshine from the base photographic lab. A lot of younger guys and I went through this. I do remember being on a table and seeing Air Force senior people, and some other unidentified people, talking down to me. I know I was looking up at them with bright lights. I had marks, by the way, from an IV, or something, when I came out of there. I had the bruise and I had a bandage. I will admit that. That's for real. I had it. I'm terrified to know or think of what might have happened, so I've only pursued these memories a little bit.

I wrote my Mother a letter, and I wrote the letter a week and a half before Charles Halt authored the actual Halt memo, which was gained by the Freedom of Information Act. It is a document that reads like science fiction on Air Force letterhead. It's a minimizing of the event—I believe, intentional—but it reads like science fiction. It was released in 1983 through Citizens Against UFO Secrecy, based on information I supplied them, after numerous denials that it existed from the Air Force itself.

Pod casts were made of the indentations where the object landed on the first night. Charles Halt still has possession of one of them, and does show people this, and would show it to any congressional body, I think. Most of them ended up missing. Soil analysis was done on the landing site, but it was all swept away. Years later, from 1988 to 1990, we did core samples, soil analysis, which was analyzed by Springborn Environmental Labs in Massachusetts by accredited scientists. We have the published findings in the book Left at East Gate. An absolute [phenomenon] took place only in that spot—to a level of three feet down. Plants do not grow in this one spot—no matter what crop—we've talked to the farmers—for 20 years. However, the soil is darker. It does not absorb water. It is almost crystalline, mixed with a very dry dirt, like freeze-dried coffee.

[See the testimony with Roberto Pinotti and the results from landing sites in Italy and France, which show similar changes. SG]

It was, in a theoretical way, heating the soil to a degree in an industrial microwave oven—to a super high heat—and then dropping it, instantly, into a sub-zero freeze—in almost a conical direction—down.

RAF Watten, a Royal Air Force Base, had radar returns of these objects on all nights in question. RAF Watten, on the third night and the first night, picked up an object descending into the forest. The next day, the U.S. Air Force went to RAF Watten, talked to the air traffic controllers, [and] told them that an alien spacecraft landed in Rendlesham Forest. There was contact with the base commander, and they were borrowing the radar tapes, but the tapes were never returned. These are all real people that are apparently talking now. I also know that on one of the nights in question, a small object appeared near the perimeter of RAF Watten, not far from our base. Of course, they had higher security because of the IRA threat at that time. A Royal Air Force police dog handler (K-9 team) was doing a perimeter patrol, and the dogs went flat down on the ground. These people are talking now. Then they saw these two beings near the fence line—prodding it—next to a triangular object. They were prodding the fence with these light-like objects. When they saw the RAF dog handlers, they fled toward this machine that took off and headed off toward our base.

When people ask about the film and photographs, there is confirmation—this isn't a story I came up with. Captain Mike Verrano verifies on the Cable News Network program, UFO: the Bentwaters Incident, from 1985, that indeed he drove the wing commander Gordon Williams, the next morning, to an awaiting jet. The pilot opened the canopy, and he said, "What do you have in that satchel?" And he said, "I have actual film. We have actual film and photographs of the UFO." So, Gordon Williams personally handed this material, in a satchel, to the pilot, Mike Verrano [said]. I, by the way, asked where the film was going, and I was told Germany. That was Air Force command at that time. From there, we know that there was a paper trail, and that it was eventually sent back to Washington.

I was an honorably discharged security policeman. I have an honorable discharge. I've heard a lot of nasty things said about me, but I have my records. The only reason I have my records is because I was advised to steal some of them—by an Air Force Colonel—because he said they would vaporize you. He said, "They are going to fireproof you."

[See the testimony of Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin regarding his information about being "erased." SG]

I was looked at almost like a Frank Serpico kind of guy. I was not a team player, because I was talking to everyone.

Unfortunately, my friend Alabama went AWOL trying to get back home. At O'Hare Airport, he was captured by the FBI and returned to duty immediately. All he wanted to do was go home, but he was put back on flight duty. I was riding with the senior master sergeant on vehicle patrol, just totally depressed with everything, when Alabama called in—this is a real person—and said he was going to kill himself if he couldn't go home. And, this guy turned the pick-up truck quick, and was heading toward the post. He said, "You stay on the Goddamn radio..." I saw all the units across the flight line responding and everything. I never hear Mr. Halt comment on this at all, and that's why he won't stand with me in a place—because I bring up things that maybe they feel bad about. As he says, the Air Force [was] on the sidelines for it all. Anyway, Alabama had a short M16, and he put it in his mouth and took the top of his head off. This was the first time I ever saw death—violent death—at 19. We were as different as night and day, me and this kid. You know—he was the south; I was the north. He was very religious. I respect that, but we had nothing in common. He was a nice guy. And, they did not do anything to help us...

I have had unbelievable phone problems for years—the typical things—[and] my mail is still intercepted. In this country [the UK], it was, for years, opened and resealed in plastic, with a letter of apology. Many of our packages don't get where they are going.

[I can verify this, as we have had great difficulty getting follow-up materials from Mr. Warren out of the UK. SG]

Later, my passport was coming up for renewal, and I sent it in. It would have expired by the time I was going on a trip. But soon after sending it in for a new one, I got a letter back saying, "Mr. Warren, your passport was altered or mutilated and you need to reapply for another one." I said, oh my God, what the hell was that? So, I just, I said, oh fine, [and] filled it out. Next response: "Mr. Warren, you must reestablish U.S. citizenship." I'm like, what? I'm calling all these people. Finally, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, at the National Passport Center, this woman said, "I can't tell you what's happening here." After a while, I said, listen, I'm writing a book called Left at East Gate, and she goes, "The Bentwaters thing..." She said, "Call me at this number"—it was her home number in Lebanon, New Hampshire. I called her, and she said to me, "I have the official printout: 'This individual's passport is being revoked under some classification, due to his speaking of sensitive defense issues at a public forum on foreign soil,' and then some coding, DOD coding, under it." I have it all, and it is just bizarre.

Our agent at that time, Perry Knowlton in New York City, was friends with Ramsey Clark, the former U.S. Attorney General. He set up a meeting with us, and I met with Mr. Clark in person. He said to me, "I'm going to make some phone calls for you," but he says, "I'm going to tell you this—after knowing everything—they say it was because you talked about nuclear weapons, that's all." Mr. Clark said, "People in England suspected there were nukes there all the time. I will tell you this: your passport was suspended because of the other things you've talked about," and he wouldn't elaborate any more. He made two phone calls, and the Department of State, with apologies, said it was an error.

So, we've tried to do our best. I'd be willing to speak and swear to this in front of any congressional body. I have great respect for my country, and I think it is the people's right to know.

[We have identified the names of numerous witnesses who should testify before Congress regarding these landing events. This case alone establishes the reality of the UFO and extraterrestrial issue. There are also corroborating documents, tapes, and other evidence, such as the landing site effects and radiation measurements. SG]

SUBJECT:

Unexplained Lights

RAF/CC

1. Early in the morning of 27 Dec 80 (approximately 0300L), two USAF security police patrolmen saw unusual lights outside the back gate at RAF Woodbridge. Thinking an aircraft might have crashed or been forced down, they called for permission to go outside the gate to investigate. The on-duty flight chief responded and allowed three patrolmen to proceed on foot. The individuals reported seeing a strange glowing object in the forest. The object was described as being metallic in appearance and triangular in shape, approximately two to three meters across the base and approximately two meters high. It illuminated the entire forest with a white light. The object itself had a pulsing red light on top and a bank(s) of blue lights underneath. The object was hovering or on legs. As the patrolmen approached the object, it maneuvered through the trees and disappeared. At this time the animals on a nearby farm went into a frenzy. The object was briefly sighted approximately an hour later near the back gate.

2. The next day, three depressions 1 1/2" deep and 7" in diameter were found where the object had been sighted on the ground. The following night (29 Dec 80) the area was checked for radiation. Beta/gamma readings of 0.1 milliroentgens were recorded with peak readings in the three depressions and near the center of the triangle formed by the depressions. A nearby tree had moderate (.05-.07) readings on the side of the tree toward the depressions.

3. Later in the night a red sun-like light was seen through the trees. It moved about and pulsed. At one point it appeared to throw off glowing particles and then broke into five separate white objects and then disappeared. Immediately thereafter, three star-like objects were noticed in the sky, two objects to the north and one to the south, all of which were about 10° off the horizon. The objects moved rapidly in sharp angular movements and displayed red, green and blue lights. The objects to the north appeared to be elliptical through an 8-12 power lens. They then turned to full circles. The objects to the north remained in the sky for an hour or more. The object to the south was visible for two or three hours and beamed down a stream of light from time to time. Numerous individuals, including the undersigned, witnessed the activities in paragraphs 2 and 3.

Testimony of Captain Lori Rehfeldt

October 2000

Lori Rehfeldt was stationed at the 81st Security Police Squadron at RAF Bentwaters in England during the UFO events that occurred in December 1980. She and a colleague were on duty late that night, when they saw in the distance an object they thought was a plane landing on the runway—coming in from the direction of the North Sea. They also saw it silently explode, split into three parts, and speed across the runway; then it went straight up and disappeared.

I enlisted in the Air Force in 1977, September and went into basic training in January of 1978. My first base was RAP Bentwaters in England, and I went there in May 1978.

I was stationed at the 81st Security Police Squadron, and my job was pretty much entry controller, and working in law enforcement. I was put on B-flight: Bravo flight.

So, I was on patrol at the time, and I had a colleague with me, Airman Duffield. We were both Airman, First Class, which was an E-3 at the time. It was about 2:00 or 3:00 in the morning and it was a clear night.

All of a sudden, we [saw] this light approaching that was coming from the area of the North Sea, so it was coming from west to east. At first we thought it was just a regular aircraft coming in, and we looked over at the runway, waiting for the lights to go on, figuring, you know, an aircraft [was] coming in. Then as it got closer and closer, and it [was] maybe 200 feet away, it was a big light and it just stopped.

This guy and I, we notice that the runway lights aren't on, and we see this light. Then, all of a sudden, it just stops in mid-air. Then, all of a sudden, it just moves up, down, left, right. And, then it breaks into three pieces, and speeds across the runway.

Now we are stunned. We are like—what was that? So, we immediately got on the radio. We were kind of excited about it, and we [called] and [said], Police Control, this is Police 4, be advised that... I think the guy who was the desk Sergeant at the time was Sergeant Cohen, and he was pretty much saying, you know, "Say again?"

So we repeated it and said, we saw this aircraft... The rate of speed that it was moving when it went across was tremendous. It was moving in like a regular aircraft, then when it stopped, it did this movement and split into three. When it sped across the runway going west, it was just going at a phenomenal speed. The only other thing that really caught our attention was that it didn't make any noise. There was no sound to it at all. We just didn't know what it was.

As for the size, from the distance we were, I'd say it was probably about the size of a car or small truck.

It flew right across the runway. The runway itself was maybe a football field length away, because the runway wasn't that far from us. Then, when it took off, it went straight up, and then it disappeared.

When it stopped, that's when it made these fast movements—up, down, left, right—the movement was very geometric. I mean—it was not a normal movement. That probably threw us more than anything, because it was just so unusual. It was a lot faster than a jet plane.

Currently I'm in the Army Reserves, stationed out of Fort Belvoir, so I'm still active Reserves; I'm a Captain now. We were at a promotion ceremony, and they introduced some of the guests who were there. One of them happened to be a retired three-star General, General Edmonston. I figured as a three star General, if anybody knew anything about what happened at Bentwaters, maybe he would. So, I went up to him, and I had all my ribbons on, and he recognized my ribbons. He said, "Oh, so you used to be in the Air Force," and we were talking. I said, yes sir. I said, in fact, I was stationed at some really interesting places, and some of them are now closed. I said, one of them was RAF Bentwaters. He said, "Oh, Bentwaters, yeah, that was a great base." And, I said, yeah, in fact I was there during the time when they had that huge UFO sighting.

And, we went from a very sociable conversation to—well, he just clamed up. I [asked], did you know anything? Did you hear anything about it? And, he said, "Ah, yeah, yeah—if I did, I'd have to shoot you." Like, ha, ha, ha. And at that point he said, "I have to get back to my guests." He went from being completely sociable to cold, and I knew he knew something—his body language said it. I mean—he went from completely relaxed to rigid.

Then, this other guy came up to me, who I think knew him. They were all in the same guest party. He said, "I overheard your conversation." He happened to be an electrical engineer for the Air Force. He said, "You do know they found something out there?" He said, "Well, we've been working with the plastic, with the material that we got from back then." And he said, "Back then it was pretty raw, but now we've been able to use it and to refine it." They've been able to use it, and it can take so many degrees of heat and temperature. He mentioned it was a gray material—but he was validating that there was something out there—and he said this material was not indigenous to here.

[See the testimony of Clifford Stone regarding his involvement with the Bentwaters landing, which happened after Captain Rehfeldt's experience. He confirms materials were obtained at this later event in December of 1980, about which Larry Warren also testifies. SG]

Testimony of Sergeant Clifford Stone, US Army

Sergeant Stone tells an amazing story about the history of UFO s and extraterrestrials dating back to the early 40's and probably before. General Douglas MacArthur organized a group called the Interplanetary Phenomena Research Unit back in 1943 to study this issue and it continues to this day. Their purpose is to recover objects of unknown origin particularly those that are of non-Earthly origin. They obtain field intelligence information and pass it on to those who are the "keepers of this information." Stone says that even Project Bluebook had an elite investigation unit, which was outside of Bluebook. This unit was thought to be working in conjunction with Bluebook but in fact was not. Stone has seen living and dead extraterrestrials himself in his official duties on an army team that retrieved crashed ET crafts. He thinks that the extraterrestrials will not permit us to explore the depths of outer space until we've learned to grow spiritually and that they will make themselves known soon if we don't first acknowledge their presence.

On February 26th, 1942, commonly called the Battle of Los Angeles, we find that there are some 15 to 20 unidentified craft flying over Los Angeles. We immediately responded by trying to shoot these objects down. The 37th Coastal Artillery Group expended 1,430 rounds. We immediately set out to try to find out if there was some hidden base belonging to the Axis from where these planes could come, some commercial airport that they could have had these aircraft housed. None of this bore out. Every search effort we made turned out to be fruitless.

At the same time in the Pacific they were experiencing the same phenomena, the so-called Foo Fighters. General MacArthur directed his intelligence people to find out what was going on. I have reason to believe that in 1943 MacArthur found out that in fact we had things not of this Earth and visitors from some other planet visiting our planet that was actually observing that world event we call the Second World War. One of the problems that he had was that, should this be the case, and should they prove to be hostile, we knew very little about them and we had very little means to defend ourselves.

MacArthur organized what was called the Interplanetary Phenomena Research Unit.

[See the testimony of Buck Sergeant Leonard Pretko regarding MacArthur's involvement in the ET issue and his knowledge of the retrieved spacecraft and ET's from the New Mexico Crash. SG]

It would later be taken over by General Marshall. And it continued all the way through to present day. Names have been changed and records still haven't surfaced. The Army tries to state that it was not an official organization effort to try to investigate UFO's. But it was organized by a General, it bore a fruit, it came to conclusions that were not popular, i.e., interplanetary spacecraft. And they continued to do exactly what they do today and that is to be part of a multi-intelligence operation in the recovery of objects of unknown origin particularly those that are of non-Earthly origin. Their purpose is to assess that information, get raw field intelligence data, and process that data into some type of useful intelligence product to disseminate to the field- to those people who have a need to know and those people that are, shall we say, the keepers of that information.

One of MacArthur's Air Force generals, an Army Air Corps General at the time, came back to MacArthur and told MacArthur "what we have is something not of this Earth". I would suggest that by this time even the Germans had uncovered evidence that we were being visited and had some type of physical evidence. MacArthur definitely had physical evidence. From the documentation I saw [while working this issue in the Army], I was not able to ascertain exactly what that physical evidence consisted of but it was there.

The one thing I find quite unique is that the Germans may have tried to back-engineer one of these objects. We definitely tried to back-engineer it. But we find that your technology has to be on par with the acquired technology in order to back-engineer it...

In the 1950s, the United States Air Force had an elite unit to investigate UFO's outside of Bluebook. Even though Bluebook felt that this unit was working with them, they were not. This unit was initially organized as a 4602nd Air Intelligence Service Squadron. Among its peacetime missions was operation Blue Fly. Operation Blue Fly was to recover objects of unknown origin that fell to Earth. It is very important that you remember these were specifically objects that fell to Earth- because we didn't have any spacecraft up there at this time. As a result of this, they had monitors right there at Wright Patterson that when UFO reports came in they were looked at very closely to see if there was any possible necessity of sending out teams to recover any of this fallen debris.

The Air Force states they never used them. I'm telling you I know they did. But the intent of the Operation Blue Fly peacetime project was to go out and recover objects of unknown origin that impacted with the Earth. Later it would be expanded in 1957 to cover all objects of unknown origin meaning spacecraft too. And it would become part of what they would call in the October of 1957 timeframe, Project Moon Dust.

Project Moon Dust is the overall field exploitation to recover only two items: First, objects of non-U.S. origin that survives re-entry into the Earth's atmosphere and impacts with the Earth and objects. Naturally, we would be interested in those items from a technical, scientific intelligence basis to determine, or try to ascertain the technical capabilities of any potential enemy since our known enemy of the U.S., the USSR at that time that was launching space vehicles into space.

The other area of interest was objects of unknown origin. Now we find that there were quite a few objects of unknown origin that did not correlate with any known space launches, impact times, or any known space debris falling back to Earth.

In short, under [Project] Moon Dust and under Blue Fly, we have recovered alien debris not of this Earth.

The degree of classification that we have now has changed over the years. Back during the time of the Second World War all the way up to, say 1969, you may have had as many as 11 classifications. Now there are three: confidential, secret and top-secret. However, if you have information that is highly sensitive that requires protection above and beyond the norm of what is provided for those classifications, that's when you have the Special Access Programs. You do not get that type of information out into public domain unless it is officially sanctioned.

During the discussion of UFO's, the question ultimately is going to come up can any government keep secrets let alone the U.S. Government? And the answer to that is unequivocally yes. But one of the greatest weapons the intelligence community has at their disposal is a predisposition by the American people, the American politicians, and the debunkers- people who wish to try to debunk UFO information. They immediately come out and say oh we can't keep secrets, we cant keep secrets. Well, the truth is, yes we can.

The National Recognizance Office remained secret for many, many years. The mere existence of the NSA remained secret. The development of the atomic weapon remained secret until once you exploded one you eventually had to tell some people what was going on.

And we are conditioned by our own paradigms not to accept the possibility or probability of a highly advanced intelligent civilization coming here to visit us. You have evidence in the form of highly credible reports of objects being seen, of the entities inside these objects being seen. Yet, we look for a prosaic explanation and we throw out the bits and pieces of the evidence that doesn't meet our paradigm. So it is a self-keeping secret. You can conceal it in plain sight. It is political suicide to go and start hitting up intelligence agencies to get this information released. So most of your members of Congress, and I know I've worked with a lot of them along that line, will balk and try not to do it. I can name you three members of Congress that were point blank asked to have a congressional inquiry on what happened here at Roswell.

One of the most ridiculous statements that I got was that a person would have to be a chairperson to do that. So I asked a senator from Mississippi if he'd do it and without any hesitation, he said no. I said, would you give me that in writing? I got that in writing but I'm hesitant to release it. I will show it to you but I'm hesitant to release it simply because I made a promise not to.

We have got to get the documentation as it exists in the Government files. We have got to get it released before it ultimately is destroyed. A good example is the Blue Fly and Moon Dust files. I had classified documents the Air Force acknowledged. When I got members of Congress to help me open up more files they were immediately destroyed and I can prove this.

Somewhere along the line they may see that material and realize there is some very highly sensitive information that would have a damning effect upon the national security of United States should it become compromised. It needs to be further protected to insure that there is only a limited access to that information to a small number of people. So small you can put them on a list of paper, on a piece of paper, and list them by name. Thus you have the Special Access Programs. The controls that were supposed to be put on the Special Access Programs are not there. When Congress did their review of the way we protect documents and the way we go ahead and implement our secrecy programs they found that you had Special Access Programs within Special Access Programs - that it was essentially impossible to keep control of them all by Congress. And I'm telling you right now; it is essentially impossible to keep control of them all.

When it comes to UFO's the same criteria applies. Therefore, only a small nucleus within the intelligence community numbering less than a hundred ~ no, I'd suggest less than 50 — control all that information. It is not subject to congressional review or oversight at all. So Congress needs to go ahead and ask the hard questions and convene a hearing.

There would be quite a few missions to describe but simply put, yes, I was involved in those types of operations to retrieve crashed ET objects. A lot of people think that you are just in your unit waiting in the rafters, just waiting for the next UFO crash, a landing where there is going to be debris. It doesn't work that way. You have a real life. You have a real job in the military. However, if you are in an area where an event takes place and you are one of these people that they can go ahead and call upon in your field of expertise, then you are called in.

Now, in order to prepare me for this, very early on in my career they sent me to NBC School at Fort McCullen [sp], Alabama. It's a three-week school. It's for NBC personnel, NBC meaning Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical. And it would always be in the context of an NBC unit that I would be involved in UFO retrievals. You would go ahead and deploy as though it was a nuclear accident. There are procedures already established on nuclear or biological or chemical accidents. So you would proceed in that way. If you could get in there and do recoveries, if you could go in and extract the debris that are there quietly behind the scenes and no one knows, you'd do it. If you needed an officially sanctioned deception program to come into play, such as a bogus news release, you could do this also.

For example, if you have an airplane accident we have standard procedures on how we handle that. Those same procedures are utilized when you do a recovery or extraction of a crashed ET spacecraft or debris thereof. And I have to stress debris simply because these are highly advanced technical machines. There were not that many crashes. They are flawed because they are made by an intelligence that is as mortal as you or me. Being mortal, we are subject to error.

Now, we are talking about a highly intelligent civilization, not a highly incompetent civilization. We take steps and they take steps. But at the same time, when you go out, you make a recovery. And when you make that recovery, you handle it the same way you would as if you were out there on an airplane accident or you have a hazardous material type situation, because it works. It is all set up. The only problem you have is that you have people out there that are very quickly going to realize that this is not something of this planet. To be sure, with the Blue Fly recoveries [ET craft], you do what is called an on-site analysis.

In short, you have experts out there who know what missiles are, who know what aircraft are. They are looking at this material. They are telling you what it isn't. This leaves you to only one possible conclusion, something that did not originate on the face of this planet. That was the intent of the Blue Fly teams. It was very critical to do an immediate on-site analysis. Now, the way you package the material if it is just debris is handled the same way you would if it was hazardous material. You took precautions. If you had a whole craft, you took very serious precautions because while I still state the ET's are not hostile, you still could cause some serious accidents, which would result in death. I'm not going to get into how it was with the family when I had to leave on these operations because you get a little emotional because you think about what could happen...

Of course, you try to conceal the material, particularly if you have a large craft and it is disc shaped or say, wedge shape - which is a very good shape that we get from time to time. And you take precautions particularly if you have to go ahead and put it on a truck to bring it in. If you have to put it on a truck to take it to a safe haven area, we track that truck. The truck has an 800 number so if there is a breakdown they can secure the vehicle and stay with it. But they have a number they can call and immediately get assistance out there to move that vehicle to a safe haven area. And there are procedures outlined in this. As a matter of fact, you have a shipping document. And that shipping document has the number right on it to call. So you use a code word — I'll give you one that we used all the time: Tabasco.

In the case of an ET craft, you are going to get a specialized team out there that knows what to do should there be a biological component. One of the big concerns we had was biological due to contamination as a result of this being truly of alien origin.

I am prepared to state that I have been at locations where craft of unknown origin that did not originate on the face of this planet were there. I am prepared to state that while I was there, we saw living and dead bodies of entities that were not born on this planet. I am prepared to state that we had what they referred to as "interfacing" with those entities. I am prepared to state that they have a school to try to indoctrinate people. I never went to that school. I always refused. I am prepared to state that when I got out of the service in 1990, that they held me for two months so that I might better reconsider to stay in and not get out. I am prepared to state that I had orders that stated that I was supposed to get out on December 1st of 1989, and that they revoked those orders. Once again, in violation of law they held me for two months pending approval of my retirement, which had already been approved. The purpose of that was to try to convince me to stay in.

We have contact with aliens not originating from some foreign country but from some other solar system. And I have been a party to that. I've worked it. I've been there. And I know some of the things we do is really, really, really, really terrible. They are not hostile toward us. We are the enemy in this instance ~ but we are the enemy, I like to think, for the good reasons. We are concerned about what some other country might do. I have concluded that I am fighting against the clock. That I have but a short time to try to convince people that we are moving down an avenue where we are going to militarize space. Once we militarize space we will have a whole new avenue of technology open up to us.

NASA says it is going to take another 1,400 years before we achieve what we call interstellar travel. I'm telling you by the end of this century we will be doing that. If we do nothing to grow spiritually - and this is a hard thing for me to state ~ but if we do nothing to grow spiritually we will not achieve interstellar travel. They will stop us. What's worse they will make themselves known to an unsuspecting people on this planet.

We want to acquire this technology. We want to make this technology part of our own technology. Within the next 25 years we are going to militarize space. As a result of militarizing space, we are going to acquire new technologies and we are going to evolve new technology that is going to lead us into interstellar travel. As a direct result, we will become a threat to them unless we spiritually grow also.

But I feel that if we do not grow spiritually we are forcing the situation where the entities will eventually make themselves known. And they will make themselves known. And no power on Earth can stop that from happening. The ET's will do this in order to stop us from going out into space as a threat. If this should happen, it will happen to an unsuspecting world population and that can create some very serious problems.

[See the testimony of Dr. Carol Rosin regarding Werner Von Braun's concern over our weaponizing space. SG]

But this doesn't deal just with the United States. It is a truth that the entire world has to be informed about. And that truth is that man is not alone, that we have people from other planets, from other solar systems coming here.

I believe that the intelligence community had good intentions when they classified information dealing with UFO's. I believe that they asked some very serious and hard questions: What impact would it have if the peoples of the world knew that they were no longer alone in the universe, that they had intelligence that was visiting this planet? And I think that the intentions were good there. As intelligence agencies among nations, naturally you want to go ahead and acquire the technology for military application. So you want to try to keep some of that knowledge as confidential as possible by classifying it as high as you possibly can-keeping the information open to only a small handful of people thus, Special Access Programs. However, I believe that while it was full of good intentions in keeping this information classified, it is [now] hurting people.

I do not believe that any government has the right to try to make individuals who merely see UFO's look crazy. I do not believe that any government has a right knowing that the psychology of specific individuals may ultimately lead to a tremendous amount of mental depression, ultimately, leading in many, many cases to suicide or self destruction. When we see these types of things coming about, we have an obligation to reconsider our thoughts and positions. I would suggest [that] we need to break down the walls of secrecy, that we must be responsible in getting the truth out. We must be responsible in how we get that truth out. And we must be truthful.

And it is not a scary story. You will learn that the ET's have a perception of God. You find they have families. You find they have cultures. You find that they have likes and dislikes. You look for those things that are similar among us, not the differences. And that is the way you start on the path to truth. The problem that we have right now is that we look at them as something to talk about; something to marvel at and be amazed at.

Well, back to my own story, we had just finished the training that I took to be an NBC NCO. And a friend of mine brought me back to Fort Lee, Virginia. He was going to Fort Meade, Maryland and says, come on, I'll give you a ride to your base. And we discussed UFO's on the way to Fort Lee.

Several weeks after I got back to Fort Lee, I got a call from this person and I was going to visit him at Ft. Meade. When I got to Fort Meade where he was supposed to be, they said, well, he is going to be tied up we'll talk to you later about his situation as soon as he gets free. This person says, by the way, have you ever been to the Pentagon? Well, at that time I had never been at the Pentagon. So they said, well, it is really a unique place. Why don't we go ahead and give you the twenty-five cent tour. So we went on over. We went in. I had a little badge that was given to me, no picture on it. But the guy that was with me, his had a picture and he'd just tell the guards he is authorized to come with me. And he'd always be the one to get me in. Finally we got to a place that has an elevator. We went down on it- I don't know how far down we went. I can't tell you if there is one flight under the Pentagon, two, or fifty. But we went down. When we get out there, there are two monorails there. I mean, there are monorails under the Pentagon. They look like big tubes, rather thick in the center, one on each side. So you had these little monorails with cars that look like a bullet, where you could seat two people in front and two people in back. We got on the one monorail and started to go, it seemed like maybe 20 minutes, but I'm guessing at that because I don't know for sure.

When we got out, he says, well, let me show you some interesting sites down this corridor here. So we are going down the corridor and it looked like there was a door at the far end of that corridor. As we got closer and closer to that door, my guide turned to me and stated, you know, things aren't always as they seem to be. He says a lot of people don't know about these underground locations underneath the Pentagon. Only a few know that the Pentagon has underground monorails that connect up to other locations. He says, it is just like the walls here ~ they don't all seem like walls. And I said, what do you mean they are not walls? I said, what are you talking about? I thought, you know, he was trying to make a joke. At that time he says, no, it is like the wall behind you. I look and it looks like a wall to me. There are no seams or anything I can see. Then he pushes me. I try to grab myself but there is actually a door that opened.

Well, when you go through the door there is like a field table there. And behind the field table you had this little entity. The entity was a little bigger than the 3, 3 1/2 foot tall entities that are a lot of times reported. But there were two men on either side of the table slightly behind the creature. When I turned around, I looked right into the eyes of this little creature. And you know, it's like you are seeing it but everything is being pulled from your mind-he was reading my whole life. It is hard to describe what I really felt there- your life up to that point goes by in seconds. And I mean you were feeling everything.

I remember going down and grabbing a hold of my head like this and falling to the floor. The next thing I remember I wake up and I am back in my friend's office [back at Fort Meade]. And when I'm back in Jack's office they told me nothing happened that I had been there the whole day. But I knew better.

I will go this far to state that there is an interaction between entities and certain Government agencies within the U.S. Government. I will not go so far to state that they are giving us technologies to kill ourselves. They are not along that line. Their purpose in being here is for scientific purposes and for humanitarian purposes.

We have been very foolish in how we have done certain things and we have harmed ourselves. We now realize that we have harmed ourselves and we are trying to take corrective action. And that right there is the one thing that the ET s are checking on. There is the biosphere that's been damaged. They are not coming here to repair that. They are coming here to see how we handle it. But a government can't be the one that shoulders all of the responsibility and shoulders all the knowledge and all the understanding. The whole situation is that we have to work in unison as a people, a united people. We must go ahead and start preparing ourselves to where we ultimately will take that giant step to where we are going to be visiting other planets out there in other solar systems. And we have to, once again, I'll use the word, grow spiritually as a group of people, the people representing mankind on planet Earth. Yes there is some type- and I don't know to what extent- but there is some type of dialogue that is taking place between our visitors of all species, because there is more than one, and the various governments- not just the U.S. Government, but of the worlds. Primarily, these are the more developed nations of the world because at present space faring nations represent the greatest threat to them.

Another early experience I had was an accidental viewing of something I was not supposed to see. We were in a facility and a friend and I went to a balcony area looking down over the briefing room. They had a Plexiglas window that separated the balcony and what was going on downstairs- you couldn't hear what was being said. But we started to notice that they were running a film. And the film showed various types of what we would call UFO's, today. It showed various types of alien creatures some that looked very much like us some that looked like us with marked differences. We were not aware of the fact that there were people now up there with us. And they said, what are you guys doing up here? And we told them, well you know we are just sitting up here eating our snacks because we didn't want to go to the snack bar. They said, you need to come with us and you need to come with us now. So I mean they pushed us grabbing us by the nape, the shirt, and pushed us down the stairs.

Once they got down the stairs, they pushed us on out the doors and into a van. The van was right there waiting, a panel van, where they pushed us in and shut the door. And then they drove us off. We don't know where they took us to but the location where we finally got out was a one-frame military style building. They took us in there, put us into this room. The room had the military cots there. It had one table with a light. And we were sitting back trying to figure out why are they doing this? Why is this going on?

On the fifth night, I got out and they drove me back to my billets. I reported in and went to bed because I was dead tired and all I wanted to do was get some sleep. The next morning, which was a Saturday morning, I am awakened by the CQ, that is, Charge of Quarters. And he says, I want to see you. Well, I was taken to see two men; one guy was acting like a good guy. The other guy went ahead and said, I told you we shouldn't trust him. Let's just take the so and so out. Let's just end this. Let's shoot him. And the nicer guy says, no, no, we'll discuss this. And he sent the guy that was supposed to be the bad guy out- we use that technique sometimes in security- good cop, bad cop. The one that was supposed to be the bad guy, he went to get some food.

The good guy says, listen, he says, you like working with this UFO stuff. And I'm saying, no, I don't. And he says, well, you know, you have experience with it. You've had some involvement. He says, and those were not phony pictures up there. He says, would you like to work with it? Would you like to work with us? I said, no I wouldn't like that at all. Eventually he goes ahead and says, look, you like working with, you'll get to work with it, you'll get to learn more about it, he says. He says the whole situation is that by the end of this year we are going to release everything we know. But here again the world is not a safe place. We have to know more from a technological viewpoint and a military standpoint than potential enemies of this country know. So I'm asking you — work with us. Well, I thought about it. And you know, I was young. And I thought this is something that I've actually been involved with all my life, that it'd be fun, that I could go ahead learn certain things, answers to the questions I had, actually get a better understanding of events in my life.

I do believe that, one, they wanted me in the military; two, they wanted me involved in this program; three, there wasn't really concern about, if at some later date, I started to talk about it. They were only concerned what I might have to prove: If I had some little slivers of proof, what impact would that have on my story. But I know they did not want me out of the military. I know they wanted me to stay in. I know they wanted me to go ahead and go to what they referred to as The School. But I would never commit myself to go to what they were referring to as The School.

I was told that if you go to the school it will open up a whole new world for you, a whole new avenue. But I had to agree to it. And I had to go ahead and sign specific papers to go to it. And I was not prepared to go to that school. I had seen people who were involved with the program that had gone to that school and let me just say I didn't like their personality. I did not like the idea that by you going there it made you something special, it made you a prima donna, if you wish. That was not the way it was supposed to be. I felt that one of the greatest things you can be is a servant and not vice versa.

So some of these people, I did not like their disposition. I did not like their attitudes. And I did not want to become like them. And one of my fears was if I went to the school it would change me the same way.

Now, there are events, there are recoveries [of ET craft]. But the recoveries are few and far between. One of the events that took place in 1969 was a recovery of a craft that was a wedge shape craft and took place in Indian Town Gap. Now, I know it was cold and I believe it to have been in the winter but there was no snow. We were on a field training exercise, the 96th Civil Affairs Group. I was part of the 96th Civil Affairs Company. I was the NBC Non-Commissioner Officer in Charge. We were notified that they had an incident involving a downed craft and we needed to assist in recovery. The persons that showed up knew exactly where we were going and we went to our staging area. From there we went to another location in Indian Town Gap. We didn't have any problems about civilians or curiosity seekers or anything like this. The situation is, we did the recovery. I realized that what I was seeing was not of human origin.

When we got there, there was already a team set up. Floodlights were always set up around the object. I was asked to get closer and closer to the object to take readings with the APD 27. As I did this, I realized what I was seeing was not of an Earthly origin. I'm hesitant to go into it too much, because I don't want to get emotional about it...

Bentwaters is another very interesting case. With Bentwaters, we went there to digest some of the information. As far as the physical evidence, there were photographs. There was film footage. There was evidence of a higher than normal background radiation. Not all that high, but above normal. We found that there were some abnormalities in the area we referred to as the impact point. We also noticed that the trees had been leveled off at the top. When we got there, it was late December, I want to say December 28th was the day that we arrived there.

[See the testimony regarding this event from Larry Warren, Nick Pope, et al. SG]

We gathered up the materials. We took these materials back to Lindsey Air Force Base, all the hard evidence that we could get, all the documentation that was there. There were sightings that were picked up on radar. Both the British Government and the U.S. Government were aware of these sightings. The hard evidence that we had was taken back to Lindsey Air Force Base. There it was digested to where there was some type of information that could be put out to brief Shape Headquarters [NATO]. And I don't know who in Shape Headquarters was briefed. But I do know that we did have to do that. The information was then put with the special courier. I believe it was coming back to an air base close to the Washington, D.C. area and that the materials transferred on to Fort Belvoir, Virginia, headquarters at the time of the U.S. Air Forces Special Field Activities Group, Air Forces Field Activities Center. They then took this material, did whatever they did with it, and came up with the finalized intelligence product.

The reason it went to Lindsey was because the U.S. Air Forces Field Activities Center had detachments in the field. The closest detachment in the field to Bentwaters would have been Lindsey Air Force Base. They were the ones that got the material. They were the ones that were charged with safeguarding it until it got back to the U.S. They were asking questions, hard questions, critical questions. They were asking technical questions of technical people that were involved. I know for a fact that some of the radar operators, both British and U.S. were questioned. I know some of the people were out there on two different nights and they were questioned.

I was also involved with the Belgian UFO events in June, July of 1989. We were assessing information, gathering data on the UFO over flights of Belgium. The UFOs also went all over Germany. We had one incident there on the border near the Soviet territory. We saw that the Soviets were pretty upset because this was a huge object. It was triangular shape about three football fields on either side of the triangle. It flew over what we call No-Man's Zone. As it flew over there we all were getting jittery.

It was, I'd say summer, about August. You could feel your hair standing up on end. It was more than just, you know, getting shivers because of fright or something like this. There was some type of physiological effect taking place. Once this incident subsided, we put fighters on alert. We notified them that we may have a Soviet craft coming across the gap and we were going to intercept it. The Soviets did the same thing. It went back over the Soviet airspace and they scrambled fighters to try to intercept it. It wasn't traveling fast at all. But on this particular night no one fired at it.

There were pictures taken. There was consultation with the Soviet Union. With this going on, everyone was taken in and briefed. People were informed that what they saw was nothing more than a Russian MIG 27 that had strayed across into the area far enough into the No-Man's Zone to create a problem and cause some alarm. But it was no MIG 27. We knew exactly what we were looking at. You have flashcards which are silhouettes of the various craft of the Soviet Union and even our own.

So we knew precisely what we were looking at. What we saw was a craft that was of an unusual origin. It was not aerodynamically sound. And when I state it was not aerodynamically sound, I mean it had no means of staying aloft like that without some visible means of aerial support like a helicopter. That wasn't there. It was perfectly silent not making any noise roughly three stories high. This was one of the incidents that got me a little concerned, made me think about wanting to get out and come back to the family, to have some family life. We had the incident escalate. We had it escalate to where the Soviet Union filed an official protest through the Belgium Government to the U.S. Government stating that they were very concerned about the Belgium authorities along with several other countries letting us fly stealth aircraft on reconnaissance missions into the Soviet Union. We notified and discussed it with the Soviet Union. We briefed at least the Soviet Military Liaison Mission Groups that this had nothing to do with our involvement of sending stealth aircraft into their territory.

The Soviet Union was alarmed about what was going on. They even alluded to it being our craft. They were reassured that it wasn't. We reassured the Belgium authorities that it wasn't. The Belgium authorities had their own UFO sightings. We have seen this on TV. What you don't know about those sightings is that there was a tremendous- I don't want to call it a cover-up- there was a movement to keep specific information about those sightings under wraps. There were some efforts to go ahead and alter the film footage of the radar screens to the point where it showed the UFO going underground, which it did not. I think it was supposed to have gone 600 feet into the Earth. That did not happen. It was visible. People saw it. The pilots saw it. The pilot's aircraft locked on to it. But these were things that would create more questions that we were willing to answer. So we decided to keep this out of the press. And we were successful at it.

[See the government documents related to this event and the following. SG]

Another case we were involved with was the Iranian incident of September 19th, 1976. Both fighters were taken apart to try to find out if there was any way we could explain what really happened to those fighters which were having mal-functions at the same time. There was a situation where we had some anomalies picked up out where the sighting was- where one of the Air Force pilots saw the UFO go down to the ground. We recorded those anomalies with audio devices. We took film footage of the area and there were some strange things that showed up on that film footage. Everything that took place there at the landing area, I am not privy to. I don't have all the information. It wasn't something I had to be involved in. But I can tell you this much, whatever took place there had people out there for two to three weeks.

In 1986, I believe it was, we fired at a UFO on two occasions. The UFO took off like nothing happened. In '86 you had the incident where you had 20 or more UFO's flying around Brazilian aircraft, flying rings around them. These documents are important.

Not more than two-dozen UFOs had been retrieved by 1969 when I was briefed first. We were informed that there had only been a couple dozen tops- that there were several in the '40's and the early 50's. And to make it perfectly clear about those events that took place then, it sounds crazy but our radar wreaked havoc on the ET guidance systems and they had to make adjustments to their guidance systems for that.

How many bodies had been recovered? Don't know. How many crashes have occurred in which we only got debris because the ET's came and did their recovery before we got there? Don't know but it has happened. It has happened. When they had problems, just like we send out a distress call, they send out a distress call, which is something that a lot of people don't think about; it's a question that's never asked. But here again we think of them as something intangible like that stuffed animal there. But they are living, breathing creatures as mortal as you and me. They think, they have loves, they have likes, they have dislikes, they have social culture.

This is so important to try to make people understand that that is the case. I want to put the human factor back into UFO's. And when I say the human factor, I mean that these are real people. You can call them entities. You can call them creatures. But you sometimes find yourself wondering: who are the more real people, them or us? And these are things that really need to be brought out- the fact that they are just like you and me. We need to seek out the similarities, not the differences and come to a greater understanding. Because eventually, in the not too distant future, we are going to have that final contact that is going to open new doors.

A lot of people sit back and say, well, they don't have bases here. Ah, yeah, they do.

We were involved in a major engagement in 1970 in one of their bases in Vietnam approximately seven miles from the Cambodian border. If you want to know more about that, I did an audiotape on that. And I'll make you a copy of the audiotape. I will apologize for actually trying to hold back from some of the stories simply because if I start talking about some of the stories you start reliving them. And you don't understand, I mean, you really don't understand...

15. [REDACTED] THIS REPORT FORWARDS INFORMATION CONCERNING THE SIGHTING OF AN UFO IN IRAN ON 19 SEPTEMBER 1976.

A. AT ABOUT 1230 AM ON 19 SEP 76 THE IMPERIAL IRANIAN AIR FORCE (IIAF) COMMAND POST RECEIVED FOUR TELEPHONE CALLS FROM CITIZENS LIVING IN THE SHEMIRAN AREA OF TEHRAN SAYING THAT THEY HAD SEEN STRANGE OBJECTS IN THE SKY. SOME REPORTED A KIND OF BIRD-LIKE OBJECT WHILE OTHERS REPORTED A HELICOPTER WITH A LIGHT ON. THERE WERE NO HELICOPTERS AIRBORNE AT THAT TIME. THE COMMAND POST CALLED BG YOUSEFI, ASSISTANT DEPUTY COMMANDER OF OPERATIONS. AFTER HE TOLD THE CITIZEN IT WAS ONLY STARS AND HAD TALKED TO MEHRABAD TOWER HE DECIDED TO LOOK FOR HIMSELF. HE NOTICED AN OBJECT IN THE SKY SIMILAR TO A STAR BIGGER AND BRIGHTER. HE DECIDED TO SCRAMBLE AN F-4 FROM SHAHROKHI APB TO INVESTIGATE.

B. AT 0130 HRS ON THE 19TH THE F-4 TOOK OFF AND PROCEEDED TO A POINT ABOUT 40 NM NORTH OF TEHRAN. DUE TO ITS BRILLIANCE THE OBJECT WAS EASILY VISIBLE FROM 70 MILES AWAY. AS THE F-4 APPROACHED A RANGE OF 25 NM HE LOST ALL INSTRUMENTATION AND COMMUNICATIONS (UHF AND INTERCOM). HE BROKE OFF THE INTERCEPT AND HEADED BACK TO SHAHROKHI. WHEN THE F-4 TURNED AWAY FROM THE OBJECT AND APPARENTLY WAS NO LONGER A THREAT TO IT THE AIRCRAFT REGAINED ALL INSTRUMENTATION AND COMMUNICATIONS. AT 0140 HRS A SECOND F-4 WAS LAUNCHED. THE BACKSEATER ACQUIRED A RADAR LOCK ON AT 27 NM, 12 O'CLOCK HIGH POSITION WITH THE VC (RATE OF CLOSURE) AT 150 NM/PH. AS THE RANGE DECREASED TO 25 NM THE OBJECT MOVED AWAY AT A SPEED THAT WAS VISIBLE ON THE RADAR SCOPE AND STAYED AT 25NM.

C. THE SIZE OF THE RADAR RETURN WAS COMPARABLE TO THAT OF A 787 TANKER. THE VISUAL SIZE OF THE OBJECT WAS DIFFICULT TO DISCERN BECAUSE OF ITS INTENSE BRILLIANCE. INSTANT HIS WEAPONS CONTROL PANEL WENT OFF AND HE LOST ALL COMMUNICATIONS (UHF AND INTERPHONE). AT THIS POINT THE PILOT INITIATED A TURN AND NEGATIVE G DIVE TO GET AWAY, AS HE TURNED THE OBJECT FELL IN TRAIL AT WHAT APPEARED TO BE ABOUT 3-4 NM. AS HE CONTINUED IN HIS TURN AWAY FROM THE PRIMARY OBJECT THE SECOND OBJECT WENT TO THE INSIDE OF HIS TURN THEN RETURNED TO THE PRIMARY OBJECT FOR A PERFECT REJOIN.

D. SHORTLY AFTER THE SECOND OBJECT JOINED UP WITH THE PRIMARY OBJECT ANOTHER OBJECT APPEARED TO COME OUT OF THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PRIMARY OBJECT GOING STRAIGHT DOWN, AT A GREAT RATE OF SPEED, THE F-4 CREW HAD REGAINED COMMUNICATIONS AND THE WEAPONS CONTROL PANEL AND WATCHED THE OBJECT APPROACH THE GROUND ANTICIPATING A LARGE EXPLOSION. THIS OBJECT APPEARED TO COME TO REST GENTLY ON THE EARTH AND CAST A VERY BRIGHT LIGHT OVER AN AREA OF ABOUT 2-3 KILOMETERS. THE CREW DESCENDED FROM THEIR ALTITUDE OF 25M TO 15M AND CONTINUED TO OBSERVE AND MARK THE OBJECT'S POSITION. THEY HAD SOME DIFFICULTY IN ADJUSTING THEIR NIGHT VISIBILITY FOR LANDING SO AFTER ORBITING MEHRABAD A FEW TIMES THEY WENT OUT FOR A STRAIGHT IN LANDING, THERE WAS A LOT OF INTERFERENCE ON THE UHF AND EACH TIME THEY PASSED THROUGH A MAG, BEARING OF 150 DEGREE FROM MEHRABAD THEY LOST THEIR COMMUNICATIONS (UHF AND INTERPHONE) AND THE INS FLUCTUATED FROM 30 DEGREES - 50 DEGREES. THE ONE CIVIL AIRLINER THAT WAS APPROACHING MEHRABAD DURING THIS SAME TIME EXPERIENCED COMMUNICATIONS FAILURE IN THE SAME VICINITY (KICD ZULU) BUT DID NOT REPORT SEEING ANYTHING. WHILE THE F-4 WAS ON A LONG FINAL APPROACH THE CREW NOTICED ANOTHER CYLINDER SHAPED OBJECT (ABOUT THE SIZE OF A T-BIRD AT 10M) WITH BRIGHT STEADY LIGHTS ON EACH END AND A FLASHER IN THE MIDDLE. WHEN QUERIED THE TOWER STATED THERE WAS NO OTHER KNOWN TRAFFIC IN THE AREA. DURING THE TIME THAT THE OBJECT PASSED OVER THE F-4 THE TOWER DID NOT HAVE A VISUAL ON IT BUT PICKED IT UP AFTER THE PILOT TOLD THEM TO LOOK BETWEEN THE MOUNTAINS AND THE REFINERY.

E. DURING DAYLIGHT THE F-4 CREW WAS TAKEN OUT TO THE AREA IN A HELICOPTER WHERE THE OBJECT APPARENTLY HAD LANDED. NOTHING WAS NOTICED AT THE SPOT WHERE THEY THOUGHT THE OBJECT LANDED (A DRY LAKE BED) BUT AS THEY CIRCLED OFF TO THE WEST OF THE AREA THEY PICKED UP A VERY NOTICEABLE BEEPER SIGNAL. AT THE POINT WHERE THE RETURN WAS THE LODEST WAS A SMALL HOUSE WITH A GARDEN. THEY LANDED AND ASKED THE PEOPLE WITHIN IF THEY HAD NOTICED ANYTHING STRANGE LAST NIGHT. THE PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT A LOUD NOISE AND A VERY BRIGHT LIGHT

Testimony of Major General Vasily Alexeyev

(Our deepest gratitude to Valery Uvarov for interviewing Major General Alexeyev and to Michael Hesemann for sharing this interview.)

Major-General Alexeyev, of the Space Communications Center in Russia, is considered one of the most knowledgeable Russian Generals. He states that if extraterrestrials are capable of traversing vast distances, then they are probably from a higher level of civilization. And if this is true then they must be concerned with normal development of relations between people - constructive progress, not destructive. He says that if we look at our Earth history, we will see a tale of self-destruction, murder and death of entire peoples. He believes that advanced civilizations would not tolerate such behavior because their life would have a different meaning and be understood in a larger context.

Major-General Alexeyev knows of many eyewitness reports of unusual craft documented in specific Soviet papers. Various departments within the Government began investigating this phenomena including the Defense Ministry and the Academy of Sciences. They have many reports of UFO's seen over locations containing high concentrations of advanced science like nuclear facilities. In some cases they have learned how to create situations where they could deliberately provoke the appearance of UFO's, and in these 'contacts' for example, they would point their arms in various directions and the UFO's would respond by flattening their spheres in the same direction. There was a case just outside Moscow where a warrant officer found himself at the site of a UFO landing and the extraterrestrials made contact with him telepathically and asked him if he would like to visit inside the craft.

VA: ... The information coming in from the bases was of interest if only because it was not merely talk and rumors; there were eye-witnesses to phenomena and that was reflected in specific documents and the reports of officials. At times, this information was of such a fascinating nature that it was impossible not to believe it. Later the question no longer seemed so fantastic and began to be examined at the level not only of the Defense Ministry but of other government departments as well. This interest specifically expressed itself in certain experts being sent to investigate, especially to those places where UFOs, let's call them that, appeared quite frequently. I know a whole number of military bases in that category. As a rule, they are objects of strategic significance, rocket complexes, scientific test establishments, in other words, there is a high concentration of advanced science and to some degree danger. Because every nuclear rocket, every new air force installation represents a breakthrough both in science and military terms, it is first and foremost a peak, the summit of human achievement. And that is where UFOs appeared fairly often. Moreover, individual officers and commanders on the spot who knew about the phenomenon and had no official instruction on the matter, acted on their own initiative to investigate UFOs, recording data, and so on.

I know that in some places they even learned to create a situation which would deliberately provoke the appearance of a UFO. A UFO would appear where there was increased military activity connected, say, with the transportation of "special" loads. It was enough to artificially stimulate or schedule such a move for a UFO to appear. In other words, some kind of conditional relationship emerged and they detected it. We're an intelligent nation; nothing escapes us. I know that at certain testing ranges - I won't name them, although it's no longer a secret - they even learnt to make contact of a kind. What did that consist of? First the UFO appeared; in most instances it was a sphere but there were other kinds. Contact was achieved with the help of physical indications of behavior - pointing your arms in various directions, say, and the sphere became flattened in the same direction. If you raised your arms three times, the UFO flattened out in a vertical direction three times as well.

In the early 1980s, on the instructions of the then Soviet leadership, experiments using technical devices (theodolites, radar stations, and others) were carried out, as a result of which the unidentified objects were firmly recorded as instrumental data...

Reports of UFO sightings came in regularly. And evidently somewhere nearer the core of our leadership in the sphere of the Defense Ministry, the Academy of Sciences and so on, a lot of this kind of information began to build up. And not only from ordinary laymen but from scientists and professionals as well. Military men in general are not inclined to fantasize. They only report what they see, what actually occurs. They are people you can believe. You should not forget that the arms race was still going on at this time, a struggle for military and other priorities. New discoveries in science and technology were being made all the time. The UFOs were something new and not understood. And there really was an idea that they might be some means of gathering intelligence... But it is interesting that one of the official versions from the commission, including among the final points, was the possibility that UFOs belonged to an extraterrestrial civilization! That was interesting! ...

By the nature of my work I received information from various military units across Russia, the Soviet Union as it then was. I know that that material was sent on without any explanations or annotations to the relevant bodies higher up. I was aware that there were groups engaged in investigating UFOs and perhaps something more, but at that time the level of secrecy over this question was such that all that took place was receiving information and subsequently sending it on higher up: People came to see me, but as we were military men, there were no explanations of any kind. They simply said they were interested in this or that. Then they came up with a table with pictures of all the shapes of UFOs that had ever been recorded - about fifty - ranging from ellipses and spheres through to something resembling spaceships. Witnesses were asked what it looked like, then they pinned down the locality and so on. After which all the material was passed on. As a result, it is hard to say how the work was continued, to what extent it was scientific. I knew that some kind of work was going on in the Defense Ministry, the Academy of Sciences and the intelligence services. But things were such that those who weren't directly connected with the investigations didn't know what was going on. We only provided the information. I must admit that there was an awful lot of information. And here around Moscow, above many air-defense sites, testing-ranges and other installations - those are the places where UFOs appear most often...

It is a global issue, a geopolitical one. I am sure that the Americans and other countries have built up a large quantity of this kind of information. I am certain today that there is a great deal of this information. And anyway, this issue, like thermonuclear weapons, is a global one. It is a question of the survival of humanity, considering how poor our conceptions about the environment and energy resources are, the ecological problems that are emerging. We burn up the oxygen and do a lot of other things and in the last resort it is hard to say where we will end up and to what extent these processes are irreversible. A way out has to be found. There must be some kind of breakthrough. With those problems in mind, the study of UFOs may reveal some new forms of energy to us, or at least bring us closer to a solution. Therefore, questions bound up with the UFOs and all the accompanying phenomena are, I believe on the whole, the concern of all mankind. And here our leaders at the relevant level should take matters seriously and find an acceptable solution. Many prominent scientists of world rank have spoke of the need for such an approach. Why it hasn't come about yet is hard to say... Many countries today have reached a certain level in science and in the study of this question. We have obtained certain results and at present the issue is the creation of some single body that would bring together all our knowledge on this matter. I believe things would be easier then. The Americans have got something interesting, so have we. Conclusions have been made and data assembled for years gone by as well, and now they have been "shelved" somewhere. Perhaps it would be enough to put one thing together with another for the whole question to appear in a completely different light...

There was a case with us outside Moscow when two warrant officers felt an inner urge to go outside. And one of them found himself directly at the landing site of a flying device. He made mental contact - not at the level of speech, but telepathically in thought forms. He was given an invitation to visit the spaceship but due to fear or some purely personal reasons he couldn't accept. Later he made some interesting drawings of the ship. I saw their explanatory notes and drawings depicting what they had seen. Their account was supplemented by the reports and drawings of the duty officers and their deputies and a whole number of conscripts who were on guard duty. In all the accounts, the place and time were compatible and the drawings of the ship flying away had much in common...

When you have the mass of documentary material, which I have worked with, from specific people, eye-witnesses, and that over a period of several years, in different regions, then your attitude to the UFO phenomenon naturally changes. You know, I have kept some photographs for myself...

There are a large number of facts like that, inexplicable for contemporary science. As if some kind of intelligence was reacting.

VU: What do you think - are UFOs representatives of other civilizations?

VA: I think that if their level of civilization allows them to move in space across great distances, possibly in other forms of material - and that is indeed the case - then at their level of development when it comes down to it, they are also concerned about normal relations between people, some sort of progress, ultimately the survival of intelligent life, if it does exist in the world. And if we look at the Earth from that point of view then our whole history is a tale of self-destruction and not creation. It's the history of murders and the death of whole peoples. Not a single truly civilized society could tolerate that. Life has a different meaning. No normal person can walk past if a child is drowning! They will save it if only because the child represents their future. And the higher the level of civilization the greater the awareness of that. If that works at the level of the single individual then it will also work at the level of civilizations. But they do not interfere nevertheless because each civilization should develop independently according to certain laws. Outside interference in natural processes is always a risky business. But some sort of correction, not allowing processes of disintegration to being when they will bring the history of civilization to an end, is evidently included in the plans of the Higher Intelligence.

2. [REDACTED] THE PHENOMENON DESCRIBED BY SOURCE WAS A STRONG, BRIGHT LIGHT IN THE FORM OF A TRIANGULAR SEGMENT THAT EMANATED FROM AN UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECT IN THE SKY. (FIELD COMMENT--SOURCE SAID
 THE SEGMENT OF LIGHT APPEARED TO BE THREE-DIMENSIONAL, AND IF IT COULD HAVE BEEN SEEN FROM ABOVE OR BELOW, IT WOULD HAVE APPEARED CONICAL.) THIS PHENOMENON WAS OBSERVED ON A CLEAR SUMMER NIGHT IN EITHER AUGUST OR SEPTEMBER OF 1974, AS SOURCE STOOD ON A STREET
 BETWEEN TWO BUILDINGS OF THE FACILITY. IT LAY LOW ON THE HORIZON AND SEEMED TO BE OUTSIDE THE CITY LIMITS. IT MOVED FROM SOUTH TO NORTH FOR ABOUT 10 TO 15 MINUTES, THEN WAS OBSCURED FROM VISION BY A TWO-STORY BUILDING OF THE FACILITY. IT MADE NO SOUND AS IT MOVED.

 Deleted per 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(1) EVERYONE PRESENT AGREED THAT THE LIGHT PRODUCED BY THE FLYING OBJECT WAS BRIGHTER AND STRONGER THAN ANYTHING THEY HAD EVER OBSERVED BEFORE, AND THAT NO
 AIRCRAFT KNOWN TO THEM COULD PRODUCE SUCH A LIGHT. THEY ALSO AGREED THAT THE PHENOMENON WAS EITHER A NEW TECHNOLOGY BEING TESTED BY THE Уважаемый Павел Романович!

Комитет государственной безопасности не занимается систематическим сбором и анализом информации об аномальных явлениях (так называемых непознанных летающих объектах). Вместе с тем, в КГБ СССР поступает от различных организаций и граждан информация о случаях наблюдения таких явлений. Направляем Вам копии соответствующих материалов. Ранее эти материалы по запросу были высланы в ЦНИИ машиностроения г. Калининград.

Ref. Your # 5-53 of Sept. 24,1991

Dear Pavel Romanovich,

The State Security Committee has never been engaged in systematic gathering and analysis of information on anomalous phenomena (the so called unidentified flying objects). At the same time, the SSC of the USSR has been receiving statements from a number of persons and agencies on cases of observations of the above phenomena. We forward You the copies of such statements. At an earlier date the same material was sent to the Central Machine Building Research Institute, the town of Kaliningrad.

CASE REPORT

ON ANOMALOUS PHENOMENON OBSERVATION

in the vicinity of the city of Petropavlovsk

_____ on October 20, 1982

On the case of a UFO appearance in the vicinity of the Petropavlovsk-1 airport

On October 20, 1982, an Ilyushin-62 airliner, tail number 86457, of the 206th flight detachment, Domodedovo Aviation Association, enroute from Moscow to Magadan, flight 63, made an unscheduled landing at the Petropavlovsk-1 airport due to poor weather conditions at the destination airport.

Approaching the Petropavlovsk-1 airport the crew observed a shining object flying at head-on and parallel headings and various speeds and flight levels.

On completion his mission the crew captain Mr. Vesilievych made an entry on the event in the Log of Crew Captains' Testimonials on Petropavlovsk-1 Airport Electronic Aids Operation and Airport Services Performance.

After the plane landing the same object was sighted by two air controllers, an Air Force and a civil aviation ones, stationed at the airport control tower (the Petropavlovsk airport is jointly operated by the Air Force and civil aviation authorities).

To investigate and file record the event statements were taken from four crew members and two air controllers, the airport meteorological service statement on weather conditions filed, and a transcript of crew-to-tower tape recorded communications made. An undesiphered cassette of the Mars-BM flight cassette recorder with crew communications for the last 30 minutes of flight was withdrawn for the same purpose. The cassette desiphering proved to be unfeasible due to the lack of special equipment.

The investigation revealed that at 19.29 (Moscow time in text only) of December 19, 1982, the Ilyushin-62 airplane checked the route point of Sobolevo at a flight level of 11400 meters and began descent to approach the Petropavlovsk- 1 airport. Capt. Vasilievych caught sight of two light bursts of a light-blue color 45 degrees portside below the level of sight,

ON ANOMALOUS PHENOMENON OBSERVATION

in the vicinity of the cities of Kursk, Voronezh, Elets

REFERENCE NOTE

on conversation with COL G.K.Skrypnik, CP Duty Officer of (deleted)

The conversation with COL Skrypnik, (deleted) CP Duty Officer, on the case of a visual contact with a UFO that took place in the (deleted) CP quarters on October 24, 1983.

COL Skrypnik recounted that at 6 a.m. on October 17, 1983, MAJ Kiselev, Duty Officer of the (deleted) CP reported a visual contact with a UFO which was sporadically moving changing its altitude and brightness and periodically emitting a beam of light directed downwards. The UFO was of a round, shape with a bright halo around it and a darker center. The UFO was moving randomly and had no definite direction. Observers sighted the appearance of periodic light beams emitted from the UFO towards the Earth. At minimum distances to the ground the UFO looked like a polyhedron invariably with a shining halo around. A P-12 radar engaged at Georgiu-Dezh did not manage to acquire the object and produce any valuable data. By means of a geodetic level sited at Kursk the UFO was visually fixed illuminated by the rays of the rising sun at an elevation angle of about 30-50 degrees above the horizon and an azimuth of 30-45 degrees. All the UFO observers are positive that the object they watched was not identical to any star in the observation sector. That was proved by the UFO random movement with altitude and brightness variations and the periodic light beam directed towards the Earth. The UFO was sighted at sunrise when no stars were visible.

Later at about 7 a.m. the UFO began gaining altitude to disappear from sight.

The UFO was observed by Sen. LT Belan in Kursk, Sen. LT Demin at Elets, Sen. LT Miagkov at Voronezh. Bearings on the object they reported were plotted on the (deleted) CP plotting board to produce a cross point fix over the city of Voronezh which fact confirmed that all of them had been observing the same object.

All the information on the UFO observation was reported by COL Skrypnik through the chain of command to COL Galitsin of the Moscow Air Defense District CP.

APPENDIX: Extract from COL Skrypnik report on one page.

EXTRACT from CP Duty Officers Report Log (deleted)

At 6 o'clock of October 17, 1983, MAJ Kisilev, (deleted) CP Duty Officer, reports visual contact with an unidentified flying object moving randomly at various altitudes and uneven brightness. Visual contact confirmed by Kursk, Elets, and personal observation via glasses. Elevation angle is 30-50 degrees above the horizon, azimuth is 30-45 degrees from Kursk. No stars are visible, the object being observed against the rays of the rising sun, H = 100-200 km. At 06.09 reported the fact to COL Galitsin of the Moscow AD District CP. The UFO was observed by LT Belan in Kursk, Sen. LT Demin in Elets, Sen. LT Miagkov in Voronezh. The UFO was being observed for one hour (from 6 to 7 a.m.).

Testimony of Master Sergeant Dan Morris, US Air Force, (Retired)/NRO Operative
September 2000

Dan Morris is a retired Air Force career Master Sergeant who was involved in the extraterrestrial projects for many years. After leaving the Air Force, he was recruited into the super-secret National Reconnaissance Organization, or NRO, during which time he worked specifically on extraterrestrial-connected operations. He had a cosmic top-secret clearance (38 levels above top secret) which, he states, no U.S. president, to his knowledge, has ever held. In his testimony, he talks of assassinations committed by the NSA; he tells how our military deliberately caused the 1947 ET craft crashes near Roswell, and captured one of the ETs, which they kept at Los Alamos for 3 years, until he died. He talks about the intelligence teams that were charged with intimidating, discrediting, and even eliminating witnesses to ET/UFO events. He talks about Germany's re-engineering of UFOs, even prior to WWII. He talks about our current energy crisis—and the fact that we haven't needed fossil fuels since the 1940s, when free energy technologies were developed— but have been kept from humanity. This is the real reason for the secrecy of the ET/UFO subject. "What the people in power right now don't want us to know is that this free energy is available to everybody." In conclusion, he warns against the weaponization of space and the shooting down of ET craft—this could force them to retaliate, and that would be our destruction.

Do you know what a cryptographic center is? That's where all the coded messages are sent, and that's top secret. Of course that doesn't mean much, top secret—there are about 38 levels above top secret.

I had a clearance 38 levels above top secret, which is cosmic top-secret—it is the top of all of those clearances. It is for [working with] UFOs and aliens, etc. No president has had that level; has ever been cleared for that level— Eisenhower was the closest. Well, there are several intelligence agencies—the Army had it, the Air Force had it, the Navy had it. And, then there were several secret intelligence agencies. One that did not exist, it was so secret, was the NRO. You couldn't mention NRO. It is the National Reconnaissance Organization. If you're on that level, then there's an organization worldwide called ACIO, that's Alien Contact Intelligence Organization. If you pay your dues, and you follow the rules, your government is allowed to benefit from that organization's information. Now, some people call it the high frontier. The Navy Intelligence refer to themselves that way sometimes. They all work together—Air Force intelligence, Naval intelligence, and the NRO—[and] were at one time all in a certain part of Langley Air Force Base in Virginia. Most of the satellite interpreters were there; most of the intelligence interpreters from the Air Force, the Army, the Navy were there; that's where they worked and interpreted.

[See the testimony of Karl Wolfe. SG]

Now, Eisenhower wanted somebody to be in charge—he tried the CIA Director, and it didn't work. The CIA was working primarily for itself. Most of the intelligence directors of the services were working for themselves. So he said, "I want it to be independent; I want it to be civilian; I want it to be some of our top scientists." So, it was organized, but the name of the NRO was kept secret for years.

About 1968 was when it came into being, independently. Before that, during the war, we had the OSS, the Office of Strategic Services, and that was mostly spy soldiers—you know, men from certain parts of the armed forces formed under the OSS. I never spied for the OSS. I was in Air Force intelligence, and another thing that gave me a high security clearance was I was a CONRAD courier. Now, if you don't know what CONRAD courier means: sometimes during the hot and cold war you saw the president, and there was always a military warrant officer with him? Well, he carried a little bag. Those were the war codes, and he could declare war—he would get the code for the day, and it was in two men's control, all the way down through the submarines to the missile launch systems and the bombers. Every nuclear weapon was controlled by the President through that little bag that that one officer carried next to him. So, those codes were carried by two men all the time. It was transferred to all the commanders throughout the field, and sometimes they would fly on civilian airplanes. The guys from the base—two guys—always armed, would go to the airfield and meet two guys that were CONRAD couriers, and they would give them the codes. So I was a CONRAD courier in 1948, 1949, [and] 1950. Then the Korean War came along, and I went to Korea.

After I retired from the Air Force—I was in the Air Force for 22 years—I was given the opportunity: "You want to go to work for somebody else? With your clearances, you could go to work for somebody else." And I said, doing what? And they said, "Doing the same thing you were doing for the Air Force, but for somebody that doesn't exist." And I said, what are you going to pay me? "We're going to pay you good," [they answered], so it was worth it—plus I enjoyed it, because I was learning things.

In the Air Force, I had already discovered that there were UFOs and aliens. Of course, then it was a great cover-up: you had Project Blue Book, two or three other ones that followed Blue Book, and so forth, that were designed to cover that up. Personally, I didn't think that was right, so I would keep things—information. When I was working with this genius that had invented the Mode Six Transponder, he would talk to me when we'd be working late at night, and he'd start telling me things that were secret that he was working on. Then, he would sometimes catch himself and say, "But you don't have a need to know that, so I can't tell you that." But he would, because we'd be working alone and everything. So, I learned from him a lot of things that were classified—top secret, cosmic, and so forth. The Air Force would call me in every once in a while and ask me, "Did he ever tell you about this?" I'd say yes, so when I retired from the Air Force, they knew that I knew some of this stuff—that's why they gave me the chance to go work for somebody else who knew that too—the NRO.

[See the testimony of John Maynard. SG]

The National Security Agency—the killers work in that. They're the guys that, when it becomes necessary for a "problem" to be removed, they're... if you watch James Bond, they're double-O agents, if you get my meaning. Secretary of Defense Forrestal was the first real powerful, known person that was eliminated because he was going to release the information—and nobody has ever paid for that crime; that crime has never really been thoroughly investigated by forces, to see what happened to him. Most people know that he was thrown out the window of a hospital—but he wasn't killed by being thrown out the window—but he never got up alive...

There are other people who have been eliminated for what they know. One was a friend of mine, Phil Snyder, who worked out here in New Mexico building the tunnels—the biggest one that he was involved with was the Duke underground facility. He was an explosives expert, and when he blasted through this area, it wasn't ours—it was some other alien's place. So the natural—our response—is to shoot. So we did, and they shot, and he was hit with a radiation laser, and from that day on he had a scar from here clean up to here. When he started turning public and was speaking in public—released a lot of stuff on his personal computer to the public—they were going to get rid of him, and he knew it. He told me, the last time I saw him, he said, "Man, I don't care, I'm in so much pain—if they get rid of me, it would be a blessing." Well, they did get rid of him. His roommate happened to be a captain in the Nevada police force in Las Vegas, and it would have all been quiet had it not been for him. They said he committed suicide. Well, he didn't, and his roommate went and got the coroner, and he says, "Come down, I want to show you this body. You examine that guy again—watch the circle around his neck: that was made with a piano wire—you check it." He says, "He could not close his hands, and he couldn't lift his arms above his head since he was shot with that laser. How could he have committed suicide?" Well, the coroner did change the records—that it was not suicide, but it never got changed officially.

I know that Phil loved this country, and he thought these programs were bypassing our form of government. The way it was set up, there were too many black projects going on—and none were approved by our Congress.

[See the testimony of Clifford Stone. SG]

No Congress ever voted on any of these black projects, and he believed the American people had a right to know what they were spending their money for, and what we were capable of doing—and he started talking, so they got rid of him.

This whole project of bringing this out in the open will probably take other people, too. But myself—I'm 73 years old and I've had a good life and no regrets, and I've loved this country, and I've been a Christian all my life, since I was about 11 years old—so I believe God wants this known, and I believe the cosmos wants this known. And I believe that if we don't break the secrecy... We're doing our people a great harm, keeping it so secret, and if we don't break it, I believe somebody else will—somebody outside of this planet. I believe some of the people who have been with us the last fifty years will break the secret.

I'll tell you, when I was stationed at Air Proving Ground command in Florida, they were going to send me to Warner Robbins Air Force Base with a team, and with the two most powerful radars we had at the time. And SAC—that's when SAC was on alert all the time—was going to run penetration missions against us. It was all secret who was there. The commander of the base didn't know this unit was there—all they were thinking was—we were marked as a weather squadron, and we had nothing to do with the weather. Anyway, we got our equipment set up at Warner Robbins, and we were operating—we'd been there for about a month. We were working on the big tower one day; it was down for maintenance, and there were five of us on the tower and two guys down in the control room. Somebody said, "Look, UFOs!" "Yeah, yeah,"—I don't think that anybody turned around and looked. That was the days of the Blue Book, and if you said you saw a UFO, they'd send you to the hospital and you'd be examined by a psychiatrist to see why you wanted out of the Air Force. Or they'd ship you out to somewhere else to shut you up. Then, J. Allen Hynek, who was a technical advisor to Close Encounters of the Third Kind—he was hired officially by the Blue Book Project to shut everybody up; come up with something—either auto-suggestion, mass hypnosis, or swamp gas—those were his three statements that he would usually come up with. So, somebody said, "Just turn around and look!" So, we all turned around and there—sitting about, I'd say, a half a mile from the tower, and about 3,000 feet altitude—were three silver UFOs. There's a picture of it in there. So, we all walked over to the rope, and said, "Yeah, those are real UFOs." And I said, okay, if Hynek comes up here, what are you going to say? If they send a team up here, what are we going to say? Somebody said, "There's about 20,000 civilians and about 10,000 military on this base—somebody else is bound to have seen these, so when they say it's mass hypnosis, or auto-suggestion, or swamp gas—let's go down and turn the radar on, because none of that paints on the radar." So, we all went down. Now, the two guys who were down there—I [asked] them, "You got your cameras—official Air Force cameras? Go outside and take pictures; go out and tell me what you see." They came back and said, "There are UFOs sitting out there in formation!" I said, "Well, take pictures—get the cameras and take pictures." And, I told the other two: "Turn the radar cameras on," because we had radar cameras that took pictures, too.

So, that was all there, and this building we were in had one whole side that was glass French doors, so if you set the radarscope, you'd look outside and see there were UFOs, and so I called headquarters. I said, okay, we have a contact. He says, "You mean SAC is running a mission against you?" I said, not SAC; not SAC." He says, "What, then?" I said, "Cosmos." He said, "Wait a minute—describe them on the phone." There was a switch you could throw that scrambles everything, so I said, "Okay, my phone's scrambled; is yours scrambled?" "Mine's scrambled," he says, "What do you mean, you've got a cosmic contact?" I said, I mean there are three UFOs sitting out there. "You taking pictures?" We're taking pictures. "You taking radar pictures?" We're taking radar pictures—taking real pictures. He says, "Okay, don't say another word; I will send a courier up there; he'll get there in about six hours—you turn everything over to him." And I said, okay. About six hours later, he's there; we've got everything sealed up for him; we give it to him; he heads back to Air Proving Ground Command—and we were never officially notified that they ever received those pictures. It went secret; it went black—like it never happened. But, we had copies of the pictures, so I told the guys—the five—I said, okay, guys, here's a copy for all of you. Keep them for your grandkids.

Now as far as I know, that mission was closed—but that got us all interested, because we had seen some facts, you know—not radar scopes, not things in crypto—but we were there, and we had pictures of them.

When they started moving and the radar antennae went around—the trace on your scope went around four sweeps per minute—by the time we had "painted" them, they were out of sight. Once they started moving, they went straight up, and then they went, zap! And they were off our scope. Our scope would go out to 260 miles; so you calculate that, and that's pretty fast. We never had anything back then that could go that fast in the inventory [this was in the 1940s].

Do you know why we stopped exploding nuclear weapons? We were ordered to do it by those ETs from Orion. Orion—they came down and they told us, "Look, you can destroy yourselves, so we won't put up with that. If you do that—if you explode that planet—and you've got the capability now..." That's when we really got their attention, and they came down and they said, "Look, we won't let you destroy your planet, so we want you to stop all nuclear testing." They had already stopped us from using weapons, and then they told us, "No more nuclear testing." Now Russia and the United States—we were firm believers, by then, that those people could do what they said. And you saw the time they all showed up over Washington, D.C., and we sent our jets up after them, and every time the jets would go up, the UFOs would zap out, or they'd go to another dimension. The jets would come back to base and the UFOs would be back over Washington—scared the hell out of everybody in Washington—what are they going to do?

[See the testimony of AEC and Air Force official Colonel Diedrickson. SG]

What happened was that we found out that high-powered radar would interfere with their stability, because we could watch the amplifiers and stabilizers come down when they were low and slow. Radar affected the UFOs when they were low and slow. We already knew that: we knew it before 1947, before they came down. Where was most of our radar? White Sands, and down at Roswell. Who was stationed at Roswell? The only nuclear bomb squadron in the world. So—they were interested, and we had a lot of radar there, because we were going to protect as much as we could. Well, we focused several big, powerful radars on them, and it caused two of them to run together. One of them was the one that went down and landed on the ranch; the other was the one that went down into the bank, and it had two aliens on it; [they were] lying outside when we got there. One of them was wounded or hurt, and the other was alive then, but before we could get him anywhere, he had already passed on. But, the other [ET from the other crash]—we kept at Los Alamos over here for about three years. He got sick. We sent [signals] out on every frequency range we could and everything, that he was sick; that we didn't do it; that they could come and get him if they wanted to—but he died before they got here. They came and got his body, and that's when they went to Washington and had that formation over Washington, so they retrieved his body.

One time we shot down one, and we were catching hell for that. But, what do you think we did with all these nuclear weapons that we and Russia had? We put nuclear weapons out in space as a line of defense—and we were ready to blow them up if they started in.

Anyway, I became an E-9, Chief Master Sergeant in the Air Force, and was in from 1947-1968 and had a top secret cosmic clearance. It's only for those people that have a need to know about aliens, UFOs, and contacts with aliens. I slowly worked up, like I told you about being a CONRAD Courier, and cryptographic intelligence, and so forth. Then, after the contact at the radar site, there was no denying it—I knew they were there because I had the pictures...

I became part of a group that would investigate; gather the information—and in the beginning, it was still under the Blue Book, Snowbird, and different covert programs. I would go interview people who claimed they had seen something, and try to convince them they hadn't seen something, or that they were hallucinating. Well, if that didn't work, another team would come in and give all the threats—threaten them and their family, and so on and so forth—they would be in charge of discrediting them: making them look foolish, and so on and so forth. Now, if that didn't work, then there was another team that put an end to that problem, one way or another.

When this one event took place, pretty soon 24 black helicopters show up from 54-12—talk about response teams—the Air Force had response teams all over the world. That's their code name, 54-12. Now, you had to interview those people who lived around there, because you can't hide 24 helicopters, so that's the example of going, "What did you see; did you see the triangle?" "No." "Did you see the helicopters?" "Yes, but they were all black." And so on, and so forth—so that's the kind of incidents that I would investigate.

You take the response teams—their cover was that they were responsible for nuclear weapons or nuclear triggers, so if we'd lose one, we'd lose a bomber, or a helicopter would go down, if we were transferring them from one place to another, etc...

[See the testimony of Clifford Stone who was on such a team and it was organized under an NBC - nuclear, biological, and chemical response teams. SG]

So, there would be cover stories deliberately put out and then de-bunked. Information, disinformation has been going on for 50 years.

We need help with most of the guys who signed the security oath—that's the reason he needs to keep doing what he's doing. You know, Dr. Greer—and get us out from under that. This needs to come out.

Germany recovered two UFOs before—it was 1931, 1932—and they took them to Germany and started—like we do now—re-engineering. They got ahead, and even before the war started, they had a workable UFO. It was called, by them—now I can't pronounce it exactly like a German would—but it's "Hun-dee-doo" [phonetic] One and Two. The Two was the one you see about thirty or forty feet across, with the three balls hanging down, that go up and down when they're landing—bouncing. So then, the foo fighters were not manned—those were unmanned vehicles, but it had the traction that it could stay right in front of fighter pilots' wing shields, and there was nothing he could do to dodge it—he could not; it would stay right there. Now the thing was, it could fly through our formations and kill the engines in our bombers and fighters, just like today. If a UFO goes over you and kills your engine, it can shut down power plants, because it works on anti-gravity electromagnetic propulsion. So, we began to experience that in the bomber formations. And the fighters—there was nothing they could do to get rid of them. We've got plenty of film—documentary film—to show that in the archives. And then we got a whole bunch more from the Germans after the war, because we brought—not only Von Braun—but, we brought Scharberger over here, and some of their electromagnetic people who were working on the UFOs. He gave us a jump on everybody else.

The Russians took some people, too, but we had the main ones. Scharberger was out here in New Mexico, and he helped us in White Sands and other places around New Mexico. Then he felt we'd done him wrong, and he went home, and two weeks after he went home, he was killed.

UFOs are both extraterrestrial and man made. The guys that were doing the UFOs—they weren't sleeping—and Townsend Brown was one of our guys who was almost up with the Germans. So we had a problem—we had to keep Townsend Brown—what he was doing on [the] anti-gravity, electromagnetic propulsion secret. Even back in Tesla's time, we had free energy that we could transfer. All you had to do was just put up an antenna, and put a stake in the ground, and you could light this house and have all the energy you needed. But what do we run on? For the last century, we've run on petroleum. Who's in control of the petroleum in the world? A lot of people think that Iraq, Iran, and so on, are. They aren't. We control it—us and the British interests. Well, some people refer to this as the secret government: a group of the richest men in the world control petroleum. You don't need cars unless you have an internal combustion engine. Well, if you have one of these units that's about sixteen inches long and about eight inches high and about ten inches wide, then you don't need to plug into the local electric company. These devices burn nothing—no pollution; it never wears out, because there are no moving parts—what moves are electrons in the gravity field; in the electronic field; and they turn in opposite directions, okay? You put one in a car—the car would rust and fall down around it before it would ever wear out. So, what's that going to do to the world economy that runs on petroleum?

So it's not that our government and the world doesn't want us to know that there are other people on other planets that have existed for thousands of years. What the people in power right now don't want us to know is that this free energy is available to everybody. Toyota has a car that runs on it; Ford has produced one that runs on it. Now, Toyota will probably turn it loose and bring it over here—either 2001 or 2—because they have to pay high prices for oil, and we're pretty soon going to pay high prices too. When this knowledge is found out by the people, they're going to demand our government release this technology, and it will change the world. That's the greatest secret that they want to keep—so secrecy about UFOs is because of the energy issue.

The American people are stronger than the government gives them credit for, and I believe that; I've come to that decision myself—that the American people can stand to know the truth, and they should know the truth, and that's one reason I'm coming forward. I want them to know that there's a better life possible.

Well, really the first photographs that I saw of Area 51 were from Russia. Russia is the one that told everybody that there was such a thing as Area 51; they released their satellite pictures of it—so we finally had to admit there was such a thing as Area 51.

Also, I saw alien autopsy photos from Russia. Did you see what we said was an alien autopsy on TV.? It was very similar to that. They had pads on their fingers—suction cups, really was what it looked like. There were organs in the aliens that they couldn't explain what they did. Now, I've seen things that describe the ones that we've autopsied—that they can't reproduce; physically, they lost that.

[See the testimony of Colonel Corso, which states that those creatures were clones made by the primary ETs. SG]

You know, the South African government admits that they retrieved an ET craft. They don't make any bones about it. They put out a documentary film that has a police sergeant who's saying that they recovered one—it even shows you pictures of the recovery, and so on and so forth. Now, what I've read is that an agreement was made between our government and them—that we would not say anything about them developing and using their first nuclear weapon; that if we couldn't support them in the U.N.; that we'd keep our mouths shut—and they would give us that ET ship. And we agreed to it; and they did. We sent a C-5A Galaxy over and brought the ship back, as well as the two aliens that they had gotten out of the ship. They went to Wright-Pat Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, where we usually send most of what we recover. There are about eight levels under the ground, and we store it there.

So, who's our enemy now? Some would like for us to believe, and would like to develop the idea, that the aliens are our enemy now. There's no proof that I have ever read in any official document where—unless they were attacked—that they ever shot. One instance I'll tell you about involved Russia: this involved an admiral who had a son who was a MIG pilot in their air force. We had an F-18 up in Alaska, and the Russians would send their Badgers and their Beavers out; they'd send their MIGs out; so the 21st Fighter Squadron in Alaska—they'd go up and intercept them, and they were all armed. Fortunately nobody fired. So our controller saw—when these MIGs were mixing it up—that there was another ship that moved in, and our controller was listening to the Russians say, "Intercept that ship." They referred to it as "ship"—it wasn't anything we knew or the Russians knew. So the two MIGs started intercepting. Our guy was told by our controller, "Get out of there; stay in view, but don't you try to intercept that ship!" So, as soon as the Russian fighters turned on their armament, targeted the UFO—the missiles were both destroyed, just like that—one after the other. Our guy wasn't shot at, and he came on back home. That was a two-star Russian general who told that story, and they also interviewed the admiral whose son had told that story to him.

So, Russians intercepted one of these UFOs, and somebody told them to fire on it. But then the order was immediately countermanded—but before they could cancel the order—this one guy had already released his missile. And it was immediately destroyed—so near the missile launcher, that the MIG that launched the missile was damaged.

I think the aliens are aware that we're trying to build weapons against them. Now I'll tell you, we do have a defense; we're capable of shooting some down. We've developed that ability. Eisenhower warned the United States public, "Don't let the military and the industrial weapons builders get in power." He always feared that, and if you look at his last speech, he said that to the public. Don't let them become too powerful. So, we better wake up. We've tried to shoot down several UFOs—and we've been successful—we crashed one in White Sands, New Mexico. We were tracking it at the time, and we were successful in damaging it enough that it crashed. And yes, there were some aliens on it; and yes, we got them. This happened about 1968 or 1969, about the same time the South Africans did it.

Let me just say that Germany is so much more free than we are. In Germany, in France, and in Spain, they've all admitted this. In Australia, they've admitted a whole lot, and in South Africa, they put it out there for the world to see—so what are we doing? We don't have a threat from Russia anymore, but if we keep shooting at those aliens, we might have a threat from them. We should quit that. We should demand that our government stop trying to shoot down those aliens. We should cooperate.

During the first week in July I received correspondence from Mr. X which stated that a UFO had crashed in the Kalahari Desert and had been recovered by a team of South African Military personnel to a secret Air Force base. He also informed me that two live alien entities had been found in the craft. The information also stated that a group of American Military personnel had arrived and had taken over the investigation. He stated that he would forward a copy of the Official South African Top Secret document to me but would send it later in a letter which would not contain any details of the sender in case the letter was intercepted. (Slide 2)

A week later I received the document which consisted of five pages and was headed with the South African Air Force crest. Every page of the document was marked Top Secret. (Slide 3)

The story told by the document was as follows:

(Slide 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

At 1.45pm. on the 7th. May, 1989 a Naval Frigate of the South African navy was at sea when it contacted Naval Headquarters to report an unidentified flying object on their radar scope, heading towards the South African continent in a North Westerly direction at a calculated speed of 5746 nautical miles per hour. This message was acknowledged and confirmed that the object was also being tracked by airborne radar and military ground radar installations.

The object entered South African airspace at 1.52pm. and at this time radio contact was attempted but to no avail. As a result two Mirage jet fighters were scrambled on an intercept course.

At 1.59pm. Squadron leader ----- the pilot of one of the Mirage fighters stated over the intercom that they had radar and visual confirmation of the craft. The order was given to arm and fire the Thor 2 experimental laser canon. This was done.
(Thor 2 is a Top Secret experimental beam weapon)

The Squadron Leader reported several blinding flashes emanating from the object which had started wavering and it started to decrease speed and altitude at the rate of 3000 feet per minute. It eventually crashed at a 25 degree angle into the dessert in Botswana

A recovery team was dispatched to the crash site where it was found that the UFO was embedded in the side of a large crater in the sand. The sand in the vicinity of the object was fused together due to the intense heat. One telescopic leg protruded from the side of the craft as if caused by the impact.

Large recovery helicopters were flown to the site and the first one reaching the scene overflowed the object at a height of 500 feet and immediately stalled and crashed. Five crew members were killed. It was found that vehicles approaching the object also developed engine trouble due to an intense electro magnetic field coming from the object.

Eventually a paint like compound was received at the site and painted on the object which appeared to neutralise the magnetic field.

The object was eventually conveyed to an Air Force Base and was taken to the sixth level underground. At this time it was totally intact. Whilst this was going on the American Team from Wright Patterson AFB arrived.

Whilst the recovery team and scientists were mulling over the object their attention was suddenly attracted to a noise from the side of the craft. They noticed that an opening had appeared in the side. It was a doorway but had only opened to a small gap. Attempts were made to open the door but without success so hydraulic pressure gear was used to force the door open.

As soon as the door opened two small alien entities staggered out and were immediately arrested by security personnel present. A makeshift medical holding area was set up. One of the entities appeared to be seriously injured but doctors withdrew when one of them was attacked by one of the aliens. The attacked doctor received severe deep scratches to the face and chest from the claws of the alien. (Slide 8) Arrangements were made for the UFO and the aliens to be transported to Wright Patterson AFB, Dayton Ohio, USA.

The cargo was flown out in two Galaxy C2 Aircraft on the 23rd. June 1989 accompanied by the American Air Force personnel.

-----

As a result of this information a person who will remain unnamed telephoned the South African AFB where the Mirage Fighters had been scrambled. This man was a Private Investigator in America for many years and therefore well versed in speaking American. He asked to be connected to Squadron Leader ..... the conversation went as follows:

Is that Squadron Leader .....

REPLY Yes.

QUESTION. This is General Brunel speaking from Wright Patterson. I have the document in front of me code named .....

(REPLY. Yes.

QUESTION. I am confused, this document does not say how many times you fired at the object.

REPLY. Who did you say you were sir.

QUESTION. General Brunel, surely Squadron Leader it's a straight forward question, how many times did you fire at the darn thing.

REPLY. I fired once sir, could you hang on so that I can go to a safe phone.

QUESTION. That won't be necessary Squadron Leader, you have told me what I wanted to know goodbye.

-----

In the meantime military personnel were contacted in America to try to find out what was happening at Wright Patterson AFB.

REPLY. Can't get any information about arrival of UFO but established that Wright Patterson was put on Red Alert on 23rd. June, 1989. (This is the day the UFO was reported to be shipped to Wright Patterson.)

-----

On July 31st. this year our informant arrived in this country and by prior arrangement took up temporary residence with Dr. Henry. He informed us that he was on route to Wright Patterson AFB on a military mission and would depart on the 6th. August. He contacted the South African Embassy from Dr Henry's home to let them know where he was staying in case they needed to contact him. He later made a sworn statement to us confirming his story. (Slide 9)

He had photographs taken with us (Slide 10. 11. 12.)

We were informed that various hieroglyphics were found inside the craft and stated that the military had been able to decipher them. (Slide 15) Dr. Will talk about this.

He also did a drawing of the interior of the craft and the general layout

He also showed us and permitted us to photograph two NASA passes which were for his use at Wright Patterson AFB

At this time we made contact with a second intelligence officer in South Africa who spoke to Dr. Henry personally. This officer told us that he had seen and had access to a series of black and white photographs of the captured aliens and their craft and a 50 page telex message from Wright Patterson AFB relating to the recovery of the UFO. He stressed how dangerous it would be to get the papers but stated that he would forward a set of the black and white photographs and a copy of the telex as soon as he was able.

One of the named American personnel who was present at the retrieval was later spoken to at Wright Patterson AFB by Dr Henry at the OSI apartment. (Henry Will speak about this)

RE: SPECIAL SECURITY ADVISORY. EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY. FOR ALL SOUTH BASE OPERATIONS AND SPECIAL SECTORS.

A SHUTDOWN HAS HERE BY BEEN ORDERED FOR ALL SOUTH BASE OPERATIONS AND SPECIAL SECTOR PROGRAMS. SPECIAL CONDITION PROCEDURES FOR SEQUENCE "BLUE FIRE" ARE NOW IN EFFECT. ALL ENLISTED PERSONNEL AND CIVILIAN PERSONNEL ARE TO BE BRIEFED ON A "BLUE FIRE" SCENARIO, ON A "NEED TO KNOW" BASIS ONLY. ALL SPECIAL SERVICE DIVISIONS, SPECIAL SCIENCES DIVISIONS AND EXECUTIVE SECURITY TEAMS WILL BE UNDER LOCKDOWN CONDITIONS OR ON RESTRICTED ROAM L.R.R.P. PROCEDURES.

ON 31 JULY 1991 AT 2000 HRS. A CIVILIAN ORGANIZED EVENT IS TO BE HELD IN THE TOWN OF RACHEL, NEVADA. THE INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ORGANIZED THE EVENT ARE FAMILIAR TO SECURITY TEAM PERSONNEL THAT HAVE HAD PRIOR CONTACT WITH PRIMARIES AND / OR THEIR SUPPORTERS. PRIMARY SUBJECTS ARE IDENTIFIED AS FOLLOWS:

1. NORIO HAYAKAWA / FOUNDER OF CIVILIAN INTELLIGENCE NETWORK
[REDACTED] *
GARDENA, CA.
2. GARY CLARK / AKA; SCHULTZ / FOUNDER OF SECRET SAUCER BASE EXPEDITIONS
[REDACTED] *
SANTA MONICA, CA.

* note — both of our home addresses were correctly shown here, i.e., before I blacked them out!

BOTH OF THE SUBJECTS OPERATE THEIR ORGANIZATIONS FROM A POST OFFICE BOX IN THE CITY OF GARDENA CALIFORNIA. ( PLEASE SEE PRIOR SPECIAL ADVISORY NOTIFICATIONS.)

BOTH SUBJECTS AND THEIR SUPPORT PERSONNEL WILL BE IN ADVISORY PERIMETER WITHIN A 48 HR. TIME PERIOD OF THIS NOTICE. ALL AREA PERSONNEL ARE TO REMAIN ON ADVISORY ALERT UNTIL 5 AUGUST 0500 HRS. AND PROCEED WITH CAUTION IF APPROACHED BY ANYONE BELIEVED TO BE AFFILIATED WITH THESE GROUPS. THESE SUBJECTS MAY ALSO BE ACCOMPANIED BY INDIVIDUALS FROM THE NIPPON TELEVISION NETWORK OR THE TOKYO BROADCASTING SERVICE OF JAPAN, IN ADDITION TO VARIOUS PRINT MEDIA PERSONNEL FROM VARIOUS ASSIGNMENTS BOTH NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL. ALL BASE COMMANDERS AND SECURITY TEAM PERSONNEL ARE TO INSTRUCT SUBORDINATES CONCERNED TO REPORT ANY HARASSMENT EITHER TO THEMSELVES OR ANY OTHER BASE PERSONNEL THAT THEY MAY BECOME AWARE OF. FAILURE TO DO SO IN A TIMELY MANNER WILL RESULT IN IMMEDIATE DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES WITH NO EXCEPTIONS.

THIS EVENT IS TO BE HELD AT "THE LITTLE ALE-INN" FORMERLY, KNOWN AS, "RACHELS BAR AND GRILL". MR. AND MRS. TRAVIS HAVE GRANTED PERMISSION TO THESE INDIVIDUALS FOR THE USE OF THE FACILITIES ON THE EVENING OF 31 JULY 1991.

ALL BASE SPECIAL OPERATIONS IN SECTORS CONCERNED ARE TO BE RESCHEDULED TO AN ASSIGNMENT DATE AFTER 0500 HRS. ON 5 AUGUST.

[REDACTED]

SPECIAL SECURITY SERVICES ARE HERE BY INSTRUCTED TO COMMENCE WITH PROPER PROCUREMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF SPECIAL SECURITY ADVISORY SECTIONS AND PRACTICES DURING THIS TIME PERIOD. IT IS EXPECTED THAT MEMBERS OF THESE GROUPS AS WELL AS OTHER FRINGE ELEMENTS WILL REMAIN IN AND AROUND THE GENERAL AREAS OF CONCERN FOR AS MANY AS A FEW DAYS PRIOR TO, AND FOLLOWING, THIS SCHEDULED EVENT.

ALL PERSONNEL BOTH MILITARY AND CIVILIAN WHO ARE BELIEVED TO BE OR KNOWN TO BE COMMUNICATING OR CORRESPONDING IN ANY WAY OR BY ANY METHOD WILL BE CONSIDERED TO BE IN VIOLATION OF THIS SPECIAL SECURITY ADVISORY AND THEREBY CHARGED WITH WILLFUL DISREGARD OF A SPECIAL SECURITY ADVISORY AND BE SUBJECT TO IMMEDIATE ARREST AND PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATION OF THE NATIONAL SECURITY ACTS.

Testimony of Mr. Don Phillips, Lockheed Skunkworks,
US Air Force and CIA Contractor
December 2000

Don Phillips was in the Air Force at Las Vegas Air Force Base during an event when UFOs were seen moving at enormous speeds near Mt. Charleston, northwest of Las Vegas. In addition, he worked with Kelly Johnson at the Lockheed Skunkworks—on design and construction of the U-2 and the SR-71 Blackbird. He testifies that we not only have these extraterrestrial devices, but have also achieved tremendous technological advances from their study. He states that in the 1950s and 1960s, NATO did research into the origin of ET races, and disseminated reports to the leaders of various countries. Mr. Phillips farther states that there are records and filmed documentation of meetings in California in 1954 between ETs and leaders of the USA. He lists a few of the technologies we were able to develop because of the ETs: computer chips, lasers, night vision, bulletproof vests, and concludes, "Are these ET people hostile? Well, if they were hostile, with their weaponry they could have destroyed us a long time ago—or could have done some damage." Mr. Phillips now develops technologies that can help eliminate environmental pollutants and reduce the need for fossil fuels: energy generation systems that use natural energies from planet earth.

DP: Mr. Don Phillips

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

DP: My name is Don Phillips and, I live in Los Angeles, California. I have worked with Government sponsored agencies, as well as spent my appropriate time in the military, as a civilian, but also as a military person. I did have experiences with what we would refer to as unidentified flying objects.

Let's go to a timeframe, when I was about 19 or 20. I entered college after high school, but I also went to work for Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. And, after a year of employment in the regular field of aircraft construction and design, I was asked if I would like to go to a new department, or, one that was already in gear for a new project. And, of course, I said yes, not knowing exactly what it was. But, I figured that it was in my best interest.

Now, my studies had to do with design, engineering, mechanical, electrical and aeronautics. I was a private pilot, at that time, and still am. And, at the time — what would it be 1961, '62 — I started my new job in what is called the Lockheed Skunkworks. I was introduced to the various divisions of the Skunkworks- purchasing, expediting and engineering. I served in all of those during the '60s, and, this went through 1965. Our projects were, of course, for special aircraft for the United States Government. And other agencies of the Government supplied pilots. When I left the employment of the Skunkworks to go into the military, I felt that this was something I wanted to come back to after serving my country.

I think it was 1965 when I first went into the military and discovered that some of the assignments that I was put on near Las Vegas, Nevada were very much in close proximity to our areas where we tested our aircraft-an area commonly-known as Area 51. We call it Dreamland, the Hog Farm, the Lake. The side that I know it from is that it is high security. I got a lot of feedback from people from my division at the Skunkworks as to what is happening out there. We are testing airplanes. And, everybody knows that it tested special aircraft, such as the Blackbird, which I am very proud of because that's my baby. And, it holds some of the world's records to this day.

Now, the thing about being in the military in that area is that we had radar sites attached to Nellis Air Force Base. Now, Nellis is a flight test and pilot training base for the U.S. military. North of Las Vegas, way up at the end of the north-east of the Gunnery Range, there is what we know as Area 51. But, across the highway that goes north from Las Vegas, is a site called Angels Peak. Angels Peak, in itself, covered the Area 51. But, it also covered a lot of other areas, like the Atomic Energy Commission test grounds to the west and to the north.

So Angels Peak was a classified radar installation. And, it's, a lot of radar installations, as we know them, are up in the middle of no where. We would monitor the aircraft coming from Las Vegas into Area 51 or whatever passed by. And, it was whatever passed by that became most interesting one night, in 1966, to '67. That night, I heard a lot of commotion about 1:00 in the morning.

We were at 8,000 feet; the radar domes were at 10,500, approximately. So I decided to get up and walked up to the main road, and up near my office. I got to the area where the fellows were standing — there was a group of about five people - and they were looking up in the air. And, I looked up in the air and saw these objects, lighted objects, moving at tremendous speeds. It was in the area slightly to the north and northwest of Mount Charleston. Right at that instant I saw these things making acute angles and traveling, I would estimate 3,000 to 4,000 miles per hour. And, then immediately making acute turns. I knew that they weren't ours. And, I had a special background with the Skunkworks, Lockheed Aircraft Advanced Development and Engineering, that said, these are not ours. And, having been a pilot, I'm thinking, if there are people in these craft, what kind of forces are their bodies taking? Then, I said, well, these have to be guided by some type of intelligent pilots.

It went on for about another 90 seconds. And, then, all of a sudden, they seemed to group, from what would be hundreds of miles in the sky to the west. And they came into a circle, rotated into a circle, and then disappeared. And, I thought, wow, what a show.

So, the security Sergeant happened to be on duty. And, we all looked at each other and said, gee, this is really something. And, he said, well, we shouldn't really say anything about this.

Well, I had a buddy that was chief radar operator named Anthony Kasar. And, Anthony was the first one to get off of the bus after the door opened- I was standing right up close to the doors when they opened up. I looked at him and- Anthony is a very large fellow with this blonde flowing hair, and a jovial spirit — and, he was as serious as anybody could possibly be. He was almost as white as a sheet. He took one step down the steps and he looked at me and he said, did you see those? And, I said, yeah, we've been watching them- some of the fellows have been watching them for the last four to five minutes. And, I've seen them for a little more than 90 seconds. He says, we saw them on the radar screen and we documented them. He says, they are not bogeys. They are not apparitions. They are real solid objects. And, of course, they would have to be in order to get a fix with radar, the kind of radar we used there, it would have to be a solid object. And, it's not that we tracked them with the radar- they would go in and out of the signal and register that way. He finally documented that there were six to seven. The speeds that we estimated were also estimated by the radar operators and their scopes.

SG: What did they estimate?

DP: They estimated, around, 3,800 to 4,200 miles per hour equivalent, ground speed. These things are darting across the sky. First they look like a star. And then they move, in any direction or make any kind of a straight line, or just hover.

Most of us had top secret and then there's a few that had above top-secret clearances. Myself, I dealt with documents of all types. And for my time period in the service, it was top secret. The people that would record the information, all this is recorded, and, it is documented. And then it is signed off. And then it is put in the archives. And, our division, our radar squadron, was part of the 26th Air Division, which was near Phoenix, Arizona. So, where the reports go from there, it could be the Pentagon. It could be the United States Air Force headquarters.

These UFOs were huge. And they would just come to a stop and do a 60 degree, 45 degree, 10 degree turn, after stopping. And, then immediately reverse this action.

When I was working with the Skunkworks, we signed an agreement with the National Security Agency, and the National Security Council, as well as the CIA. And, we kept very quiet about things because they always knew where we were and what we were doing. I automatically had that team spirit- we were a big family there. And, I was very proud of that, having worked directly for Kelly Johnson.

I was asked a question by a fellow businessman several years ago, in 1997: 'Do you think that some of the technology that you incorporated into that aircraft, came from outside the planet Earth? And, I said, it's very possible. But, I said, you have to remember, we'd still have to make it work here on planet Earth.

SG: Had you heard of antigravity propulsion systems being worked on while you were at Lockheed Skunkworks?

DP: The propulsion system that you are asking about, I heard that it existed. But, the left hand never knew what the right hand was doing, and, for good reason.

Again, they didn't want us asking questions. We wanted to stay focused on the projects that we were working on. I came in at the tail end of the U-2 project. That still continues, the use of that type of aircraft. The first four models that I had to do with design and the construction and the eventual flight test were not the first military models. We have another air force in this United States that works on contract. And, I won't identify that name. They worked it with contract pilots, very good pilots. So, our first four models were for them. They were very special models. And then came the SR-71, otherwise known properly as the Blackbird.

From what I learned over a period of years, anti-gravitational research was going. Maybe by consultants to the skunk works.

We know that there were some captured craft from 1947 in Roswell, New Mexico. And, yeah, they were real. And, yes, we really did get some technology from them. And, yes, we really did put it to work. And, we can thank people in the United States Army to have the foresight to put these technologies into industry for the benefit of the people of the world.

SG: We have retrieved extraterrestrial vehicles that have been studied?

DP: I know this to be a fact. We put it to use. But, it took us a long time to figure out what it was. And, then, figure out how we can use it and then, what to use it for. And, are those products useful for humanity. It wasn't until later on, in the '80s and '90's, when I founded a company called Light City Technologies, that I confirmed this.

It was a technology development corporation of a secret nature. And, we worked with data signals, avionics, computers. And, as I had talked with you before, we knew each other from certain agencies of the military in contract with the CIA, or other branches of what we call unseen industry. I would say that's a good term. We can term it black, deep black, or hidden.

Well, the knowledge that I have of these technologies, came from the craft that were captured here-I didn't see the craft, nor did I see the bodies. But, I certainly know some of the people that did. And, of course, they are passed on now, from their earthly bodies. But, there was no question that there are peoples, or beings from outside the planet, that have lived here for a long time. And, it isn't just something new that's been happening in the last couple of years. There's been NATO research conducted, joint research into this.

And, it's been documented as to who those races were at that time. This was back in the early '60s. What precipitated the need for our aircraft [the Lockheed Skunkworks U2, Blackbird aircraft], was the result of these reports [about UFOs] coming out from NATO. These reports were started in the late '50's. They were finished in the early '60 s and disseminated to the appropriate leaders of various countries. They were kept under a lock and key, if you will. And, the prominence or greater exposure of unidentified flying objects led to these reports.

We have records from 1954 that were meetings between our own leaders of this country and ET's here in California. And, as I understand it from the written documentation, we were asked if we would allow them to be here and do research. I have read that our reply was, well, how can we stop you? You are so advanced. And I will say by this camera and this sound, that it was President Eisenhower that had this meeting. And it was on film, sort of like what we are doing now. Bringing it up to date, the NATO report gave that there were 12 races. To make a final summary, they had to have contacts to go to these races in order to understand who they are, what they are doing, and what they could do. And the report didn't get into the context, but it certainly did verify that they haven't been here for just a few years, but rather hundreds, maybe thousands of years. And, this is written in the text.

Now, getting back to the ET technology that we might have used- the chips, lasers, the night vision, the bulletproof vests, and a few others- these were all developed. Well, the chips, what they call the central processing units, were developed in great strides. Now, why did that happen? Why, you put a few things together and do a bit of research, you think, wow- we did benefit.

Are these ET people hostile? Well, if they were hostile, with their weaponry they could have destroyed us a long time ago or could have done some damage.

I know that some of the technologies came from the extraterrestrial craft. And, the reason they crashed is that their guidance mechanism was interrupted by our radar and by some equipment that we have.

Even more validating for me was that one of our contract scientists for our private concern, Light City Technologies, Incorporated, worked with these technologies. He worked with a couple of those technologies while he was with a very prominent intelligence agency of the United States Government.

The one person that I've talked to outside of the military or the government level is Dr. Greer. And, the reason for that is because he makes it the professional approach, which is more in line with the way we were in the military.

About the ET lenses: there were some eyeball coverings that allowed the people inside the craft that made the journey across space to see in the minimal light that we know is now present during space travel. These lenses magnified light but also brought in a certain type of clarity. And my reason for mentioning this was that it was Earth doctors and specialists that got them into the removal and study of these lenses.

I think a lot of this has been well documented by Colonel Corso. You know, who was there with him? Well, there were a lot of people there with him. But a lot of the things that are said in the book by Colonel Corso, I can verify, corroborated by people that I have worked with and do work with now. So, I can say what I know about it is very true. The pathway that it took, that's another story. We talk about hidden technologies and why don't they let people know about it? Well, they hide it from the public. Well, hey, there is probably a good reason for some of it.

The Government didn't understand it themselves. Being in the Air Force, maybe we didn't fully know what it was. Take those technologies from Roswell, it took a while to figure out how they worked before we knew what to make from it and then how to get it into industry, how can it benefit the people.

The sensationalism that reporters and newspapers and writers put forth doesn't do the public any good. It feeds the desire for sensationalism in people. We naturally have a curiosity. But it can be fed with fact and truth, or it can be fed with sensationalism and half-truth- or no truth at all.

How I came to learn of that NATO report: the impetus for doing the report in the first place was because during that time period, late '50's- '60s, the Cold War was beginning. There were flying craft, UFOs, intruding upon the Russian airspace. And, then there were flying craft intruding upon our airspace and we were each blaming the other. In doing so, we were ready to push buttons. We came very close to pushing the buttons and would annihilate, perhaps, both sides. But, before the buttons were pushed, there was a secondary type of control ~ we call it human reason, it is something that machines can't do. They assessed the situation and said: wait a minute; it is happening to both sides, something is unusual here. Maybe we should do some research and then do a report, before we push the buttons.

And, thus, the report

I learned of the report through working for the CIA, while I was following the pathway on some information that had to do with NASA, that had to do with extraterrestrial visitation, and how real it was. That's how I came to know of the NATO report. But, it was also through the military channels. I had to make some phone calls. And, I did. Well, we worked with the Central Intelligence Agency as contractors. That was during the time of the Skunkworks. You see the CIA was one of our best customers. And, it is the CIA that has one of the world's best air forces. We have Francis Garry Powers — yes we knew him, and Schumacker ~ a lot of these people, they are very real people. And, they were often moved around by politics.

I do know that there were what we call these little beings. An engineer that did some work for us in the military was asked if he would like to do a special project. It was to build a flight trainer. He is a mechanical engineer and electrical engineer. And, through the process of building the trainer, he discovered that he was to work with some other people after it got to a certain point. The other people came out and they were these little humanoids- kind of startling, because they are all, you know, short, short people. But, very, very intelligent- like very intelligent children, super intelligent children. And, pretty soon it became like us sitting here.

And, what they were building was a trainer for us to learn how to fly their craft. It's a very interesting approach.

[See the testimony of Bill Uhouse. SG]

Other technologies from the retrieved ET craft were fiber optics that went into these computer chips. And, mind you, the signal didn't travel on hard wire as we know it. It traveled through a hollow core and in the form of colored light. And, each color had a spectrum, an assignment to do a certain thing. So, we had fiber optics that we put to use. They did a lot of research and reverse engineering.

We also got these things that are handheld scanners, that we scan the body, and determine what the condition is. We can also treat from the same scanner. Are these things real? Well, I can tell you, personally, that we've been working on them. And, we have ones that can cure cancer. Yes, diagnose and cure.

Again, politics, and God bless them, the FDA, and other people whose financial interests could be damaged by the release of certain technologies keep these out of view. But it can be a win-win situation for everybody. This is the way our technology development group views the use of technologies.

SG: Have you been associated with that group?

DP: I founded the organization that became a corporation in California. I was associated with it six, seven years before, so that would be, back in the '80 s.

We were contractors to the CIA while working for the Skunkworks. Working for the Skunkworks was five years. And, the military, I was in for a standard four.

In 1997, I met some of our expert recon people in the military. Highly trained and they could blow up cities and terminate a great number of people. But, they did an exercise -this is a confirmation. Security in the United States is constantly tested. That's the only way you are going to find out if it is bullet proof or where you need to improve. So this recon group was asked to breach the security at Area 51. And, they did a wonderful job and did it. They went through and they disassembled, piece by piece, the security at Area 51. And, you know, they would take out the pieces, piece by piece, and it would send a signal, an alert, and then they would hide. These guys were experts. They were expert recon people for the military.

SG: What did they find?

DP: What they found was that there were many areas at Area 51, and security is as crazy as ever there. You know? That says something for the security forces. And, they are a little bit nutty because I think they are too far out, away from humanity, most of the time. But the idea that there are craft being worked on is not just an idea. Yes, there were ET craft there. I talked to others that have worked on it. There are different levels there. What you see on the surface is not representative of all of the research areas that are there.

I know there are two prominent people that founded what we call Area 51. They are two friends. I had no idea. It wasn't until 1995 and '96 that we were talking about all this, swapping stories, if you will, that they told me that. They looked at me, and said, do you know who it was who actually went out there for Kelly Johnson? And, they named the names. But I'd like to keep those quiet for now.

SG: Okay. Okay, that's fine.

DP: Because they are still related to us. I mean, they are,

SG: They are still involved.

DP: For the benefit of their families, yeah. Well, they are retired, but they are still involved in this by contract.

SG: What corporations have been connected to these UFO projects?

DP: DuPont. IBM, what is now, I think, Western Digital, EG&G. I've had business dealings with EG&G. They make products for us. They have made products for our private sector corporation. They are a contractor- very good. They were responsible for the safe delivery and return of personnel to various work locations. But, that isn't all of it. That's just a small amount of their work.

During the Apollo landing, Neil Armstrong says, "They're here. They are right over there and look at the size of those ships. And, it is obvious, they don't like us being here." And, what he went on to describe was like a lineup of military planes, only here are these craft, and their people, observing them. Neil Armstrong, he said, they don't want us to be here.

SG: Do you have an audiotape of that?

DP: No, I have the written communication.

SG: Do you know if Kelly Johnson knew of the UFO and ET issue at all?

DP: Oh yeah. I would say he did. But, he was focused on developing a job. There were five people in the world of his caliber. And there were three of that caliber in the United States...

I learned one thing from an associate scientist- somebody for whom I have the greatest, the highest respect- who was with the CIA. He says the first thing we want to determine is who is turning the wheels on any project-this is what I did when I was with the CIA.

You see, who is turning the wheels? What is the motivation? Why is it being done? I asked, right after we first talked, why is Dr. Steven Greer doing this? I've done my research - maybe a lot of it. And, I've watched what's happening. And, you've been very dedicated to what you are doing, and professional. That's why I am here tonight. That is why I am speaking with you.

And, we still have those contacts around the world that can verify a lot of things.

SG: Do you know of anyone else that you feel may be willing to come forward now?

DP: We all have our agreements that we signed and they are still, you know, to be honored. However, there isn't any reason why certain information can't be shared when it is for the benefit of humanity...

Well, Dr. Greer, one of the purposes for founding this technology corporation that I did in 1998 was to bring forth these technologies that can help get rid of the toxins - that can clean the air, that help get rid of the need for so much fossil fuel or help it become more efficient. Yes, it is time. I can tell you, personally, that it has already started.

And I can prove what we have come up with. We can prove it.

SG: Are these energy generation systems, or, can you speak about them?

DP: The energy generation systems that the associates have brought forth deal with using natural energies from planet Earth. And, there is a natural harmonics of the planet. That's already been proven.

Testimony of Captain Bill Uhouse, USMC (ret.)

October 2000

Bill Uhouse served 10 years in the Marine Corps as a fighter pilot, and four years with the Air Force at Wright-Patterson AFB as a civilian doing flight-testing of exotic experimental aircraft. Later, for the next 30 years, he worked for defense contractors as an engineer of antigravity propulsion systems: on flight simulators for exotic aircraft—and on actual flying discs. He testifies that the first disc they tested was the re-engineered ET craft that crashed in Kingman, Arizona in 1958. He further testifies that the ET's presented a craft to the US government; this craft was taken to Area 51, which was just being constructed at the time, and the four ET's that accompanied the craft were taken to Los Alamos. Mr. Uhouse's specialty was the flight deck and the instruments on the flight deck—he understood the gravitational field and what it took to get people trained to experience antigravity. He actually met several times with an ET that helped the physicists and engineers with the engineering of the craft.

I spent 10 years in the Marine Corps, and four years working with the Air Force as a civilian doing experimental testing on aircraft since my Marine Corps days. I was a pilot in the service, and a fighter pilot; [I] fought in ... after the latter part of WWII and the Korean War Conflict, I was discharged as a Captain in the Marine Corps.

I didn't start working on flight simulators until about, well, the year was 1954, in September. After I got out of the Marine Corps, I took a job with the Air Force at Wright Patterson doing experimental flight-testing on various different modifications of aircraft.

While I was at Wright Patterson, I was approached by an individual who—and I'm not going to mention his name—[wanted] to determine if I wanted to work in an area on new creative devices. Okay? And, that was a flying disc simulator. What they had done: they had selected several of us, and they reassigned me to A-Link Aviation, which was a simulator manufacturer. At that time they were building what they called the C-11B, and F-102 simulator, B-47 simulator, and so forth. They wanted us to get experienced before we actually started work on the flying disc simulator, which I spent 30-some years working on.

I don't think any flying disc simulators went into operation until the early 1960s—around 1962 or 1963. The reason why I am saying this is because the simulator wasn't actually functional until around 1958. The simulator that they used was for the extraterrestrial craft they had, which is a 30-meter one that crashed in Kingman, Arizona, back in 1953 or 1952. That's the first one that they took out to the test flight.

This ET craft was a controlled craft that the aliens wanted to present to our government—the U.S.A. It landed about 15 miles from what used to be an army airbase, which is now a defunct army base. But that particular craft, there were some problems with: number one - getting it on the flatbed to take it up to Area 51. They couldn't get it across the dam because of the road. It had to be barged across the Colorado River at the time, and then taken up Route 93 out to Area 51, which was just being constructed at the time. There were four aliens aboard that thing, and those aliens went to Los Alamos for testing. They set up Los Alamos with a particular area for those guys, and they put certain people in there with them—people that were astrophysicists and general scientists—to ask them questions. The way the story was told to me was: there was only one alien that would talk to any of these scientists that they put in the lab with them. The rest wouldn't talk to anybody, or even have a conversation with them. You know, first they thought it was all ESP or telepathy, but you know, most of that is kind of a joke to me, because they actually speak—maybe not like we do—but they actually speak and converse. But there was only one who would [at Los Alamos].

The difference between this disc, and other discs that they had looked at was that this one was a much simpler design.

The disc simulator didn't have a reactor, [but] we had a space in it that looked like the reactor that wasn't the device we operated the simulator with. We operated it with six large capacitors that were charged with a million volts each, so there were six million volts in those capacitors. They were the largest capacitors ever built. These particular capacitors, they'd last for 30 minutes, so you could get in there and actually work the controls and do what you had to—to get the simulator, the disc to operate.

So, it wasn't that simple, because we only had 30 minutes. Okay? But, in the simulator you'll notice that there are no seat belts. Right? It was the same thing with the actual craft—no seat belts. You don't need seat belts, because when you fly one of these things upside down, there is no upside down like in a regular aircraft—you just don't feel it. There's a simple explanation for that: you have your own gravitational field right inside the craft, so if you are flying upside down—to you—you are right side up. I mean, it's just really simple, if people would look at it. I was inside the actual alien craft for a start-up...

There weren't any windows. The only way we had any visibility at all was done with cameras or video-type devices. [See the testimony of Mark McClandish. SG] My specialty was the flight deck and the instruments on the flight deck. I knew about the gravitational field and what it took to get people trained.

Because the disc has its own gravitational field, you would be sick or disoriented for about two minutes after getting in, after it was cranked up. It takes a lot of time to become used to it. Because of the area and the smallness of it, just to raise your hand becomes complicated. You have to be trained—trained with your mind, to accept what you are going to actually feel and experience.

Just moving about is difficult, but after a while you get used to it and you do it—it's simple. You just have to know where everything is, and you [have] to understand what's going to happen to your body. It's no different than accepting the g-forces when you are flying an aircraft or coming out of a dive. It's a whole new ball game.

Each engineer that had anything to do with the design was part of the start-up crew. We would have to verify all the equipment that we put in—be sure it [worked] like it [was] supposed to, etc.

I'm sure our crews have taken these craft out into space. I'm saying it probably took a while to train enough of the people, over a sufficient time period. The whole problem with the disc is that it is so exacting in its design and so forth. It can't be used like we use aircraft today, with dropping bombs and having machine guns in the wings.

The design is so exacting, that you can't add anything—it's got to be just right. There's a big problem in the design of where things are put. Say, where the center of the aircraft is, and that type of thing. Even the fact that we raised it three feet so the taller guys could get in—the actual ship was extended back to its original configuration, but it has to be raised.

We had meetings, and I ended up in a meeting with an alien. I called him J-ROD—of course, that's what they called him. I don't know if that was his real name or not, but that's the name the linguist gave him. I did draw a sketch, before I left, of him in a meeting. I provided it to some people and that was my impression of what I saw.

The alien used to come in with [Dr. Edward] Teller and some of the other guys, occasionally, to handle questions that maybe we'd have. You know? But you have to understand that everything was specific to the group. If it wasn't specific to the group, you couldn't talk about it. It was on a need-to-know basis. And [the ET] he'd talk. He would talk, but he'd sound just like as if you spoke—he'd sound like you. You know, he's like a parrot, but he'd try and answer your question. A lot of times he'd have a hard time understanding, because if you didn't put it on paper and explain yourself, half the time he couldn't give you a good answer.

The preparation we had before meeting this alien was, basically, going through all of the different nationalities in the world. Then they got into going into other forms of life, even down to animals and that type of thing. And... this J-ROD—his skin was pinkish, but a little bit rough—that kind of stuff; not horrible-looking, you know—or to me, he wasn't horrible-looking.

Some of the guys who were in the particular group that I was in—they never even made it. You know, when they gave you the psychological questions, I just answered them the way I felt and I had no problem. That's what they wanted to know—if you'd become upset—but it never bothered me. It didn't amount to much.

So basically, the alien was only giving engineering advice and science advice. For example, I performed the calculations but needed more help...I spoke of a book that—well its not a book; it's a big assembly with various divisions dealing with gravitational technology, and the key elements are in there, but all the information wasn't there. Even our top mathematicians couldn't figure some of this stuff out, so the alien would assist.

Sometimes you'd get into a spot where you [would] try and try and try, and it wouldn't work. And that's when he'd [the alien] come in. They would tell him to look at this and see what we did wrong.

Over the last 40 years or so, not counting the simulators—I'm talking about actual craft—there are probably two or three-dozen, and various sizes that we built.

I don't know much about the [ET] ones that they brought here. I know about that one [craft] out of Kingman but that's about it. And, I know the company that hauled it out of there—who is out here now—but... But, there's one that operates with certain chemicals.

I think these triangles that people are seeing are two or three 30-meter craft, that are in the center of it [the triangle]. And, the outside perimeter—well you could put anything you want, as long as these particular ones meet the design criteria, and they'll operate.

You know, there were certain reasons for the secrecy. I could understand that; it was no different than the first atomic bomb that they built. But they are getting so far ahead now with aircraft design. And, like I told you gentlemen earlier—that by 2003, most of this stuff will be out for everybody to look at. Maybe not the way that everybody expects it, but in some manner they determine...appropriate to show everybody. You know, a big surprise.

The reason why I said that is because the document I signed ends in 2003 and I'm not the only one who signed those.

But, that gravitational manual—if you ever get one of these volumes of documents, you'd be on top of the world. You'd know everything.

Testimony of Lt. Colonel John Williams, (ret.) US Air Force

September 2000

Colonel Williams entered the Air Force in 1964 and became a rescue helicopter pilot in Vietnam. He has an electrical engineering degree and was in charge of all the construction projects for the Military Air Command. During his time in the military he knew that there was a facility inside of Norton Air Force Base in California that no one was to know about. He heard that there was a UFO craft stored there and that people such as certain Senators including Bob Dole had visited the facility. Colonel Williams also relates another story that his father told him: One time attending a dinner party he had a conversation with a high-level RAND official who told him that the government was spending more money on antigravity devices than any other project in the history of this country.

JW: Lt. Col. John Williams

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JW: I'm Lieutenant Colonel John Williams. I entered the Air Force in 1964 and I was a pilot. I also had an electrical engineering degree background and that also got me in the engineering field. I was in charge of all the construction projects for the Military Air Command.

I can discuss Norton Air Force Base, and that as a result of all the Military Airlift Command bases under me [I knew about this facility]. There was one facility at Norton Air Force Base that was close hold ~ not even the wing commander there could know what was going on. During that time period it was always rumored by the pilots that that was a cover for in fact the location of one UFO craft. The reason for that location was that folks could come out, land at Norton, play golf, be part of a golf tournament and so forth and during that process could go by the facility and actually see the UFO. But I was never allowed in that area when I was there at Norton Air Force Base.

[See the testimony of Mark McCandlish which establishes that indeed a UFO was stored at this facility at Norton AFB. SG]

I heard this during my Vietnam career where I was a rescue helicopter pilot. Basically you're always together at the club and so forth and so close hold- many stories started to come out during that time period. It was there that I heard several stories along that line from different pilots. All that was known, because it was so close hold, was the fact that this facility did contain a UFO. This time period would have been in 1969 to 1970 when I heard that first. And I validated that the facility did in fact exist in the 1982 time period.

SG: You were able to validate that it existed?

JW: That's correct because I was responsible for that base's facilities from 1981-82.

SG: What kind of VIPs would be put in and out of there that might have seen these UFOs?

JW: It can actually be senators. In fact, it's my understanding that Bob Dole was at that facility. It's also possible that back in the early '50s that Eisenhower actually visited that facility.

Separate from the Norton matter, in the mid-1950s my father relayed to me the following. Before I get into that, I would like to state who he was and his background. During World War II he was responsible for the entire West Coast for the Signal Corps operation. He was familiar with electronics because he taught that during World War II, in the beginning. During a dinner party with a very, very close friend, a RAND employee was invited. This is located in the Ventura area, which was near their RAND operation. This story impacted my father and he relayed it many times to me. He said that during that party after several drinks this RAND official said that the government was spending more money on antigravity than any other project in the history of this country. Therefore he believed at that time that we had actually developed operational antigravity systems. That spending would probably have been started shortly after World War II, I would think. That this would be an ongoing effort for many years.

I basically understand that the person who relayed this information was at a high level there at RAND Corporation. The family friend who had this dinner party was one that was very affluent in the neighborhood—she was in charge of the Republican National Party for Ventura County. And she generally had upper echelon people at her party.

Testimony of Mr. Don Johnson

December 2000

Mr. Johnson was putting himself through college working at Century Graphics in 1971/72. Part of his job was to run blueprints through a large printing machine. Century Graphics used to get jobs from various military electronics firms such as Lockheed, Litton, Hughes and RCA. While he had a low clearance, there were times when his assistance was needed on top-secret documents. In one case he was working on a lithograph negative of the routes for all the American and Russian subs. In his testimony he states that he also worked on a huge electronic diagram from Hughes-Suma Corporation. In the center of the diagram in a large rectangle it said "antigravity chamber." When he completed his work he turned to the man training him showing him the verbiage. This man told him that he was not supposed to be working on that and for him to put it back and forget about it.

DJ: Mr. Don Johnson

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

DJ: In '71 or '72, I was working at this place called Century Graphics. I was on the night shift while I was putting myself through college. I had to run blueprints on this large printing machine as part of my job.

We used to get jobs from Lockheed, Litton, Hughes and RCA- whoever was doing electronics for the military at the time. So a lot of what we did were circuit designs and maps and things like that. I had a fairly low clearance there. I should also explain that sometimes they would have me working on things I shouldn't be working on. For example, one time I was working on this huge lithograph negative of the Pacific Ocean that had all of the routes for all of our subs and all the Russian subs. So there were times when there weren't enough people and I would have to work on things that were secret even though I didn't have the clearance. And this blueprint I'm going to tell you about was one of those situations.

So I worked at the end of the machine where the print would come out. I would fold it and then have to cut it and stack it and so on. So I'm pushing this piece through and it's a huge electronic diagram. In the middle of this diagram was this large rectangle and in the center of the rectangle it said, "antigravity chamber" on it. And it was from Hughes Suma - I think it was Suma Corporation. It had the little bug or the logo at the bottom of the corner. After I got through folding it I took it over to this old guy that was training me and working with me and he was the one pushing it through. I don't remember his name but I said, look, look at this antigravity chamber. And he says, you are not supposed to be working on this, and you didn't see that, and put it back and don't say anything about it before we get in trouble. And so I did- I didn't say anything about it. But it definitely said antigravity chamber.

SG: Did Century Graphics handle top-secret work?

DJ: Well, that Pacific map of the submarine routes was top-secret so, yes. I know that this antigravity chamber blue print was secret because I remembered him chastising me for bringing that up to him.

[Mr. Johnson corroborates the testimony of other witnesses that Hughes was heavily involved with antigravity propulsion research. See the testimony of Dr. B., Mark McCandlish, Don Philips, et al. SG]

Testimony of A. H., Boeing Aerospace in December of 2000

A.H. is a person who has gained significant information from inside the UFO extraterrestrial groups within our government, military, and civilian companies. He has friends at the NSA, CIA, NASA, JPL, ONI, NRO, Area 51, the Air Force, Northrup, Boeing, and others. He used to work at Boeing as a surface technician. He was introduced to four-star General Curtis Lemay and one day went to his house in Newport Beach, CA and spoke with him about this subject. Lemay confirmed the ETV crash at Roswell. AH's NSA contact told him that Henry Kissinger, George Bush as well as Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachov were all aware of the ET subject. His CIA contact told him that the USAF had shot down some of these spacecraft. A friend of AH's who worked at Boeing was part of crash recovery and personally saw and carried ET bodies. AH says that a group in the FBI discovered that radar testing was causing interference with some of the ETV's and that this was what was causing so many crashes. He also says that there are underground bases testing and maintaining extraterrestrial technology in Utah (reachable only by air), Enzo California, Lancaster/Palmdale California, Edwards AFB in California, March AFB, Eglan AFB in Florida, London England, and many other locations.

AH: A. H.

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

AH: I worked at Boeing Aircraft Company at Long Beach, California as a surface technician, working for both the commercial side and military side of Boeing (formerly McDonnell Douglas Aircraft Company).

Through Ham radio connections, I was introduced to four-star General and Chief of Staff of the Air Force - General Curtis Lemay.

I drove down to Newport Beach where he lived and rang his doorbell. And his wife Helen let me in. As soon as I walked in the front door there was a big bust of Curtis Lemay depicting him as Chief of Staff of the Air Force. We sat down and talked in his den. He put his feet up on his coffee table where there were Air Force magazines sitting. And directly to our left was a picture of him in the White House with President Kennedy and Curtis Lemay was fully dressed in his uniform.

And I asked Curtis LaMay and I said Curt, when you were in the Air Force out of the 100 percent of the sightings [of UFOs] that came into the Air Force how many of them remained not identified? And he said out of the 100 percent that came in only 35 percent of them could not be identified. And I asked well, why couldn't they have been identified. And he said because the craft were too damn fast. We can't catch them. In fact, he used some foul language in there too in his explanation.

And then I asked him about the Roswell crash, if that really occurred. And he looked over at me and him shook his head yes, that it did occur. And I said that I was particularly interested in the strange writings that were found inside. I asked if they were ever deciphered. And he said as far as he understood they were not deciphered when he was in office.

[This is corroborated by Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin.]

And then I asked him if he ever knew where these things were coming from, their point of origin. And he looked over at me again and he said, don't give anything to the CIA. He said they want their hands into everything. They usually do get their hands into everything and they get away with it. And I said what about the FBI? And he said no it's all wrapped up within the Central Intelligence Agency and they took it away from him. And he was angry. He was angry about this. In fact, he became so angry that he coughed and grabbed his stomach as if his stomach hurt.

SG(?): What I found very interesting about Curtis Lemay was that Senator Barry Goldwater tried to get close to the truth. When I sat down to talk to Curtis LaMay he was kind of apprehensive to talk to me about what I asking him.

So to open him up I mentioned that I met the former chief agent of the Los Angeles FBI, Richard Britsing, but he didn't know him. But then I mentioned a CIA agent who I met whose name is Brett Merrill, he is now passed away, who was living in Long Beach for a while. He moved to Layton, Utah and then he passed away from cancer. He didn't know this gentleman either but when I told him what they told me, then Curtis LaMay started to open up and talk about Roswell and the crash that occurred. And he told me that he was aware that it wasn't ours, it wasn't the military's, the Air Force or the Army or the Navy, and that it was a highly strange vehicle that crashed. And he took over the office from General Nathan Twining. Nathan Twining never told him anything either. Apparently Curtis LaMay was not aware of Twinings involvement in Majestic 12 [the super-secret group thought to have controlled the UFO/ET issue in the early days after WWII]. And by the way, Majestic 12 is real. MJ12 did exist. But it does not exist today. The name was changed. The positions are still the same. Henry Kissinger is very knowledgeable about what's going on. Henry Kissinger was in the loop I was told.

SG: Who told you this?

AH: A friend of mine who worked at the NSA [National Security Agency] told me this. He saw Henry Kissingers name on documents. He saw George Bush's name on some of the documents. He was made aware of what's going on. About 1978 Reagan was fully briefed on the alien presence. Reagan told Mikhail Gorbachov of Russia about 75 percent of what's going on. And then Gorbachov became very, very close to us. I find that highly strange.

A CNN reporter in Washington, D.C., the second time that Gorbachov came to America, was able to interview Gorbachov and his wife. When they got out on the street they drove the security detail up the wall. And a CNN reporter asked Gorbachov "Do you think we should get rid of all our nuclear weapons?" And his wife stepped in and she said, "No, I don't think we should get rid of all our nuclear weapons because of alien spacecraft."

Now CNN put this story on for the half hour, on CNN headline news; I heard this and I jumped up and put a blank tape in to record the next half-hour. Well, that story disappeared and you know who intercepted that. It was the CIA that got involved with that because I know that they were monitoring CNN and all international headlines at that time. They squashed that but I heard it. And this tells me that my information is correct about Ronald Reagan, from my NSA source. The secrecy is just total overkill as far as I'm concerned. And the Congress needs to know about this information.

The news media will not put the real information on because they still think it's a non-subject

The FBI agent, his name was Richard Britsing, is now head of security at the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City, Utah. And he had referred me to the United States Air Force office in LA, near the Los Angeles Airport, off of Elsegundo Boulevard and the 405 freeway and that they would be interested in hearing reports of close sightings, very close sightings and even landings of these things. And Curtis LaMay shook his head yes.

The CIA agent, Brett Merrill, told me that he had dealt with the United States Air Force regarding missiles to try to shoot these down when they come into our airspace. He told me that he was aware of the situation and it's extremely classified but he was aware of what was going on. He was a national intelligence agent. He said that we hit several of them in Nevada over Ely, Nevada and other portions of New Mexico near Albuquerque.

SG: Did he indicate what time frame these things happened?

AH: This was in the late 60s and 70s.

SG: Have you met other people who have dealt with this issue in the course of working at Boeing.

AH: Yes I have. I met a gentleman who was in the Army who was involved with several crash recoveries when he was in the CID. In 1947 when he was inducted in the United States Army, several of his friends were in the CIC, counter intelligence and they became very close to one another. And he handpicked a friend of mine that worked at Boeing Aircraft Company in Long Beach to become a part of ET crash recovery / retrieval in northern New Mexico.

He saw some of the aliens and witnessed the craft [and] guarded this crashed disc that had crashed, and they gave him an M1 carving rifle to guard against anybody who tried to get close to it. And they were given orders to shoot anybody without authorization. They recalled him on several other crashes. They had to fly him with blackened out windows to several of the crash sites.

SG: And this was someone that you knew?

AH: Yes, I personally know him. He is still currently alive.

SG: Is he still working or retired?

AH: No, he's retired.

SG: And do you know his name?

AH: Yes, I do.

SG: Can you share it?

AH: Not at this time.

[Such witnesses can and should be subpoenaed by Congress. The investigative media and the public need to demand an inquiry by the Congress so such witnesses can safely testify in an official setting. SG]

SG: Where did these crash events happen?

AH: One crash he believes occurred in the desert of New Mexico, northern New Mexico. And there was another one that crashed in Nevada, near Ely, Nevada. And there was another one- a total of three. He didn't know where it was because nobody wanted to talk about it. And they were all told to shut up.

SG: So when he was on-site he didn't really know where he was because he was flown in on an aircraft with the windows blackened so they could not see where they were going?

AH: That's correct. They were taken to several crash areas in an aircraft and then they were taken by jeep. They were told not to look out the jeep at all, to keep their eyes in one position. They were told not to talk to anybody. In fact, at one of the locations one of the military officers said, 'gentlemen, we're not here on a Hollywood movie set. This is a highly classified mission. You are not even supposed to talk to your family about this.' And they had to sign security statements that they would not talk about this for 50 years, regarding the crash sites that they were taken to.

My friend had seen personally the dead aliens. They had dark almond-shaped eyes, a rather large head- a little bit larger than a human head. Their bodies were about the size of about a nine-year-old child. They had four fingers, no thumb. He told me that they all looked like they came out of a mold because they all looked the same. And their mouths were just a small slit.

They had real small ears, no hair on the head, just really strange looking to him. He thought they were probably part of genetic research. But the technology that he saw in the craft could not be of human origin because of the fiber optics that were found inside. And some of the slide switches that they had inside the craft we didn't have and nobody else on Earth would have that type of technology.

This started in 1947. But there were more crashes than Roswell. What people don't understand is that there was one in 1948 and there was another one in 1949. The 1949 crash was a rather large craft and the people inside were a little bit taller. They were about 5'8" tall. They kind of looked like the ancient race around Palestine, probably about 3,000 BC.

He told me that he picked up one of these aliens and put it onboard one of the jeeps. And he said that it felt like it weighed only about 45 pounds at most, maybe 40. And they put them in body bags and took them to Wright Patterson

Air Force base at the time. Later they started taking some of them to Colorado and northern New Mexico and then later on to Area 51 in the late 1960s. All crash debris and technology and anything that had to do with the alien connected phenomenon, all went to Area 51 after that date.

These craft were circular shaped. He said that it was really strange metal. He rubbed his hand on it and it felt really smooth like somebody had just buffed it out with a buffer.

SG: Did he indicate how these crashes happened? One of the arguments is how can these advance ET craft keep crashing. Did he indicate how they came to be disabled?

AH: Yes, he said that as far as he could gather from his friends, the CIC, the FBI was checking into this too.

[See the FBI document on how powerful radar systems could interfere and down some of these extraterrestrial vehicles. SG]

They were interested as to why these things were crashing. And they found out that the radar testing in New Mexico was the cause of a lot of them that were crashing. When they would get too close to high powered transmitters they would interfere with their guidance control and they would just crash. The other craft that crashed we had shot them down with our military weapons.

One of the things that I do remember him telling me is that there is another alien group that looks a lot like the human race and they are called the Orange.

Through my mother at Boeing Aircraft Company (my mother is now deceased) I met one of her friends who is also now deceased — so now I can talk about it. My mother met a tube bender at McDonnell Aircraft Company, which is now Boeing. And his close friend worked at Northrop. He was working on the Stealth program at the time. This guy is an absolute brain with mathematical figures and fixing things and making things work and correcting everything to make everything work.

The higher-ups at Northrop were dumbfounded by this guy and they recommended him to work with the projects up at Area 51 in Nevada. And apparently he's been working up there for at least five years and they inducted him into the alien connected projects to work specifically on the technology and try to figure out how these things work, to back engineer them.

I asked him where they [the ET's] are coming from and he told me he said he could not answer that- that's so highly classified. And another reason why he didn't answer it regarding where these things were originating from is that his son is still working within the connected projects and he didn't want to even talk about it.

But he did tell me that he worked on the craft to back engineer them. He's aware of their existence. He knows that I met the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, General Lemay. He told me several times of the testing that took place at Area 51, that some of them come up behind the mountain. And they just blank out and disappear and then they appear about 15, 20 miles away within about 20 seconds and just reappear. And they do that back and forth ...

SG: These are made by humans?

AH: No, these are the real things. These are the craft that he has been working on. This is our military testing these ET vehicles up at Area 51.

I once asked this man, "Do you know of any openings up there? I would like to work up there at Area 51." And he said, you know you're better off working at Boeing because it's a very, very restrictive and repressive place to work. The security at Area 51- they have security within security, watching other people. And it drives them up the wall too- it drives the employees up the wall.

[See the testimony of Don Philips that corroborates this. SG]

That's why they have a big exodus up there of some of the employees that work there. They can't stand the environment up there because you can't do anything. You can't talk to anybody. He said it's horrible. It's a horrible place to work. Its like working in Russia when Russia was a communist country.

SG: For whom was this witness working at Area 51?

AH: He was working for Northrop. Directly for Northrop. He was not working for the military. He was receiving his paycheck from Northrop.

SG: So Northrop has an involvement with Area 51.

AH: Oh, yes. So does Lockheed Martin, Boeing Aircraft. Boeing does trucking for Area 51. Also Hughes is involved. Most of the major defense contractors have something to do with Area 51. Boeing trucks for Area 51. I do know that for sure. I found that out from a friend at Boeing that told me that they were hiring up there for trucking for some of the military sites. And I found out from him that he had personally gone onto Area 51, escorted to Area 51, from the main highway.

This witness is still alive. In fact, he knows where the aliens are originating from. As far as he understands there is an underground area there and there are a lot of extraterrestrial debris down below Area 51 and stored in some sort of a containment area. But he has never seen any extraterrestrials at Area 51 walking around and conversing with anybody. He just saw the craft and the technology that they're trying to extract from these vehicles to incorporate that technology into our fighters and possibly some of our space programs.

They have developed laser technology and sound wave defense mechanisms from studying these ET craft. They can use sound waves to blow up tanks and buildings. And some of the laser technology came from these craft he told me about. And I also found out that they are moving a lot of the personnel and some of the equipment and some of the extraterrestrial technology equipment and craft to a base up in Utah.

[I have heard from other deep insiders that this is true and that the most important extraterrestrial research facility is now totally underground and in Utah accessible only by air. SG]

He also mentioned that there is a base here in California near Enzo, California. And there is another base in the deserts of... I believe he said Tacone or Tahone. There is a base near Lancaster and Palmdale area, near Northrop. There is an underground area out there too that he was aware of.

[I have spoken to other deep insiders who independently corroborate this and confirm that both Northrup and Lockheed have facilities near Palmdale and in the Edwards AFB complex. Some of these facilities are manufacturing ARVs (Alien Reproduction Vehicles) and these are fully operational. See the testimony of Mark McCandlish. SG]

But he particularly stayed focused on Enzo, California. There are some underground areas up at March AFB that are researching some of this technology through Project Red Light.

SG: What is Project Red Light?

AH: Project Red Light is a program to test these vehicles and extract as much information as possible from the alien connected projects to find out how these things operate. They want to gain as much information for our fighters and bombers and for our space connected projects. I was told by people who were in the Army and the Air Force and people that worked at Area 51, all of whom corroborate what was going on regarding Project Red Light. And Project Red Light is still continuing as of this day.

So, Northrop hired him to go up there and help the cause up at Area 51 to try to find out how these things work. And I believe that he started in 1980. And he left there about 1997.

And by the way, Project Red Light and Project Grudge, they are all intermixed. The director of Project Blue Book, Robert Friend, told me this. He was fully aware of Project Red Light and Project Grudge / Blue Book Report No. 13 was written by him. Robert Friend used to work at Fairchild in Redondo Beach on Aviation and Rosecrance. We talked for about an hour on the phone ~ he was also reluctant to talk to me about the phenomenon until I told him that I met General Lemay and of course the CIA and FBI agents.

And so then he started to open up and talk to me about UFOs. I asked him about some of the crash debris that were taken to Wright Patterson Air Force Base after the Roswell crash. He told me that yes, some of the debris and the bodies were taken to Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, and some of the other stuff was taken to a base in Florida. And that shocked me because I never heard anything about a base in Florida.

[I have other sources who have identified Eglen AFB as a key facility in Florida. SG]

I said, you know I understand that you [Robert Friend] wrote Project Grudge Blue Book Report No. 13. And he said, yes. And I asked him, I said, where are these craft coming from? And he told me that he didn't even know where these craft were coming from. All he knew was that the aliens are real. He's aware that they are coming here, that they are penetrating our airspace. He said that we're trying to get a lid on this to try to minimize the sightings and quell the news media and the witnesses that are reporting these sightings to the news media. The Air Force wanted to push this thing under the rug and continue to research it and just get a handle on it. He confirmed that the Air Force wanted to steer the news media off on some crazy idea that these sightings were created by college pranks and balloons and meteorological problems. Robert Friend told me that the whole project was to collect as much information that they could and that a lot of the information was siphoned off by the CIA and the National Security Agency and people at ONI, the Office of Naval Intelligence.

Friend confirmed the fact that there were other agencies clamoring for control and in fact were going right directly to the President to get that control.

What he told me regarding the security ramifications were that if their military personnel talked about this they could be court marshaled or at least threatened to be court marshaled to get him to back down. Other intimidations would be to hold their paychecks back, transfer them to other bases where a lot of people would not want to go to, like Alaska.

My NSA contact was in the Army. The NSA is a part of the Army and he was in advanced intelligence gathering. He had a top-secret umbra clearance. He trained at the NSA, at Fort Meade, MD. And then they transferred him to a satellite monitoring station. He received several transmissions from the Pentagon and from other satellite monitoring stations of the NSA that they were tracking ETVs [Extraterrestrial Vehicles]. This is the lingo within the NSA, how they communicate back and forth is by using the term ETVs. Other military services refer to them as Bogies or a long time ago as UFOs. He told me that the NSA is fully aware of the extraterrestrial presence. We've intercepted many of their signals during the 60s.

[See the testimony of Harland Bentley and John Maynard who corroborate this. SG]

And we were testing transmissions to try to jam their transmissions and to try to communicate with them. He was aware of top-secret bases in Colorado that were monitoring the situation.

There is another base in London that is also monitoring the situation regarding the extraterrestrials through MI5 and MI6. He told me that the President of the United States, Jimmy Carter, was alerted to several events that were taking place overseas. This NSA witness had handled that transmission personally. Carter was brought up to speed regarding some events that were taking place over in Iraq and Iran where several near misses occurred. And some of the Iranian fighter jets — which we sold to them and were United States military aircraft ~ chased some of these vehicles and their instruments went crazy; one of the fighter jets almost crashed. But he pulled away from the object — a huge circular shaped object — and regained control of his fighter jet. This witness personally handled that traffic to the Pentagon through the NSA. It was all encrypted.

But Carter was largely left out of the loop - the control group didn't trust the guy for some reason. They were afraid that he would come out and make blanket statements to the news media and they just didn't trust him. They left him out of the loop. But he was informed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff that these events were taking place in Iran and Iraq. The ET's are monitoring our war efforts, especially regarding nuclear bombs and other experiments.

This NSA witness entered in 1974 and left the military, the NSA, in about 1985. He said that Henry Kissinger was involved with the study group back in the 50s to study the ramifications of this information and to determine what would happen if the information was leaked through a credible source. They were to do a study and pass off classified information to certain outside study groups such as the Rand Corporation and other think tanks of this nature.

Basically, these projects were controlled by the Majestic 12 group, which is no longer called MJ12. I'm trying to find out the new name of this group. My contact that worked at Area 51 knows the name of the group but he's refusing to tell me the name. Basically it's an oversight group intermingled with the National Security Council and the National Security Planning Group in Washington, D.C. There is a group called the National Security Planning Group that oversees everything. And Majestic 12 is intermingled with these people, the National Security Planning Group.

They have full control. They alert the President of what's taking place and he either authorizes or just says, hey, you guys go at it. They have full control. They have no Congressional oversight whatsoever. They answer to nobody except for the President of the United States. But they are trying to push even that aside, away from the President, from what I understand.

The Presidents no longer have that much control over these groups anymore. It's like a separate entity. How they are being funded, I don't know. I can't find that information out. I would love to find it out because I can tell you one thing, the General Accounting Office doesn't know what's going on, they don't know where the money is going. They don't know what these groups are doing, what they are studying. They hide it all in Black Project operations. They could say that it's for research on why ducks don't fly that much or something like that. And they would just hide it in top-secret programs. And the President is losing control. He's just absolutely starting to lose control over this. That's why Carter was not brought into the loop.

They don't want to release the information regarding where the ET's are coming from. But some of the locations are from Earth. There are underground bases here on Earth where the aliens have constructed bases a long, long time ago, before Columbus even discovered America from what I understand. This information would cause a major upset.

That's the kind of information that the NSA is worried about releasing. The NSA also collaborates back and forth with the NRO, the National Reconnaissance Organization, regarding tracking and intercepts along with NORAD, the Air Force, and the Army. They are all in on it and it's all connected with the top-secret group called MAJI Control.

SG: What did he tell you about MAJI Control and how that operates?

AH: MAJI Control is controlled by the Office of Naval Intelligence. It's a top-secret collection group, like the Central Intelligence Agency and the NSA. In fact, the ONI is just like the CIA. It's a top-secret organization within the Navy. It's similar to the NSA and the CID. It's all encrypted information. They have agents out in the field, just like the CIA, collecting information. It's all very, very top-secret.

[We have other sources who name Maji Control as a key control group. See the government document. SG]

Another project I learned about is Operation Looking Glass. It is a top-secret program project which is ongoing at Area 51 to try to see into the future, to try to predict and actually to see into the future using time travel. It's currently ongoing at Area 51 in connection with Project Red Light.

SG: Who let you know about that project?

AH: I heard this from a CIA buddy of mine - the same CIA agent that passed away from cancer up in Utah, Brett Merrill. He said it derives from the alien technology. He did not get into what it looks like or how big it is or anything like that. But it comes from the alien technology itself. The aliens can go into the future and find out what events will take place, many years into the future. And they can also go back in time too.

[As fanciful as this sounds, I have interviewed others who confirm this project and the fact that covert projects have mind-boggling technologies capable of altering space-time. SG]

Most of the craft operate on antigravity and electrogravitic propulsion. We are just about at the conclusion state right now regarding antigravity. I would give it maybe about 15 years and we will have cars that will levitate using this type of technology. We're doing it up at Area 51 right now. That's some of the stuff that my buddy worked on up at Area 51 with Northrup, who lives now in Pahrump, Nevada. We're flying antigravity vehicles up there and in Utah right now.

They gave them the clearance, top secret CARVE clearance. Bob Lazar would probably recognize that clearance.

Boeing has an operation in Salt Lake City, Utah right now. So that's not going to be any problem for our government to pull Boeing right in. They have moved most of the material- at least 35 to 40 percent of Area 51- to Utah. Lockheed and Northrop are very involved.

From all of the contacts that I've met, my final conclusion about this is that the reason why our government is afraid to release this information is because of religion. This would probably destroy how we see ourselves.

For example, the information that we have managed to collect regarding the face on Mars, which I know for a fact is real, would have a great impact. I have another contact at NASA, JPL that I haven't mentioned. I can't mention too much about it because he is still working there. This person that I know is very high up in NASA. He said they know it's a face. They know that it was carved by somebody other than us. In an imaging area, they know for a fact that the face on Mars is real and that it was not made by windstorms or trick of lighting or anything like that. They know for a fact that the face on Mars was made from an extraterrestrial race that came here to Earth about 45,000 years BC. They set up civilization here on Earth and went back and forth from Mars to our planet Earth to give us information and to further the race that they created, which is us. This is a shock to the human populace. And I think it's the big reason why NASA and the governments — especially the United States - are refusing to release this information. Because one thing will lead to another and somebody will come to the conclusion that we were created by an extraterrestrial race. This would be shocking to everybody here on Earth and this is what they are afraid of releasing. And that's my final conclusion regarding this investigation and who the aliens are. I really feel that the aliens that were on the planet Mars came here and set up our civilization as we now know it and they created these gray extraterrestrial aliens to watch over our planet to make sure that we don't blow up their creation and their planet...

Testimony of British Police Officer Alan Godfry, (ret.)

September 2000

Officer Alan Godfry is a retired police officer who served in the West Yorkshire Metropolitan Police in England from 1975 to 1984. On November 28th 1980, he and five other officers witnessed a UFO. He saw a diamond shaped object about 75 feet away hovering just five feet above the ground and he estimates it to be about 20 feet wide and about 14 feet tall. The bottom half appeared to be rotating and the top was stationary and it did not make any noise. Months after reporting this incident, he started being harassed. He was transferred 50 miles away and was eventually barred from entering his own police station. Contraband drugs were placed in his locker.

AG: Officer Alan Godfry

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

AG: My name is Alan Godfry. I'm a retired police officer. I served in the West Yorkshire Metropolitan Police here in England from 1975 to 1984, when in 1984 I had to retire due to an injury on duty.

The encounter took place on the 28th of November of 1980. Myself and fellow officers, six in total, witnessed a UFO. Three of the officers worked in Halifax in West Yorkshire, two of the officers were in a town called Littleboro, which is in Greater Manchester, and I was in a town called Talden, again in West Yorkshire.

The incidents took place at approximately between 5 a.m. and 5:15 a.m. on that morning. The three police officers in Halifax were P.C. Howard Turnpenny, P.C. John Porter and Policewoman Julie Baxter. John Porter was the dog handler and they had gone up onto the moors above Halifax to search for some stolen motorcycles.

Whilst up there on the moors, a weather front had come in, with very low thick clouds. They saw below the cloud level a large blue pulsating ball. It was doing movements, strange movements, not the kind one would expect from a helicopter or an airplane. The movements became so erratic that the police lady, Julie Baxter, got very distressed and got back into the police car. The dog handler John Porter's dog started barking loudly at this object. The object then came down and buzzed, swooped down above them and headed off toward Talmorden [sp].

About five minutes later two police officers were up at Blackshore Head, which is a moorland road, in a public house car park called White House. They sat there observing below them the town of Littleboro and Roxdale, when they became aware of an object hovering between two pylons. So much so they were both mesmerized by it. They reported this incident to their control room and one of them did a sketch drawing of what they were witnessing. It was only there for several minutes when it shot off, again in the direction of Talmorden [sp].

Approximately five minutes later, which would be ten past 5 a.m., I myself was in a police patrol car heading toward Burnleigh, on the A646. I looked up the main road I was traveling on and I saw approximately 150 yards up in front of me, an object. My first reaction was that it was a double-decker bus. Nevertheless, I headed toward this object. As I got close to it—within about 25 yards of the object—and what I saw quite baffled me.

I thought one of these hot air balloons had come down. Then I thought, it's five in the morning. Then I realized that this object was actually hovering off the ground; as I sat in the police car I could actually see under the object. It was hovering about five feet off the ground. The span of it was taking much of the road up, so it was about 20 feet wide, because the road's pretty narrow just there. And over the top I could see the road lamps, so I'm estimating the height of the object was about 14 feet.

I sat about 25 yards away looking at it. I put on the patrol car's blue lights, headlights, hazard lights, anything you can think of. This was totally blocking the road. It was diamond in shape. It appeared to be in two halves joined together. The bottom half appeared to be rotating, the top half looked like it was stationary, and it also I thought it had dark windows or panels that went all the way around.

I was absolutely gobsmacked. The bushes and the trees that lined the road were shaking very, very violently, as though there was a strong wind blowing but my car was apparently stationary. I didn't feel any vibrations in the car, I didn't hear any noise, it wasn't making any noise, not that I could hear.

I tried the UHF personal radio that all police officers carry on them. I tried the car radio, which is on VHF. None of the frequencies worked.

[Such electromagnetic interference is not uncommon in very close encounters. See the testimony of Navy Commander Bethune and others. SG]

When I was deciding what to do about it, I picked up a pad and I decided to draw it. Whilst I remember starting to draw it, I can't remember ever finishing the drawing, because at that time there was a large bright, terribly bright flash of light as though a thousand photographers had all taken a photograph at the same time. After that, which only a matter of seconds, I was about forty, fifty yards further up the road, actually driving the police car. If my memory serves me right, the blue light wasn't flashing, the hazard lights weren't flashing and I didn't have my headlights on.

I turned the car around and went back to where this object had been, because it had gone. It had been raining all night and the road surface was wet through. But not where this object had been- there was a whirlpool dry surface there.

I realized that when this flash had happened there was definitely a large chunk of my life missing, you know, time that could not be accounted for.

Twenty years ago, I didn't even think about UFOs, extraterrestrials, anything like that. At the time I was more concerned - believe this or not- that that thing was blocking the road. That was my chief concern - I know it sounds silly now. But that's how I took the actual sighting. I didn't go, wow, this is a flying saucer, or wow, this is from somewhere else. I thought, what the hell's this thing doing blocking the road.

It's totally nothing like an aircraft. You see, aircraft fly, don't they, unless you're a jump jet. This thing was actually hovering and it was moving and I suppose it comes in the classic UFO, unidentified flying object, status.

As time went on and I became aware of the other police officers' sightings, it was a great relief to me. You can't imagine what a great relief that was to me, because you can understand being a policeman and what my colleagues' reactions within that small community might have been.

But when I found out about the three police officers in Halifax and then months and months later the two police officers in Greater Manchester, that was a relief. I'm not crazy; I did see it.

There was a form, believe this or believe it not, actually in our police station, on how to report a UFO sighting to the Ministry of Defense. You sent it on a teleprinter as we had in those days. So my report, together with the three police officers in Halifax - same division, same police force - went to the Ministry of Defense within 24 to 48 hours. When I came on duty that night I had to do a statement and I presume the other police officers did theirs at the same time. I know they did do them because I spoke to them.

And I do know that nearly 15, 18 years after the event they deny ever receiving that report. Because a journalist who was writing a book, quite rightly wrote the Ministry of Defense and asked would it be possible to review the reports of these police officers. The letter from the Ministry of Defense to this gentleman says that regarding Alan Godfry's encounter and the police officers from West Yorkshire, etc., we have no record of it!

I was absolutely amazed at what happened after that. My life just turned upside down in an instant. From being a happy go lucky chap, within a space of six months I was put through hell and turned into one of the most horrible persons you could ever imagine coming across. Purely through harassment, stress, victimization, you name it, I had it.

It started very subtly and it built up. One day I arrived at my place of work and was told I was being transferred 50 miles away, to Wakefield. I was settled in my home, I was married, had three children, and the middle one had just been in hospital for about 12-16 weeks with birth disease of his hip and he was still in a wheelchair. My wife had just had our third child. I didn't want to go.

The second incident, I arrived back off holiday and I found out I had been moved. As from nine o'clock that day, I was transferred not to Wakefield but to Halifax. It was very, very inconvenient. The fact was I hadn't got a car, for a start off. And the shift pattern we work in the police would make it virtually impossible to get there for parade duty at quarter to six in the morning. The first bus that left wouldn't get you there at quarter to six in the morning, you follow me? But I had to go and I went. And instantly upon arriving at Halifax I was taken out of the public domain. I was told I wasn't to mix with the public.

[Note the similarity of this treatment with US military testimony from Major Filer et al regarding sudden transfers of personnel after major events. SG]

I was later ordered to appear at a hospital for an exam. We arrived at Stanley Royal Hospital and lo and behold it isn't a general hospital at all, it's a psychiatric hospital. At this time I became very, very concerned. So much so that I said to my colleague, whatever you do don't leave me here. If I have to go to be interviewed, you come in with me. He was absolutely wonderful. He was fully aware—we'd been ex-colleagues from the previous police station—[of] what had been going on. So we went into this examination room and two psychiatrists sat in front and a lady sat over there taking notes. They started off with the usual, your childhood and things like that. It soon became apparent to myself and my colleague what was going on. They said, "we understand you hallucinate." I said, "Pardon?" "We understand that you have hallucinations and you've been seeing little green men and flying saucers."

Well, I just hit the roof and my colleague said, "Whoa, whoa. Let me tell you something. I've seen one and so have a lot of Alans colleagues. He named some and they just sat there with their jaws down.

I thought I'd come here for a medical examination on this injury, and I told them what the injury was. I said, I'm not injured up here [in my head]. I said this incident happened two years ago and I told them the story, very quickly. I was working yesterday. Well, they said we were told to check out your psychiatric stability. Because they feel that you're not quite right. And I said whoa, let me tell you something: when you're going home tonight and you're in your car, if you come across an object like I came across, what are you going to do about it then? I suppose you're going to ring the police up. I said, well I was that policeman and there's nobody I could call for back up- and when I wanted back up, this is what's happening.

Later, I went back to my old station and someone said Alan, you're being barred from the police station. And I said, what's happened? (They thought I knew.) And I said, know what, what's going on? And they said, this afternoon between the 6-2 shift finishing and the 2-10 shift starting they got all the officers on parade together, the two shifts together. And the order was going to be read out at the night parade as well. And the order was that P.C. Alan Godfry had been barred from entering the Talmorden [sp] police station, he's not to be allowed in unless he's on official duty, and when he is in here he's to be escorted everywhere he goes. And when it was asked why they were told "because things have been going missing."

Now, I hadn't been in Talmorden [sp] police station since being transferred, bar once when I had to go back on a court case I was involved in.

I was livid. So much so the following day I demanded to see our division head. I asked him if he knew about this and he said not officially, no. I said, let me get this straight: did you tell me that you as head of this division are totally unaware that one of your officers has been barred from one of your police stations by one of your underlings and you don't know about it other than you heard it on the golf course yesterday. I said, who runs this division?

So I threatened to have the solicitor issue a writ. I've now given you notice that I'm fighting back, that the worm has turned. I've done everything you've asked me to do. I haven't spoken to the press about the UFOs or the document I had to sign. I haven't spoken to anybody. And yet you are persistently giving me grief. You've tried to have me certified crazy etc.

Later, the sergeant and I went down to my locker and I tried to put the key in, but the lock mechanism at the back dropped on the floor. When we opened the door, where my hat had been, there were contraband drugs that shouldn't even have been in the police station, never mind in my locker. Now, I can only presume that's what it was because I didn't test it. My first reaction was to get rid of it, which I duly did. It went out of my locker and down the toilet.

Shaken, afraid—there isn't a word that can describe how I felt. Believe you me, I sweated. I told the sergeant, you've got to back me on this Jim, you've got to back me on this. You looked in my locker at ten o'clock and there was nothing there. He was a bit panicky himself; he said, you watch your back, Alan.

Anyway, we managed to get on, finish the tour that night and went home at six in the morning. When we came back on later the same day, back on as night duty, I was called to one side and it was our internal affairs. They said we want to look in your locker. I said, what for? Never mind what for, we want to look in your locker and we want you present there. You can have another officer present with you if you like. I said, will you come with me, Jim? So we went down there. Of course the lock was already on the floor- I left it like that. I just said, the lock's broken and I acted surprised that the lock was broken, you know

There was nothing there, other than my uniform. They were upset- oh they were upset. They were absolutely livid. I said, what's the matter? What are you looking for? What am I supposed to have in here?

SG: The implication here is that they were attempting to frame you.

AG: Well it isn't an implication, that's what actually happened!

[Mr. Godfry was lucky to have found the planted drugs before the internal affairs officials came in. I know of others not so lucky and am certain people who have known too much have been framed and imprisoned unjustly to keep them quiet and out of sight — or to destroy their credibility as a witness. SG]

Testimony of Mr. Gordon Creighton,
Former British Foreign Service Official
September 2000

Mr. Creighton spent many years in the British Foreign Service. He spent 10 years in China and in 1941 he saw a UFO while at the Embassy. In broad daylight he saw a disc-shaped, silent UFO with a blue white light on top flying very fast. In 1953 he spent some time with the Military Defense in Whitehall and worked on the floor underneath a department, Air Technical, dealing with UFO's. He says that a UFO landed on the estate of Lord Mountbatten in the south of England near Southampton.

GC: Mr. Gordon Creighton

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

GC: My name is Gordon Creighton. I spent a good many years in the British Foreign Service. I was in the Far-Eastern Department, so I became a China specialist. And I had already done Russian at Cambridge so in the end I had these two languages, which, of course I used a great deal in this work. I spent 10 years in China. And it was there in 1941 when I was with the Embassy that I had this sighting of what we call a UFO.

I would say it was whitish, disc-shaped, totally silent, and flying extremely fast. It had a bluish light on top, on the apex. It was that bluish color that you get in arc welding and it was coming on rhythmically. Well, I never forgot that and I put it in the back of my mind.

SG: Was this daytime or nighttime?

GC: Oh, daytime, mid-day. And it was not high. It was flying underneath the clouds. It certainly was very fast because it was much faster than the famous Japanese fighter, the Zero, which we were already seeing at that time.

I then went to the Military Defense in Whitehall, which was quite close to the foreign office of course and worked as an Intelligence Officer, in view of my knowledge of Russian and Chinese. And I was working there on intelligence matters to do with those two countries. The fact was that physically I was on the next floor, underneath this department, which we knew was dealing with UFO's. So (a) I had seen something in China, and (b) I was now underneath this department, which was dealing with the same subject. So I already felt very certain that the UFOs were real.

SG: What year would that have been?

GC: This would be '53.

SG: And do you know what this division was called which handled the UFO matter?

GC: I think it was Air Tech, Air Technical. I was quite sure, you see. I wasn't one who believed that UFO's might exist — I was satisfied they existed.

I've met Germans who have seen them of course, German pilots. I've talked to RAF people who certainly saw them.

SG: How are the Foo Fighters seen in WWII described to you?

GC: They were described to me always as small, globular, either silvery or golden, or fiery, perhaps a foot or two wide. I imagine they were telemetry devices of some sort. I understand a very interesting thing happened in Germany. After the war when the allies were occupying Germany, one of our bombers was flying over Germany, very low of course. It was not pressurized flying very low with the waste-hatch open. Apparently, one of these things came in and flew up and down inside. Of course, the whole crew of eight or so saw it. And it then flew out again. And so it probably took a total reading of every man there, you know, a picture of him and took him and his blood pressure and his state of mental development and spiritual development, the whole lot, probably. And out it went. And you know, in Brazil where I was some years later, one crashed at a place called Ubatuba. And the bits were salvaged. And I think it ended up with the Americans in the end. And I believe it was found to be very largely magnesium.

Later we started a magazine, Flying Saucer Review and two of the first requests we got were from the Duke of Edinburgh and from his Uncle, Earl Mountbatten. Now, the interesting thing there is in that same year, '54, it was announced to the press that the Duke had requested the British Military Defense to give him a copy of every UFO report they had. So that shows his interest at a very early date. And Naturally, the magazine went to him from then on. And it is still going to him. In fact, I also send it to Prince Charles. And of course it went to his Uncle, Lord Mountbatten until he was assassinated.

Reporter Dorothy Kilgallen was in London and she was reporting back. And she said, "Me and my husband were at a cocktail party last night and we met a man, a man whose name is known to every American, who told us the story about the crash of a craft with small occupants." But, I interpreted that as being a British crash. I didn't know that it was Roswell.

But the interesting thing is that we do know about a landing on the estate of Lord Mountbatten, which is in the south of England down near Southampton. In the early '60's, he had a man working on the estate - a groundsman. And this chap, one morning - it was wintertime and there was snow on the ground - saw a UFO hovering. And he saw it land. He was pretty shaken when he came into the house. So they took this man - his name was Bridges - he had been in the British Army and the war. They took Bridges in to see Mountbatten. And Mountbatten asked him to tell his story. And he opened, pulled out a drawer, and got a lot of different types of UFO photos out and showed it to him, you see, was it this one? Was it this type? And apparently Bridges indicated the one that was more or less like it. And then they got a girl, a secretary, to come in and Bridges made his statement. They made six copies of it. Bridges signed them all. And they gave him a copy to keep and Mountbatten put the other five in the drawer. So you see, there had been landing on the estate of Mountbatten. And UFOs were Mountbatten's great interest.

We now know that Stalin was quicker off the start than the Americans were. Stalin became aware at a very early date, in '47, after the UFO crashed in New Mexico. Stalin was collecting reports from all over the place. And one day he called in their top astronomer and showed him all these reports. And Stalin said to him, sit down there, look at that and what do you think about it? And apparently he said, well, can I take it home and look at it? Stalin said, no, you are going to sit here in the Kremlin until I get your answer. So apparently he gave him the answer. He said, yes, it's not of this world. It is not of this Earth, it's extraterrestrial. And then Stalin, apparently, wanted him to take over the research regarding UFOs. But he said, I'm an astronomer and mathematician- I don't really want to do that. And of course, he went on to be the head of the whole Soviet rocket program.

Obviously, from the American point of view it was desperately important that they should keep it top-secret.

The end of time for any of this secrecy arrived when the Soviet empire dissolved because there wasn't that danger any longer.

Very little has leaked out over here. A lot less has leaked out here than over on your side. They really have kept the lid on it well here in Britain.

I asked J. Allen Hynek, my good friend, what do you think caused all these UFO events to start? Assuming they've always been there, but what caused this great interest after '47? And I remember he thought for a moment and he said, well, obviously the atom bomb. If you think of, if you accept the multi-dimensional theory, it is highly likely that we've done a hell of a lot of damage. In some areas we might have done even more damage there than we did here. And if you kick a beehive you shouldn't be surprised if bees come out and look at you. And if you've hurt them they might even sting you. And so my answer is that this is an enormously complicated problem.

If man carries on as he is, he is going to destroy himself. Man could have survived forever with bows and arrows. He's not going to exist forever with this present technology. One or the other is going.

I am certain that measures have been taken by agencies to terminate people who appear to be inconvenient or troublesome through knowing too much.

I suspect that this has happened with at least one editor of Flying Saucer Review. I suspect that it happened with M.K. Jessup in the States. I'm very positive about James McDonnell.

[See the testimony with Dr. Wood. McDonnell was a respected scientist who knew the UFOs were real and testified with data before Congress in the late 1960s. SGJ

I cannot understand why that man, who had a perfectly happy life, should kill himself as he did and to do it so terribly.

Kennedy may have been engaged in a bit of a struggle with the CIA in trying to get more information on the UFO subject. And, the story goes, that he might have been thinking that he ought to take it up with the Russians. Now, if he were thinking of taking it up with the Russians, the CIA may have thought this was a premature and very dangerous thing to do and that might account for his termination.

In the States, certainly there has been crashed craft. I'm sure the American authorities have got corpses preserved, quite a number of them. And I suspect that some other countries have too, possibly the Russians.

Testimony of Sergeant Karl Wolfe, US Air Force

September 2000

Karl Wolfe was in the Air Force for 41/2 years beginning in January 1964. He had a top secret crypto clearance and worked with the tactical air command at Langley AFB in Virginia. While working at a NSA facility he was shown photographs taken by the Lunar Orbiter of the moon that showed detailed artificial structures. These photos were taken prior to the Apollo landing in 1969.

I was in the United States Air Force from January 18, 1964, until October 18, 1968. I got out of the Air Force four months early to go back to school, basically. When I left, my rank was sergeant. I had a top—secret, crypto security clearance. I had worked with tactical air command at Langley Air Force Base, Virginia, the 4444th reconnaissance technical group.

The group was involved in photographic reconnaissance. They were working with the U-2 planes, the spy satellite photography, before anyone knew we had it. At that point in time no one knew that we were doing spy photography, spy satellite photography. Of course, no one knew we had the U-2 program operating, or what the capabilities of that program were. We also did gun camera and reconnaissance film from C-130s, all sorts of aircraft that were going into combat situations. We processed the film for that.

It was 1965 — I believe it was about June or July of 1965, sometime in that timeframe. I was a photographic technician, with a background in electronics.

The organization that I was in was a brand new installation. It was put in place to facilitate the escalation of the Vietnam War. So we were in a new facility and I had come there in January of 1965 to start that facility up. Also, one of the things we were involved in was doing automatic terrain sensing. We had simulators that did terrain - you put a huge map in the simulator, a terrain map, and you flew a camera over that and did a recording of the terrain, and then they installed that film in a plane and the plane could then fly in under radar. It was called ATRAN. No one knew we had that capability at the time as well. So we were installing all that equipment.

At any rate, I was in a color lab one day when my boss, Staff Sergeant Taylor, came over to me and said that they were having a problem with some equipment on the base and it was the first lunar orbiter program, where they had a mission to pretty much locate the first landing sites for the 1969 lunar mission for the astronauts. So he said they were having some problem with equipment over there. It was similar equipment to what we had- it was computerized contact printing equipment. He wanted to know if I would go over and take a look at it. He said to me, it's an NSA facility. At the time, I didn't know what NSA was - I was pretty naive. I thought he said NASA. So in my mind, for a long time I thought it was a NASA facility that I had gone to. But I remembered him saying NSA and converting it in my own mind to NASA.

The NSA is the National Security Agency. I didn't know much about the National Security Agency until probably ten or fifteen years ago.

So I was asked to go over to this facility on Langley Air Force Base, where the NSA was bringing in the information from the lunar orbiter. I packed up some tools and went to the facility. A couple of officers took me into a very large hangar. As I walked in, there were people from other countries, a lot of foreign people from other countries in civilian clothes, with interpreters with them, with security badges hanging around their neck.

[See the testimony of John Weygandt regarding the international nature of a base in Peru at which he was based when an ET craft was shot down. SG]

The first thing I thought to myself was, if this is NASA what are all these foreigners doing here, what are all these people from other countries, speaking another language? It didn't make any sense to me. I was really quite impressed with that, it just didn't grok. What are all of these people doing here? And they were very quiet, very reserved, and there was a very peculiar pall hanging over them. They had a very concerned demeanor.

So they took me into this laboratory. I took a look at the equipment. There was an Airman Second Class in there - I was an Airman Second Class as well. He turned the equipment on and put it through its paces. It didn't do what it was supposed to do - and I saw what was going on with it. I said to him, we'll have to take this thing out of the lab if we're going to work on it. We can't work on it here in the darkroom environment. So he called someone to get some people to come in and move it. It was about the size of a small apartment refrigerator. It wasn't something you could easily move.

So everyone left the facility, left the darkroom, except this Airman Second Class and myself. We're waiting for someone to come to remove this piece of equipment. So while I'm in there I said to him, "I'm really fascinated with this process, how did they get the images from the lunar orbiter to the laboratory here?" He went through the whole process, describing how the various radio telescopes around the world were linked and they telemetered the data into Langley Field. At the time I didn't know what the real purpose of this darkroom and this operation and this facility was. I thought this was where they were bringing the data in and then releasing the images to the public. I had no idea that there were other issues involved in this facility.

So he starts telling me all of this information, and I knew that what we were doing was classified anyway and that he could only share a certain level of what he was doing with me, because of the compartmentalized nature of our jobs. At any rate, he told me how everything worked- he showed me the equipment where the digital information came in, where it was converted to photographic images. They were doing 35mm strips of film at that time, which were then assembled into 18 by 11 inch mosaics, they were called. There was a digital signature and a gray scale on every 35mm strip and those strips were from successive passes around the moon. They would take and build up a photograph. They would scan one section of the moon and then another and another and then they would get a larger image. So this mosaic then would be put in that contact printer and printed.

So he was showing me how all this worked. We walked over to one side of the lab and he said, by the way, we've discovered a base on the backside of the moon. I said, whose? What do you mean, whose? He said, yes, we've discovered a base on the backside of the moon. And at that point I became frightened and I was a little terrified, thinking to myself that if anybody walks in the room now, I know we're in jeopardy, we're in trouble, because he shouldn't be giving me this information.

I was fascinated by it, but I also knew that he was overstepping a boundary that he shouldn't. Then he pulled out one of these mosaics and showed this base on the moon, which had geometric shapes - there were towers, there were spherical buildings, there were very tall towers and things that looked somewhat like radar dishes but they were large structures.

[See the testimony of Larry Warren. SG]

So I didn't say any more to him, because I was concerned again that somebody was going to come in at any moment, would catch us having this conversation and we would be in real trouble. I realized that he was telling me this information because he didn't have anybody else to talk to. Probably in that laboratory, he was probably one of the few enlisted people and he was a worker bee. He had a high-level security clearance, obviously. But he couldn't share that information with anybody else. And in those days we didn't. When you had your security clearance you took it seriously. That's the way we were raised and we stayed bound by those agreements.

So it was rare that someone would do something like this. But this fellow and I were the same rank, I think he was very distressed. He had the same pallor and demeanor as the scientists outside the room, they were just as concerned as he was. And he needed to discuss it with somebody.

So that was the end of it right there. I didn't take it any further than that. I just filed it away and I began to do whatever. But the interesting thing, every day that I went home I would think to myself, I can't wait to hear about this on the news. So I'd turn on the TV and look at the news to see if they're going to announce that we've discovered a base on the back side of the moon- Being really naive, you know. And of course, here it is thirty-some years later and we still haven't heard about it.

I'm not sure what the resolution on those photographs were but I know that we could discern from the satellite photography we were doing at our installation the license number off a car at that point in time. So I know we had that level of technology available. Whether or not it was on that lunar orbiter, I don't know. This also always brings to question in my mind why we're getting such low resolution on photographs that we receive from Mars and any of these other missions. The resolution of these photographs is very low, when we've had since the early '60s the capability of much higher resolution. So I'm not sure what that's all about. That question always comes up in my mind.

[This is an important point: Images released to the public are sanitized and altered to eliminate evidence of these objects or ET facilities. See the testimony of Donna Hare.

SG]

If I compare it to what I'm seeing now, because I do have photographs that have artifacts in them that are similar to what I saw, they're massive. Some of the structures are half a mile in size. So they're huge structures. And they're all different sized structures in different photographs. Some of the shapes, as I said, were - some of the buildings were very tall, thin structures. I don't know how tall they were but they must be very tall. They were angular shots with shadows. There were spherical and domed buildings that were very large. They stood out very clearly; they were large objects. It's interesting because I tried to relate them in my own mind to structures here on Earth, and they don't compare to anything that you see here in scale and structure. They're similar to a degree. I tried to relate them to metal structures and I couldn't see a metal definition, they're more like a stone structure but a fabricated stone.

Some of the buildings seemed to have very reflective surfaces on them. A couple of structures that I saw reminded me of cooling towers at power generating plants, they had that sort of a shape. Some of them were just very straight and tall with a flat top. Some of them were round, some of them looked like a Quonset hut, with a dome, like a greenhouse.

The particular shot that I saw, there were several clustered together over a landscape, a fairly large landscape. There was one building that had a dish-like shape to it but it was very large. It looked like a radar dish but it was a building. There was another building near it with a truncated top, with an angular top that was truncated.

I didn't want to look at it any longer than that, because I felt that my life was in jeopardy. Do you understand what I'm saying? I would have loved to have looked at it longer, I would have loved to have had copies. I would love to have said more about it, discussed it more, but I knew I couldn't. I knew the young fellow who was sharing this was really, really overstepping his bounds at that point.

I felt that he just needed somebody to talk to. He hadn't discussed it, couldn't discuss it, and he wasn't doing it for any ulterior motive other than the fact that I think he had the weight of this thing on him and it was distressing to him.

[This is a familiar theme: the weight of the secrecy is overwhelming and very stressful. I have seen and learned classified information on this very secret subject from over 400 such witnesses and can confirm that knowing these things can be stressful. Words indeed fail to convey the burden of such knowledge, particularly in a world that continues to be deceived on such an important matter. SG]

In my case, I ultimately did have a cryptologic security clearance. When I did have that clearance, I had access to all of the imagery from the U-2s, from the satellite photography. I had access to everything we were doing. The thing that was interesting about my job as an electronics technicians was that I got to go into every area of the facility. I got to go into the war room at SAC, Strategic Air Command, and did maintenance on equipment there.

So I would see a lot of data that people generally wouldn't see with my rank. Normally you would go into your job, you would do your one little task. If you were a photographic interpreter, that's all you did. You didn't discuss what you did with anyone else. If you worked on U-2 imagery, you worked on U-2 imagery. If you worked on satellite imagery, you worked on satellite imagery. But you didn't discuss your job with anyone else. You only did your task. If you were a photographic processor, you only processed the images, you were not allowed to discuss what you saw in those images with anyone else. We were briefed extensively about what this compartmentalization looked like. You didn't have conversations about what you were doing.

So for me, I got to go into all these different areas and see what each of these people were doing. Some of them did share what they were doing. They would have photographs of the missile emplacements above their desks that they'd discovered. Or they'd have photographs of the missiles on the decks of the Russian aircraft carriers. Or I'd see various images from the satellite photography around a missile emplacement in the Sinai Peninsula, as an example. We had in one room in our organization a map of the Sinai Peninsula at that time that was made up from satellite photography, it was a mosaic. And it was sixty feet high and sixty feet wide; it was massive, with great detail. It was fascinating. I saw vehicles on this satellite photography that you could read the license plate on. They actually showed me that. So I know that that was something that was real.

At any rate, getting back to the compartmentalization. I had access to lots of different areas only because I was a technician moving from area to area. The only other person that would have that kind of access would have been an officer with a high-level security clearance that had a need to know. Bottom line, if you didn't have a need to know there wasn't any reason to discuss what you knew with anyone else. Even if someone asked, you couldn't discuss it with them.

Everyone wears a security badge with a specific color and you know that that color represents a specific level of security clearance. As you move from area to area within an organization you get into higher and higher levels of security area. You go through a gate, you go into a vault, you exchange your badge for another badge of a higher level of security. You're briefed on your job as to what your level of conversation can be with another person. I was told don't ask, don't discuss, just go in and fix the equipment.

We would sit down with a security officer and he would review what your activities were, what you were doing, what you were allowed to do. They didn't ask you what you'd seen, they knew what I was seeing because they knew what I had access to. I was told to be very cautious when I was off base, I was told not to drink, I was told not to get intoxicated, I was told not to do drugs. I was told to be very cautious of people striking up a friendship with me, because there were people who were gathering this sort of information, there was a lot of espionage around the base, military espionage or foreign espionage. At any rate, I was told don't let anyone take my photograph. Be very cautious about where I traveled, when I traveled. I knew that I couldn't go anywhere for at least five years without telling the State Department where I was, after I left the military.

[See the testimony of Merle Shane McDow and others who had similar restrictions. SG]

Any time I traveled I had to notify and get permission, even in the United States. They had to know where I was all the time. As an example, if we went to Vietnam there was always someone there with us, with a gun, ready to annihilate us basically if we should fall into the hands of the enemy. They didn't want the enemy to get us; we would be killed instead.

So we knew we were operating under these sort of conditions. Your life was in jeopardy all the time, should you fall into the wrong hands. So we were aware of that. I was told when I left that I would be investigated on a regular basis to make sure that I wasn't involved in any peculiar activities that didn't suit the government's needs.

My security clearance expired in — I believe it was either October or January of 1998. It was about 1998 that I actually discussed what I had seen with my sister, because she was ineresred in the phenomenon.

I read Colonel Corso's book, The Day After Roswell. In the book he said a lot of fantastic things and he also said near the end of the book that there was a base on the backside of the moon. When he said that I said, a-ha. So I began to believe that everything he was saying was true. He was saying a lot of really profound things about the crash in Roswell and alien technology and whatever, and how it had been mainstreamed through the office of foreign technology by himself. So I knew that he was probably telling the truth. It just said to me, this guy's telling the truth. Because I've had this experience and I know it's real.

I was a little irritated that the government had been lying about all this for years and covering it up. I felt it was time to get beyond that. There's a lot more weight to this than I realize, a lot more cover-up than I realized. A lot more deception than I realized was going on.

Testimony of Donna Hare, Former NASA contractor employee
November 2000

Donna Hare had a secret clearance while working for NASA contractor, Philco Ford. She testifies that she was shown a photo of a picture with a distinct UFO. Her colleague explained that it was his job to airbrush such evidence of UFOs out of photographs before they were released to the public. She also heard information from other Johnson Space Center employees that some astronauts had seen extraterrestrial craft and that when some of them wanted to speak out about this they were threatened.

DH: My name is Donna Hare. During 70 and 71 I worked in Building 8 of NASA for a contractor, Philco Ford. They changed their name several times. Over the years, I worked in the photo lab and in different areas of the company on and offsite.

During the 70s, I don't know the exact date, I walked into the photo lab, into one of the restricted areas- I did have a secret clearance. I walked into a restricted area which was not my company- it was the NASA photo lab. And there they developed the film from the moon and satellite pictures, everything that's done by NASA.

One of the gentlemen I had been friends with and I still talk to occasionally pointed my attention to one area of this mosaic. It was one panel of a mosaic which are several panels put together to form a larger picture. I believe they were satellite pictures but I'm not sure. They were aerial looking down. And I said, this is really interesting.

He explained everything. And then, with a smile on his face he said, look over there. And I looked. And in one of the photo panels I saw a round white dot. And at the time it was very crisp, very sharp lines on it. And I said to him what is that? Is that a dot on the emulsion? And then he's grinning and he says dots on the emulsion don't leave round shadows on the ground. And there was a round shadow at the correct angle with the sun shining on the trees. I looked at him and I was pretty startled because I had worked out there several years and had never seen anything like this, never heard of anything like this. And I said, is this a UFO? And he's smiling at me and he says, I can't tell you that. I can't tell you that. What I knew he meant was, it was [a UFO] but he couldn't tell me. So I said, what are you going to do with this information? And he said, well, we always have to airbrush them out before we sell them to the public. And I was just amazed that they had a protocol in place for getting rid of UFO pictures on these things.

[Ms. Hare describes speaking with other Johnson Space Center employees about the Apollo project and the astronauts.]

So as a precaution they [the Astronauts] were put in quarantine for a little while. This particular man was in quarantine with them and was part of their debriefing. He said that a lot of them talked about their experiences seeing these craft follow them. I believe there were three on the moon when they landed. And I think, this is the best of my memory, that the code word was Santa Clause for these craft.

[See Harland Bentley's testimony regarding his monitoring similar events while at a top-secret listening post in California. SG]

He said that some [of the astronauts] who wanted to talk were threatened. They'd signed papers not to talk. They would have their retirements taken away. I was just overwhelmed with that piece of information so I started asking questions. Certain people that I knew were key people in the organization so I'd take them away from the site. We'd go to lunch and I'd talk to them. And alone they would tell me things and then swear if I ever said they said it, they would say I was lying. One gentleman that I knew very well was in quarantine with the astronauts. He said, just about every one of them has seen things when they went to the moon. In fact, one said that craft were on the moon at the time of the landing. But this man has disappeared off the face of the Earth. I've tried to find him but I only have his name. I've given it to Dr. Greer.

I also met a security guard that was forced to burn a lot of UFO pictures. He came into my office and he was very frightened. He said, Donna, I heard you were interested in this subject. He said, I used to work out there. And one day some soldiers came in fatigues and had me burn pictures. He said that he was burning them and he was forced not to look at them. But he was tempted. He looked at one of them and it was a UFO on the ground. Shortly thereafter he was hit in the head with a gun butt and he still had a scar on his forehead. Now, this gentleman was terrified. He was scared out of his mind. And he also said that in the picture was a UFO with little bumps on it. It looked like it had just landed.

It's very hard knowing about this. But again, I have talked, and the people that know about it, know about it. It's like a little underground. They will come to me and talk to me in private. But they are afraid. Most of them are very afraid. I guess I'm not afraid because I wasn't debriefed. There was a point in time when I had some people come out and tell me I shouldn't talk about this. They didn't threaten to kill me but I got the message I shouldn't talk about it. But I'd already talked about it so much it didn't really matter anymore. And like I said at the [1997 CSETI] congressional briefings, I really started feeling like this topic was like sex. You know, everybody knew about it but nobody talked about in mixed company. I'm waiting to tell more whenever there's a congressional hearing where I could be protected. I trust Dr. Greer. I feel he's done everything he said he would do as far as protection, secrecy of what I give him, for now. I want it to come out when it's necessary and proper and can do some good. I don't want people going around that are trying to get rid of these people or hurting them or challenging them or making them so frightened they move away-like this one particular man I know of who has just disappeared off the face of the Earth. This one man, he has disappeared. I just don't want that.

One of the things that I'm upset about is that good people are forced to do illegal things. And I believe that this information should be given to the American [people].

Testimony of Mr. John Maynard, (ret.) Defense Intelligence Agency,
October 2000

John Maynard was a military intelligence analyst for the Defense Intelligence Agency. In the course of his 21 year career he saw evidence of the military's interest in UFOs in a variety of ways: electronic communications which did not originate from earth; military photos of UFOs. While at the DIA, he became familiar with the compartmentalization process of maintaining secrecy. He saw spy plane photos with clear UFOs in them.

JM: John Maynard

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

JM: My name's John Maynard. I'm a retired military intelligence analyst and retired in 1980. I was in the military for 21 years and started off with the Army Intelligence Security Agency as an analyst. I went on from there to work for several different organizations with the military, and ended up with the DIA at the end of my career, as an administrator in charge of most of the documents for the Requirements and Evaluation division.

As far as being aware of what was in the intelligence world regarding UFOs and Extraterrestrials, this came early on in my career in the early 1960s. Some of the radio communications that I was analyzing for the Army Security Agency were a little bit more than just the normal type of traffic. I think at that point when I became too curious is when they decided to let me go from that position.

I went on from there to investigate different aspects of what was going on with UFOs. When I got to Europe I was approached by a few of the counterintelligence people there that had information on my background as far as analysis goes. I became involved in looking at where people were moving drugs back and forth, as far as the military was concerned, and at the same time, I ran across the UFO problems that people were having—particularly sightings in Europe. I did preliminary investigations for these people and turned reports in on what people were saying; what was going on.

But getting back to my initial exposure to UFOs—that was connected to work in Okinawa, where we were analyzing traffic patterns [electronic communications] of the Chinese at that particular time. Every once in a while, I would run across an anomaly that wasn't really within the pattern of the type of traffic that would be known within our military network.

When I questioned this, I would always be pushed off to the side, and they would say, "Well, you don't have to worry about things like that." But I just couldn't let it go—I still don't. I pursue it to the ninth degree, without getting myself in trouble. But I did get in trouble that time. I found out that there was more to these communications than was normal, and that they were not basically earth-bound [were not coming from earth].

And the further we dug into it, the more you noticed that it didn't belong with the normal traffic that was being broadcast. I couldn't trace any particular origin, and that's what got me really interested in where this was coming from. Knowing a few friends that worked in the communications department, I sought their guidance on which way it was going. I guess that was my downfall, because they weren't quite as good friends as I thought they were.

SG: And what did you learn from that?

JM: Basically, that the communications really weren't coming from within China itself—they were coming from another location, but they would not really divulge it. One of my friends just kind of pointed to me off at the side and threw his thumb up in the air. And I said, 'Is that a good sign or not?' And he said, "No." And in private, very private talks, he admitted that they were not earthbound signals.

We didn't really have a space program that would be moving that kind of traffic, nor did we have the communications systems and satellites at that particular time that would ... I'm talking about the late 1950s, early 1960s. So as far as time-frame goes, it had to be something else besides just us. Sputnik hadn't been up that long and neither had the American satellites.

I think that that was really my downfall—I realized it had to be extraterrestrial—so they found a way to get rid of me and they did it very well.

So anyway, while in Europe I researched these UFO reports, and we got quite a bit of information about the sightings. We would get drawings of what the vehicles looked like, whether they landed or not, whether they saw any people with them—extraterrestrials, things like that. And, it just made an exciting career for the next two years while I was over there.

SG: And for whom were you making these reports during this time?

JM: Basically they were going to the CIA, some to the DIA, and some to the Air Force, OSI—Office of Special Intelligence. What they were using the information for, I never learned.

There are several different projects that I ran across later in my years when I was in Turkey in the mid-1970s—76, 77, [and] early 78, when I left. I was an administrator and worked for NATO, Land Southeast Headquarters.

I inquired with a couple of my Turkish military friends, and finally got one general to actually admit that there was UFO activity in this certain area of Turkey. He said, "Oh yeah, it's a great area if you want to see UFOs, I'll take you out there some time."

Once, while in the Pentagon, I was sent to try and get some files from Colonel Corso, and he made a comment that was really funny at that particular point. I didn't really connect it with anything until later. He says, "You have no idea at all what we're about, do you?" And I told him, 'No, sir, I don't.' He said, "Well, some day the technology will be out there that has been totally back engineered." It went right over my head at that particular point, but I just told him yes, sir, and off I went like a good little private, where I was supposed to go. I didn't tell anybody what he had told me. I just kept it in my mind. I reported back to my superiors who had sent me, that Colonel Corso promptly just dismissed me from his office and I just left it at that.

That happens all the time in the Pentagon. Materials are kept very tightly by the owners. Years later, while at the DIA, I saw some documents that pertained to extraterrestrials. They were code-worded. A normal person reading it may not catch it—it would go right on beyond them. These were top secret documents. I imagine most of them are still classified. A lot of them pertained to Salt 1 and Salt 2—the strategic arms limitation treaties with Russia.

I also saw pictures of UFOs from—I believe it was called—the National Intelligence Photographic Center [NIPC]. Once in a while an anomaly would show up on the pictures that didn't belong there—a round object, a triangular object. They were not markings put on the photograph that indicated some place or anything like that. These were above ground. These anomalies came up in certain photographs and things that we received at our office at DIA and, we always thought they were interesting. They came from the NIPC, which I believe was the National Intelligence Photographic Center over on Hayes Street right there in Arlington.

You knew that they were not part of something that was placed on the photograph, like a marker. It was not a normal type of object, particularly the oblong ones or the circles or the triangular ones—the triangles were kind of funny, with a rounded corner on the tail end of it. These were taken most generally with the Talent Keyhole Satellites, and they would show these objects—these UFOs in them. They would be objects from the TK11, TK12 shots that were taken, that showed the anomalies. Sometimes you could actually track it photograph by photograph as it moved across the [sky]—you knew that it moved.

I had a rather interesting incident, not in an organization that I belong to as far as the DIA, but it was an office put within my area at DIA. Since it was in my area of security, I received the code name to go in there and to look at the office. It was called Omni Project... It dealt with radar satellites. I was talking with one of the sergeants over there in a little show room they had, and I noticed the satellite's positioning. I said, "Now this is supposed to be a system that tracks radar anomalies on earth, right?" He says, "Yep, that's what it does." So I ask, "Then why are half of them pointed towards outer space, towards the moon, towards areas that are just blank space?" I said, "At least half of those satellites that you got up there aren't looking at Earth—well what are they looking for?" He says, "Well you got to have a need to know to know about that." I said, "I see, in other words, who's coming?" And he says, "We don't know." I just thought it rather odd that they were tracking stuff from outer space.

I also did work with the Camp David accords and assigning the SR-71s, the Blackbird, to map the Sinai, and there were several reports at that particular time that the Blackbird had been accompanied by something that wasn't from this earth. The photos of the Sinai would show anomalies that weren't part of the terrain, weren't part of the people, weren't part of the atmosphere.

In Intelligence, compartmentalization is probably the whole thing. There is a real big misnomer out here in the civilian world about classification. There are basically three classifications: confidential, secret, and top secret. And that's it. It doesn't go any higher than top secret. They come up and they call about umbra and they call about this one, Omni. They called about TK, Talent Keyhole and other projects like that. Well, people have to realize that I had Eumbra documents that were only secret, not just top secret. It was not the same.

I'll get into the background of what Intelligence [does], how they break things down: they keep pretty much each organization an island unto itself. You don't have cross-departmentalization a lot within the programs. Let's say I have an umbra clearance. Well, people say that's so high above top secret. No, it's not. It's a compartment—it is strictly a compartment—it's not more. Top secret is as high as you go. Ultra is another compartment. That's something entirely different and has to do basically with the President. So you can't fool around with it. So that's it. You have islands unto yourself. Each one does [its] own particular type of analysis.

The one that I worked for was called Requirements and Evaluations, at the DIA. We were the ones that made the determination to fly the birds out of Wallops Island or somewhere else—to go up and put a satellite up.

We were DC3. There was a DC4, and there was a DC5. I would have to really dig back into my background papers to give you exact names for each one—that's how compartmentalized they become.

One of them did strictly analysis—that's all they did, and they would feed it to us in Requirements. But, we didn't really see all of what they did, and didn't see all the material they did. They gave us the finished product, and we would look at the finished product and make our determinations of what we were going to do from there. That's basically the way it is. Omni Project, which was the radar satellite—it was an island unto itself. If you didn't have an Omni stamp on your badge, you didn't get into their office—period, end of subject. Same thing with people with TK or many other things—Umbra, Ultra—same right on down the line.

The NRO, National Reconnaissance Office, is basically run by the Air Force. The Reconnaissance Office, from my understanding from people that I've had contacts with since I retired, has taken on a lot more responsibility—particularly towards the UFO and extraterrestrial activities.

You could say that they picked up where Blue Book dropped off. Blue Book was basically an Air Force project for themselves, but those activities finally fell under the purview of the National Reconnaissance Office.

Now it is basically a joint service, but it is run by the Air Force and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. They have a very ominous job. Not too much is ever really known about exactly what they do, but they're running the successor to the SR-71, which is supposed to be a Delta-type aircraft capable of [flying from] Los Angeles to London in about 18 minutes—so it goes near space. It's pretty quick. Satellite imagery has pretty much gone to the background. You've still got Talent Keyhole. You've still got Omni. They've got a couple of others up there now that I don't even know the code names for anymore, but most of the Reconnaissance is done by aircraft.

As far as anti gravity, they've been working on it for a long, long time—I know that—but basically what I've seen is the magnetic pulse engine. It has a very unique signature when it flies. It has normal type fuel, but it also has a magnetic pulse set up to it. The signature is like a soap-on-a-rope-type of contrail behind it.

A government is widespread, as everybody knows. It's into everybody's pockets and everybody's life all over the place. The same thing holds true for the UFO/extraterrestrial subject, but very, very few people really [have] the full knowledge of what's going on. It's held very tightly within black covert operations. If you want to take a good close look at some of the background on it, you can go to civilian organizations outside of NSA, which are direct contractors for NSA—like Dryden Industries. Why are they flying the SR-71 on Reconnaissance using Navy pilots? What are they looking at? What is NSA looking at, when you think about that? Why are they doing these particular things? They are not using it for training, that's for one thing.

Within the organization at the executive level, I would dare say that the National Security Advisor, when he comes on board, is fairly well treated as in-the-know from the top at NSA.

His knowledge is still limited, because he's only an appointee, and at that particular point, a new appointee at the CIA is the same way. They will have knowledge, but very limited knowledge. Only some people within the black covert areas will have very specific information about what's going on.

But, not very much is known about the NRO—it's one of those organizations that's so low profile...Any time the question comes up, it's strictly an entity that does reconnaissance in the Air Force, period. It leaves a lot of questions. But as far as UFO and intelligence and extraterrestrial matters go, it's right at the top—and I would say that the President has limited knowledge of it. I know Carter did not have any knowledge whatsoever. And I worked right there with the organization, President Carter's organization. They kept it pretty secret.

SG: Why do you think it's being kept so secret?

JM: I think that they made a mistake at Roswell. Rather than admitting it, they covered it, and they covered it because UFO and extraterrestrial activity has been going on a lot longer than this government will admit. I thought it was comical the way Bush—George W.—threw the ball into Cheney's court saying that, of anybody who would probably know more about this than anybody else, it would be Cheney. He has some very interesting knowledge...

Of corporations involved in this matter, Atlantic Research Corporation is one of the big ones. It's not very often heard about. It's an insider beltway bandit, if you want to call it that—very low profile—mostly has all of its work done within Intelligence. TRW, Johnson Controls, Honeywell: all of them at some point or another became involved with the Intelligence field. Certain works, activities were contracted out to them. Atlantic Research was one of them—way back. These are entities that were created out of people in the Pentagon to become a "beltway bandit": [they] received projects, grants, and monies to do certain projects that were so highly classified and compartmentalized that you know only about four people would know what was going on. So it was that tightly controlled.

You would have to look at corporations that were started by people who were retired from the military. Bobby Inman and his little oversight group out there in California [SAIC], for example. Some other things like that. So we would ask the question, who really is controlling JPL? Why was JPL started? Others: Ames Laboratories, Fort Detrick. Some very interesting things come out of Fort Detrick. And Harry Diamond Laboratories... been around for a long, long time. Don't hear much about them, because they're all basically military contracted, and they are in a particular specialty.

I don't know if you've ever seen any back engineering notes—how they do it and stuff like that. Very unique. You can get an engineer to tell you how they do it, and the specific notes that you do. You take it forward from somebody's notes, and you can build the item—just from the back engineering notes. Got to take it apart to find out how it works.

I can think of some stuff that we've gotten out of Roswell. There was also a crash up in Canada in the mid-50s that was kept very, very hush, hush. There were definitely some engineering projects dealing with those things.

About weapons and space: I think that we can go back to a comment that was made by one of the astronauts when he stepped on the moon. It was the day after they got there, and it was the original flight, and he says, "'You're right, they're already here.'" It got out on the airwaves. I know several people who recorded it. But the remark was very unique, because it was quickly taken out of all other tapes that were public broadcast. Weapons in space is still a big enigma. Black covert operations have always been trying to do something like that, basically. Star Wars was a big boondoggle. Most of it didn't exist. It was just all on paper. Laser weapons...well, that's a whole different story. There are brand new leaps and bounds that have been made in the laser field. Not only cutting, but pulsed lasers that basically destroys anything it hits.

SG: Do you think then that we have weapons in space?

JM: I'm sure we have weapons in space. There is probably no doubt in my mind about it. They were trying to develop them long before Star Wars became an entity, back in the late 60s, early 70s.

Nixon wanted something along that line to produce weapons for space. The project started then. (Not Nixon per se, the individual himself, but in his administration.) People wanted it done. There was a fear then of something out there. That was when the first stories came out about the asteroids impacting the earth, and it really didn't become a heavy project until very recently, but apparently we had some rather close calls back then—a— lot closer than what they call a close call today. So it became a very big concern —asteroids, UFOs, people coming from other places.

[See the testimony of Dr. Carol Rosin.]

Concepts were there. Ideas were there. Paranoia was also there within the government. At certain levels you could feel it. You knew it was happening. Would they tell the truth about it? I doubt it. Maybe some year. Maybe your project will tell them. Britain and the United States and Canada were the biggest party to these secrets. They got the Australians involved with it later on.

The media is very one-sided when it comes to reporting. They don't step on the other person's toes when it comes to things that would be controversial— like UFOs and extraterrestrials. There have been too many sightings that have hit the mainstream media, but they die very quickly. Why do they die? There was more interest going on for the media to follow up on, but they just flat refuse to do it. Why did they? Were they pulled by strings from behind? I don't know. I can't say. And they're not saying either...

It goes right back to the same thing with these beltway bandits. Can you get them to say something? No. That's where their bread and butter is. They're not going to step on their own toes, punch themselves in the face.

The truth is they have hidden things like UFOs and extraterrestrial information from us for years—not just the current era, but back before the 1900s. So it's there. It's about time for them to just come forward and say, hey, this is it.

Testimony of Mr. Harland Bentley

August 2000

Mr. Bentley has been involved in working on classified projects with several Government agencies including NASA and the DOE. He has a BS-EE degree and extensive training in nuclear engineering. Mr. Bentley recounts a story of personally witnessing a UFO crash at a Nike Ajax Missile Facility in Maryland and viewing a group of UFO's on radar take off at a calculated 17,000 miles an hour after having hovered on the ground. He also speaks of a 1967/68 incident where he overheard a conversation between Houston Control and astronauts in flight talk about avoiding a collision with a UFO spacecraft and our astronauts actually seeing living beings moving about through portals on the UFO.

HB: Mr. Harland Bentley

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

HB: I was in the United States Army for two years. Drafted. Then I got out of the military and went to college and graduated in 1963 with a BS-EE Degree. Since then, I have been in a graduate program for nuclear engineering. Also have taken pre-med and have been working contracts since 1963: NASA, Department of Energy and several other electronic firms in the Washington, D.C. area.

In 1957 to 1959, I was outside of Olney, Maryland, just north of Washington, D.C. at a Nike Ajax Missile Facility. I was a radar operator. In May of 1958, at about 6:00 a.m. I first heard a sound that sounded like a pulsating transformer. I looked out the window and looked across the field and saw this [disc shaped] object heading toward the ground and saw it crash. It broke apart and then it took off again in flight. I immediately got dressed and went up onto the hill where the radar was, got a telescope that we tracked the North Star with to line our radar antennas and I sat and mounted on that radar and looked at the pieces that were laying across the field. The largest piece that I saw was actually glowing white hot and was probably the size of a washing machine.

Shortly thereafter, Air Force personnel had arrived, and were going across this field and started picking up these pieces. They use long poles, very long poles, to pick up the biggest piece and they proceeded to put it on a truck that was lead lined and pushed it in with another long pole and got it inside the truck itself. Then the other personnel picked up the other pieces that were lying about.

Now what was interesting about it is, from knowledge of nuclear science, I recall that these personnel were wearing radiation suits, protective suits. And then they proceeded to take the material away. I have no idea where it went. When the craft took off again after it crashed, it went through a grove of trees and actually sheered three, four or five inch limbs, in just one fell swoop, like a knife or a machete.

[Note the resemblance to the crash of an extraterrestrial vehicle in Peru in 1997 as recounted by Lance Cpl. John Weygandt. SG]

Well, that wasn't the real exciting part. The real exciting part happened the next evening while I was on duty. It was approximately 10:00 or 11:00 at night and I got a call from the Gaithersburg facility saying that they had twelve to fifteen UFOs, 50-100 feet off the ground. So I asked the guy who was on the radio with me, "What do they sound like?" He took his head mike off, put it out the van window and again the pulsating sound except there were more of them. He was describing them in different shapes and so forth.

I had the radar on, the M-33 sweep radar, and right next to the ground clutter where Gaithersburg sits, we found the blip where these vehicles were. Then all of a sudden they all took off at the same time. From my radarscope, it went in one sweep. It is a thirty-three and a third RPM. To go that distance from the center out to where I got the next blip in the first sweep, at a constant velocity would have to be 17,000 miles an hour which we calculated from our analog computer.

[Note the significant correlation of speed and maneuverability with the testimony of Graham Bethune, Merle Shane McDow, Smith, Arneson, and many others. SG]

It [the disc which crashed] was probably in excess of thirty feet in diameter. It appeared to have circular balls on the outer rim, up close to a cake like fixture on top.

[Note the resemblance to the ARV at Norton Air Force Base described by Sorenson, Mark McCandlish et al. SG]

They were different colors. They were orange and red and some yellow but they were pulsating so it was quite a sight to see as it was wobbling towards the earth and hit. And it came in at a fairly rapid rate.

SG: How far away was it from you?

HB: Well, it came down over the top of the barracks so I actually saw the tail end of where it crashed—it was approximately 2,000 yards away. The reason that I know that is because it paralleled the launch pad which is 2,000 yards away. There was one individual on guard duty who actually saw it come in. The guard shack was just a few yards away from the barracks. He saw the disc actually come down and crash all the way from when it first appeared.

It landed in this person's cornfield. In fact, the farmer was actually standing there washing his hands when he saw it crash and take off again.

This happened near Mt. Zion, Maryland just the other side of Mt. Zion going east. I do know that an article [about the event] hit the New York Times the next day.

SG: When was this?

HB: May of 1958. A directive came down not to mention this to anybody but of course by this time it was already out in the newspapers. What did occur was when I tracked those vehicles that were taking off the next night, there was a question as to what they really were and the General came back and said that those were helicopters and they were doing some Navy / Army / Air Force maneuvers. We all had a big laugh about that one. That was the cover story used. Obviously, other people had radars on and actually saw those go off also.

[Note the pattern of absurd and implausible cover stories put out by officials, including the crash dummy cover story concocted by the Air Force in the mid-1990s to explain the ET bodies recovered at Roswell, NM. SG]

I had another one, which I can't say too much about. I can't say where I was. I was at a facility in California, that is all I can say, and I was doing particular classified work. The only thing that I can say is that it was occurring at the same time that our astronauts were doing a loop around the moon and back again. On their trip to the moon itself I heard them say they had a bogey (term used for unknown target, and often specifically used to denote a UFO) coming in at 11:00.

Well, familiar with that particular term, I perked my ears up and started listening and discovered that Houston and the astronauts were talking back and forth about a collision. The astronauts asked for permission to do avoidance for a collision and Houston finally granted that permission to do that. Later the astronauts said, "It is not necessary. They are now paralleling our course" and there was a discussion as to what was paralleling that course.

It was another type of ship. There were portals there that they could see in. They could see beings of some sort. They did not describe these beings. They just took photographs. And after a while, a few thousand miles, they [the bogey] took off from the capsule that they were flying in and went away. They just said it was a saucer shaped craft. It was actually paralleling their craft. They saw movement. They saw something or somebody moving inside that ship. This happened before the lunar landing. It was probably in 1968, 1967 maybe, somewhere in that time frame. Then they said, "There they go." And they [the bogey] went out of sight almost immediately, from what I could gather from their conversation. This event was unedited because of where I was [a secret listening post].

It was an extremely restricted channel. As a matter of fact, when I was doing work at NASA, I got into the NASA library looking for the tapes and never did find them. There was only one gentleman there with me when this happened. He said something like, "You didn't hear anything." And I said, "hear what?" And that was the end of that. In fact, the gentleman was very disturbed that I was even there to hear this. The astronauts were approximately halfway to the moon when this happened.

SG: How did the astronauts react?

HB: Their reactions were somewhat stoic. No big thing. They didn't say, "Wow look at that. Look what I am seeing." Nothing like that at all. They just said the bogey is next to us and they are flying. Very professional. Not surprising. I don't know what instrumentation they particularly had but they knew that at their course they were going to intersect. No question about it. So they must have had some device that would tell them that. It is obvious in space, I would imagine.

Testimony of Dr. Robert Wood,
McDonnell Douglas Aerospace Engineer
September 2000

Dr. Robert Wood worked in a senior capacity as an aerospace engineer at McDonald Douglas for his entire 43-year career. In his testimony, he states that he was involved in a specific project at McDonald Douglas to study the propulsion systems of UFOs. In addition, he confirms the existence of other projects within the aerospace industry, and gives his assessment of the fact that this subject is not only real, but is of extraterrestrial nature. He also confirms the extreme secrecy surrounding the subject.

RW: Dr. Robert Wood

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

RW: My name is Robert N. Wood. I have a degree in aeronautical engineering from the University of Colorado, and I subsequently got a Ph.D. in physics from Cornell. I went right into McDonnell Douglas as a young engineer and stayed with McDonnell Douglas for 43 years, graduating basically through the various management steps, and wound up in charge of various aspects of our research and development programs, including the last one, which was the space station program. So that's my background.

During my career at McDonnell Douglas in the late '60s, there was quite a bit of publicly exposed information about UFO events. One day when I was just doing my normal job supporting my boss, he said, "You know, General Shreever is retiring." General Shreever was the guy who invented the ICBM. The Air Force wanted to have sort of a symposium for him, and each of the contractors, including us, got an assignment to predict what the future would hold over the next ten years. Our assignment was to talk about going to space and back.

I knew my boss was really oriented toward nuclear propulsion, and if I didn't tell him otherwise, he was going to talk about nuclear propulsion—but everybody was tired of hearing about nuclear propulsion. So I said, 'Gee Ray, why don't you tell them about how the UFOs allegedly do it?' He said, "That's a great idea; why don't you work that out." So I read my first book, which was Donald Menzel's book. After I read that book, I told my wife, "This guy's allegedly a scientist, but he's not talking logically—he's ignoring the data.'

So, I read another book and pretty soon I'd read, oh, 50 books. And at that time I became interested in subscribing to the various journals and met Jim McDonald.

There were two interesting aspects that fell out of this meeting with Jim McDonald. One of them was that he convinced me that I had a story that I could tell to my management, since I had concluded that the UFOs were real. One day when I was driving to work, I said, "There's no other solution. They're clearly real;

they're clearly extraterrestrial; and they work somehow. I think we ought to figure out how they work, because I wouldn't want to be the last aerospace company to discover gravity control. I think we ought to be the first.'

So, I took a briefing to my management. My management was very sympathetic at that particular time for some new creative ideas—they didn't have much of a basic research program. I offered a very modest project to look into this problem, so we did some things like seeing whether we could change the speed of light via a large magnetic field.

So, this project was underway, and Jim McDonald became aware of the fact that there was a symposium about to happen in Boston that Phillip Morrison and Carl Sagan were organizing on UFOs. He apparently planted the seed in Sagan's ear, said "There's a group at McDonnell Douglas who's studying UFOs—you might want to give them a call and see if they want to participate."

I had just finished reading Carl Sagan's wonderful book, Intelligent Life in the Universe, written in about 1966. He had a tremendous respect for the ideas that I had seen there, which included the serious consideration for extraterrestrial life.

Carl called one day and introduced himself, and I was honored, of course, because he was clearly more outranking than I was in terms of his profession at that time. He said, "I understand that you might be doing some work, and what would you want to talk about if you were asked to give a paper?" I said, 'Well Carl, one thing I wouldn't want to do is what everybody else is probably going to do—namely try to prove that they're real.' I said, 'It's very clear to anybody who studies this at all that they're extraterrestrial, and the most important thing is to figure out how they work.' So I said I would give a paper discussing the different avenues that one could explore in order to figure out how they work. There was a long silence on the phone and he never invited me to give the paper. I did, however, attend the conference anyway, and heard everybody else who was there and realized that at that time I had begun to ask myself, 'Is there some plan to control this process?'

So, that's two stories that relate to my career. There is a third story relating to my career which is much more subtle. It had to do with classified work. The classified program that I was working on was at the codeword level, and it actually had very simply to do with our ballistic missile defense program. It's very common for intelligence agencies like the CIA to ask contractors who have an expertise in one area to study the enemy's expertise in that same area—so this program was to study the Soviet ballistic missile defense program. That fact, I think, is actually unclassified. Now, the name of the program might be classified in association with it.

As I became familiar with the program, it was pretty interesting. As you may know, when you get cleared for one of these classified programs you wear your special badge, and you know you can talk to anybody who's in the room with a lot of candor, and it feels like that's one's psychological group—there's a lot of camaraderie that builds up. And you had access to special libraries, so one of the things that we could do is go up to the library that the Air Force ran and sort of paw through top secret material. Since I was interested in UFOs, when I had some usual business to take care of, I'd also look in their library to see what they had on UFOs. For about a year I was getting quite a few hits on the subject about various reports. Then, all of a sudden, the whole subject material vanished. The entire classification for the subject just vanished. The librarian in our group that I was working with said he'd been in that vault for twenty years and knew exactly how things were normally done. He said, "This is remarkable!" He said, "I've never seen that before— you just don't have a whole subject vanish out from under you." He said, "I think there is something there that you hit on."

SG: What year was that?

RW: 1982—somewhere in there. I was also encouraged to go see the Condon Committee and tell them what we were doing.

[The US Air Force funded the Condon Committee at the University of Colorado, which essentially debunked the UFO subject]

So I did—I wrote them a nice letter saying that our company had been looking into the subject of UFOs, and did they want to hear what we were doing. I got a courteous invitation back from Condon. We prepared a briefing that explained how you could take a loop of superconducting material and establish a strong magnetic field in one direction, and then charge it at the same time, so it could float in the electrostatic field of the earth.

The bottom line was that we were just about a factor of ten away from having superconducting current capacity enough to do this. Of course, our team thought, "Gee, only a factor of ten—we're going to be there in a couple of years."

Condon's lack of interest in this subject was quite in contrast to his own group. He called his group together, who sat around and listened to our briefing. Then when he said, "Therefore you can't do it," they all looked at him in amazement and said, "But it's only a factor of ten." So I became friendly with several of them: Roy Craig and a couple of the others. I concluded that this [Condon Committee] was not an objective study.

I wrote a letter to Condon suggesting that it might be helpful if he were to establish his group in two parts, and have one of believers and one of disbelievers, and let both of them go to work with their angles. I said, 'I am taking the liberty of sending a copy of this letter to every member of your group,' whose address I had received from them privately. He was so furious at that, that he called up James S. McDonnell, who was at that time the chairman of the newly merged Douglas and McDonnell aircraft companies, and tried to get me fired. Really.

I found this out three years later from my boss, who reported that McDonnell said, "I don't like other people meddling in my business." So that was nice to hear from the CEO. He asked the original question, "What did he do?" and the answer was, "He wrote a letter." And he wrote a letter that had been approved through my management, because that's what I did. So my management backed me up—he backed me up, and I never learned of this until about three years later—that my career was practically gone.

SG: So the head of the Air Force Condon Committee tried to get you fired.

RW: Condon, personally. Right.

In the meantime, there was one other thing that came about as a result of my association with Jim McDonald. I liked the guy—he was really an energetic physicist and wouldn't let any grass grow under his feet. When he got a case, he would dig his teeth into it and present an overwhelmingly convincing story to professional societies. He would talk to the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics and the American Physical Society, and I happened to be members of both. So whenever he was in town, I would pick him up, escort him—made sure he felt welcome.

Once when I was traveling through Tucson, where he lived, I stopped—I had a two-hour layover to catch an airplane—and he came out to the airport to have a beer with me. I said, 'What's new, Jim?' He said, "I think I've got it." I said, 'What do you think you got?' He said, "I think I got the answer." I said, 'What is it?' He said, "I can't tell you yet. I have got to be sure." It was six weeks after that that he tried to shoot himself. A couple months after that he finally died.

Knowing what I think I now suspect about the skills of our counterintelligence people, I think we had the capacity to convince him to do it himself. I think that's what happened...

One of the things that one does in beginning to study the subject of UFOs is to answer the obvious questions of where do they come from, is it all real, and if that's true, how do they work, what's the evidence. So one of the things that I did kind of early on, was to take the data that we got from reading the literature and take specific cases to see what clues were there. For example, the case of the Paul Hill sighting where there were two UFOs circling around each other at a known distance apart, and under a known cloud cover, told you that there were 135 Gs of acceleration.

So, they really had a good number. Likewise, you can compute the Gs from the time to disappear over the horizon. So, I developed a technical briefing of what we knew the limits might be. Also, things relating to the physical evidence—indentations on a railroad tie that were so deep and so big in diameter, told you what the pressure was going to be per square centimeter. You could make an estimate of what that meant with respect to the weight of the craft.

These kinds of things I just automatically did as I was developing my thought processes. I concluded that there was just no question but they were genuine real objects, and that they worked in some specific way—and the only question was to figure out how. There was nothing like magic; there are no secrets if you're smart enough. You just figure out what the equations are. We weren't there yet.

We studied this project on company money. We spent $500,000 of 1968-70 dollars of the company's money. Here we were studying a technology that might be a thousand years ahead of ours, and we might not have the materials or the methods or anything. So the right thing to do was to cancel it.

There were other things, as I became more familiar with the literature, that I gradually developed an opinion on. One was the opinion that the psychic communication was always a clue, and was usually present. As I remember, one case that particularly impressed me was of some guy in Mexico who was hiking, and he came around a corner, and there was this huge alien with a device around his belt. So the guy touched the belt, turned the knob, and all of a sudden he was hearing what the alien was thinking, directly, just like that. I said, 'That's what we need is a device like that—all you have to do is figure out how it works. It should be straightforward once we study that.'

When I was in the vault, I was working with a guy named Jack Houck. He had a good deal of interest in studying anomalous things that had to do with the mind, so he had been looking at the subject of remote viewing and worked with Colonel John Alexander, whom you may know. Jack got me interested in becoming familiar with remote viewing. I met Hal Puthoff when he was working at SRI. Hal told me about their program there, and one thing led to another, and we did a little coordinated remote viewing program of our own.

It turned out that Mr. McDonnell became aware of this fact—that we were doing this in the vault—or at least we were thinking about doing it. He called me into his office one day when I was back in St. Louis on a business trip. I thought, 'I'm about to get really chastised,' but he talked to me for two hours, and said he was excited to find out there was somebody who was interested in this subject—because you know he named his airplanes the Phantom and the Voodoo because he believed in these abilities. So he gave us $20,000 to study this coordinate remote viewing, covertly, in the vault.

The net result was that I had become familiar with yet another corner of anomalies—namely the psychic end. So, I started to inadvertently just add together what I knew about UFOs, and what I knew about psychic stuff, and figured they were all interconnected. If you get one set of equations you're going to get the other. Hal Puthoff and I were in agreement with that, and we'd established a pretty good relationship, because I was doing some innovative things that Hal hadn't thought of.

I came to the conclusion early on that the evidence for extraterrestrial visitation was just overwhelming—almost so large that you don't even have to discuss it. As I became more familiar with the UFO program and projects, especially in my conversations with Jim McDonald, I originally kind of thought like he did—that it either had to be a cover-up or a foul-up. He had leaned strongly to foul-up, and there was certainly enough evidence to support a lot of foul-up by the Blue Book personnel.

However, in my last conversation with him, as I thought back on it, I concluded that what he'd found was that there was a cover-up—and that he very likely had run into the crash retrieval story, and that's why he wanted to make absolutely sure that it was right before he even told me.

So, since then I have not closed my mind to any possibility—including the degree to which we might have been successful in reverse engineering the craft. There is the possibility that we've been doing that same process in the psychic domain—and the possibility that our intelligence and counterintelligence forces are sufficiently sophisticated, that there's almost nothing they can't deal with.

You could imagine—and this comes now from my kind of current work—that as you look at the Majestic documents—the ones that we're researching—that the 1952 documents basically say that the most critical problem is the control of the press. You can imagine a group of guys—say in about 1949, going, "How are we going to keep the public from knowing this?" And it would have been a challenge—it would have been a fun project to develop the plan to ensure that the public never really found out the truth. And all sorts of countermeasures would be ready if this happens, if that happens...

So in my opinion, whoever's in control now has all these kinds of plans all worked out, and guys like me going around giving talks here and there really hold no problem for them, because they've always assumed that that's going to happen. They've assumed that some of the people are going to leak documents; they've assumed that some of these are going to be shown to be unambiguously genuine. But they've also said they've put out their small forces and try to screw it up as much as possible in the meantime—so some of the critics that I have, I think may be inadvertent pawns of the guys who are trying to keep it secret.

Clearly, in order to have effective control of this subject, you have to control it at all levels, and the most obvious level is the media. So you have to look at all the kinds of media there are—the movies, the magazines, and of course in the early days that's all it is—newspapers and movies and magazines. Now we have the Internet and video and all those other sorts of things, but as the technology has blossomed in these other avenues, the people worrying about this control have also just moved into those avenues right along with them. So every time a new avenue comes up, they have a new counterpoint.

If you look at the documents that we have recovered, it's interesting that some of them discuss the reasons why one would want to keep this secret. And some of those reasons were extremely valid at the time. For example, [among] the first documents that we now have—in fact they just came a few weeks ago—was one having to do with a Los Angeles air raid, and from that air raid, apparently, there were two crashes—one that was recovered in the ocean, and one that landed in the San Bernardino Mountains.

[See the corroborating testimony of Clifford Stone. SG]

George Marshall, who was the chief of staff, wrote to FDR and said, "This is what happened and we are setting up an Interplanetary Phenomenon Unit to study this problem." So the initial process would have started during the war. That's why when the Roswell crash occurred, our teams were all poised and ready and practiced, and it was no big deal. They had probably done it several times before.

I understand there were reasons back fifty years ago for secrecy. They would have been "A," to win the war with Germany, and "B," to make sure that they were in charge of the technology for Russia and the Soviet Union. Those reasons remain very important and very practical and very real. Even today, I would not want to see Saddam Hussein have this high technology. He may be even less responsible than the other guys. So, to some extent, protecting this technology from irresponsible people is still a useful thing to do.

That's where the problem occurs, because today as then, in order to keep it away from the bad guys, you have to keep it away from the good guys too. If you tell the public, you have to assume some of the public are bad guys, and they'll go off and run with it—like some people will make explosives and blow up buildings.

But the reasons are different now for the secrecy—several things have changed. One, there is, I believe, no significant religious reason for keeping it a secret. At that time, they didn't really know. When the first UFOs crashed, the radio program The War of the Worlds was only three or four years old. The people remembered how the public got all upset because there were Martians landing in their backyard.

I don't think that's a problem anymore. The problems of politics I think is the same. There are the people who are in power, who want to stay in power. Unless they see this as an advantage to staying in power, there's no reason for them to do it.

I believe, the genuine reason for releasing this information and story to the public is that we're paying for it. I mean, these covert programs have cost the taxpayers a huge percentage of our GNP. You hear numbers like $30-50 billion, but I'd be inclined to say we have spent more than that. We have not only the well-known covert black programs but we have, to use Steve Greer's phrase, Unacknowledged Black Programs. So, fundamentally it's wrong to steal money from people in a democracy.

The word is that in 1970 or so, everything went electronic. That would have been, I think, quite consistent with what I was seeing, and what you'd want to do if you had a really secure program—make it go electronic, or just have it word-of-mouth and write almost nothing down on paper for people to leak. That may be one of the reasons we're not getting leaks today.

The source of propulsion was the principal issue that I initially attacked from the point of view of an aerospace company. That is, how you get there from here. Part of that answer has to do with getting the energy to drive the propulsion system, because clearly it's not done by throwing little particles out the rear, as we generally do. So I have concluded that whatever the source of the propulsion—gravity control is the same as the source to release energy. Once you find one you'll find the other, and I also think you'll probably get a good hint on how the psychic things work. So those things are likely to be interconnected at the deepest level.

Testimony of Dr. Alfred Webre, Senior Policy Analyst

Dr. Alfred Webre holds BS and law degrees from Yale and a Masters of Education in Counseling from the University of Texas. He was a Senior Policy Analyst at the Center for the Study of Social Policy at Stanford Research Institute. In 1977 he worked on the Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Project through SRI. Its purpose was to gain knowledge on the subject then make policy recommendations. NASA director James Fletcher and the National Science Foundation were involved. The project was prematurely and illegally terminated by the Pentagon soon after it began even though it had already been approved within the Domestic Policy Staff of the White House.

I hold a Bachelor of Science degree from Yale University, 1964. I hold a law degree from Yale Law School, 1967, and a Master's of Education in Counseling from the University of Texas at Brownsville, 1997. I am a member of the Bar of the District of Columbia and starting in 1977 I was a Senior Policy Analyst at the then Center for the Study of Social Policy at Stanford Research Institute, now SRI International, at Menlo Park, California.

I worked on the 1977 Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Project. In the early 70s in one of my books I had published the Context Communication Theory of Extraterrestrials holding that the extraterrestrial phenomenon can be interpreted by certain laws. It is almost like peripheral cueing of the human race. So it was with great interest that we watched the descriptions of Jimmy Carter's interest and perhaps personal experience with some dimensional or intelligent source.

When he {Carter} entered the White House in January of 1977, I was also entering the Center for the Study of Social Policy at SRI. In the interview process I declared explicitly that I would like to do an extraterrestrial communication project at the Center. I was brought on with that explicit agreement and I went about making inquiries as to who on the White House staff was interested in the subject matter. I contacted that person and set up appointments with a basic outline of an extraterrestrial project.

So this project was undertaken openly and was of a civilian nature with transparency- there were no classified aspects. It started at Stanford Research Institute in my offices. I consulted with and met with Jacques Vallee, who was with the Institute for the Future. I co-developed an approach with him and co-developed some of the preliminary proposals with him.

I was commuting then between Palo Alto and Washington, D.C. every two to three weeks. Every two or three weeks, I would meet with our White House staff people in the Executive Office Building. I was signed in and out and I would meet with her around the proposals. The structure of our proposal was that the White House would remain the overall policy director on this research proposal, which was envisioned to be about three years long. Once a final report was issued under the proposal it would be a White House document and would come out under their agency and their policy recommendations.

NASA was one of the agencies with which we would work on a contract level. I have direct information from then NASA personnel that the proposal was at the Office of the Director, James Fletcher, who had it in his possession at the time. The National Science Foundation was also to be part of that proposal in terms of being able to work with a National Science Board and a Board of Advisors who would vet the research.

The full management staff and the research institute had signed off knowingly on the proposal at the Center for the Study of Social Policy at SRI. Tom Thomas, who was the Supervisor of the Center had signed off on it. Peter Schwartz who was, along with myself, a Senior Policy Analyst, and who was an advisor to the proposal, was fully aware of it. He is now Chairman of the Global Business Network.

Willis Harman, who is now deceased, and later became affiliated with the Institute of Noetic Sciences was fully aware of the proposal. In later events as we shall see, the matter came under Senior Management when the proposal was unlawfully terminated.

This project lasted from May 1977 when the initial contacts were made with the White House until [?] 1977 when it was terminated by intervention from the Pentagon.

The goal of the study was to fill the knowledge gap on this subject and make policy recommendations for the future. It had three phases. The first phase was the creation of a database. It called for creation of central and regional databases under independent control and would include data on UFOs and EBE's- that is: Extraterrestrial Biological Entities, of which there have been many sightings. So the focus was both on UFO and EBE, extraterrestrial biological entities. It would have created a database of all of the cases in private and non-profit collections in the U.S. and overseas. It would have gone to as many foreign countries as possible. The government of France, the government of the then Soviet Union, the government of China made an international scientific effort to create a centralized database under the aegis of the National Science Foundation.

So that was the first phase. The second phase was an evaluation phase with scientific advisors who would begin to construct alternative models of what these phenomena and evidence might mean in a dynamic way, looking at alternative models including but not limited to the extraterrestrial and inter-dimensional model. It would have drawn upon the best scientific minds available not only in the United States but in countries around the world to arrive at a plausible series of analytical options.

The final phase was the final report and policy recommendations as appropriate, including but not limited to the creation of a permanent, open, global database under independent control for UFO and EBE encounters. It would have included recommendation for the rescission of intelligence and military secrecy regulations, which interfere with the flow of UFO and EBE data in the open civilian, scientific, and public domain. If warranted, it would have developed certain public policy recommendations for, on the one hand, a possible extraterrestrial communication project to establish non-hostile, open communication from an authoritative human source to whatever intelligence the project might find.

Finally, it would have developed certain directives in order to prepare a global authority if warranted for the eventual integration of earth into a planetary order if that is the case.

So it would have been a master study very much along the lines of the recent Cometa Report in France which involved their head of NASA, their head of the Air Force.

The proposal was known and approved within the Domestic Policy Staff of the White House and was in circulation with the White House Science Advisors Office. Those were the agencies named in the proposal. It was through the White House Domestic Policy Staff, under Stewart Eisenstatt, that we had the initial contact.

I visited the Carter White House every 20 days and met with White House staff every 2-3 weeks developing the proposal to the sole-source contract stage during the period of May to September of 1977. My meetings were at the White House in the Executive Office Building with White House Staff from the Domestic Policy Staff.

We had brought it to the proposal stage by about September of 1977. It was enthusiastically received. We were given the directive to begin the personnel approaches with NASA and with the National Science Foundation who would be the actual funding agencies for the proposal under the overall direction of the White House.

I flew back from my meeting with the White House at which this final approval had been given and when I arrived back at my offices at SRI I was called back into the office of the Senior SRI Official. He was an African-American and I referred to him in my sworn affidavit as John Doe. The other person in this preliminary meeting was Peter Schwartz who was based in the same office as myself and was an advisor to the project. The Senior SRI Official stated to me that in a few minutes a second person, who was the SRI Pentagon Liaison would be coming in.

The project was to be terminated. They had received direct communications from the Pentagon that if the study went forward, SRI's contracts with the Pentagon would be terminated. These contracts were a substantial part of SRI's business at the time in terms of studies, monies, missile research contracts, and other contracts. The Senior Official advised me, and I am quoting him, "To dissimulate" and to just pretend I was going along with it- implying that I would keep my job if I did so.

What happened then was that the SRI Pentagon Liaison whom I call in my sworn affidavit John Doe 11 came in and he stated that unless this project were terminated, SRI's contract research with the Pentagon would be terminated. He stated then that the project was terminated, the project that had just been approved by the White House, was terminated because, and I am quoting him, "There are no UFO's." At that point, I vociferously objected. I recited baseline data that UFO's did exist. It was to no avail. The Senior Official sided with the Pentagon person and the project was terminated.

To my knowledge, SRI does not have a practice- and there is no case- of their canceling a project after explicit approval by the White House. Quite the contrary, they are extremely hungry for research dollars and when the White House approves a project, meaning that it is most certainly going to be funded by the line agencies, they would lunge after it.

I felt betrayed by SRI because they had signed on to the project- all of my supervisors- and yet, had not carried through with the project. I refused to accept the fact that where the White House had approved it, they would rescind it and I was disappointed in their unwillingness to stand up to these threats from the Pentagon which may have been illusory and disinformation on their part. The termination was based on the disinformation that there are no UFO's. That person, in my judgment, either was very ignorant or was carrying out disinformation because, of course, the Pentagon is knowledgeable about the existence of UFO's. So I felt that the whole termination of the project was, in itself, a covert operation.

I continued my trips to Washington on other projects, one of which was a contract research project with the National Science Board on Technology Transfer. Just prior to that, there had been hearings on the MK-Ultra program involving the use of non-lethal weapons on civilians within the United States, especially dissenters. So I fit that profile because I had dissented from the suppression of this study.

I will recite three separate occasions on which I experienced non-lethal weapons of either an electronic or chemical form that were directed against my person. They were intentional intrusions.

I am talking about what in common parlance is called mind-control weapons. These are weapons of an electromagnetic nature which can be used against a target civilian which can stun them, be used to deter them, and which can be used to induce states of various panic and delusional states.

They are generally applied in an integrated fashion with ground personnel, such that, if you are a targeted individual, a dissident within the government or someone with knowledge that they want to keep private, they will target your profile. And they will use an electromagnetic weapon to affect your mind while you are surrounded by ground personnel in the form of agents to induce paranoia in you.

Enough of that and a person can be destabilized economically and can be destabilized from a health point of view. So I experience this in three separate instances following the termination of this project. The first instance was while I was on a contract research proposal trip to meet with an assistant secretary level person in the Pentagon. I was escorted in by an Officer of the Pentagon and I was brought into the anteroom of the Assistant Secretary and told to wait there. I was there in a professional capacity.

Across from me was seated a woman, I wasn't sure what she was, the Secretary or whatever. All of a sudden she takes a large placard and lifts it up like this and on this placard is a term calculated in the mind-control technology to induce what is called "cognitive dissonance", to shake up the target. On that placard was written in large letters, "S-E-X".

Because of my years of research in this area. I knew exactly what was taking place. I was being tele-guided into a mind-control for the purpose of destabilizing me so that when I met with the Assistant Secretary I would be more shaken up - and if I told this tale I would be discredited, because how could this happen within the halls of the Pentagon?

Fortunately from my research, I knew exactly what was happening and I didn't panic, I just sat there and endured that episode. The subsequent episodes became more serious. I was on my way back to Palo Alto and stopped in New Orleans to see a brother of mine, but I also had an appointment with Judge Jim Garrison on issues having to do with the House Select Committee on Assassinations in which the Chairman, Henry D. Gonzalez, had appointed me one of the public watchdogs.

My meeting with the Judge was at the New Orleans Athletic Club on a Sunday morning and on Saturday I went with my brother to visit the King Tut exhibit and all of a sudden I got physically ill. I went into massive hallucinations. I was disoriented. I was forced to change my schedule. I could not meet with the Judge and I could barely make it back to the airplane Sunday night to go back to Palo Alto. When I went to the airport I was surrounded by covert ground personnel, dressed in suits, like agents, all with tie clips that are telescopic rifles.

I knew from my professional research in the mind control area that these are mind-control personnel calculated to come in on a targeted individual in a weakened condition and induce paranoia and destabilize that individual. Fortunately, because of my research, I was able to continue to Palo Alto and make it through this experience although it was very trying.

I went to the Pentagon and I was hit. I got on the airplane to New Orleans and I was hit again. Then, I got back to Stanford Research Institute and I was hit. It was as though the order had been given out to take me out after the proposal had been terminated.

In the third incident, I was constantly surveyed by security personnel at Stanford Research Institute, both plain-clothed and in uniform, in a way that I would know that surveillance was supposed to take place. This was to hinder my work and my staying at SRI. As a result of all of this, within a few weeks it affected my health negatively. I was hospitalized. I took a three-month leave of absence. I came back and it was the same situation. I would be shadowed and- I called it-'swarmed', by agents. I then resigned from SRI.

In an intervening period after all of these events, the Center for the Study of Social Policy, which had been heretofore a vital part of SRI's research and quite profitable for them, was disbanded.

If we take the fifty years since 1947 and we take the imposition of the secrecy starting with Project Grudge and going along to Project Blue Book and all of the covert operations that have surrounded the UFO and extraterrestrial issue, this study went squarely against that and approached it in a transparent, open, and scientific manner. It directly addressed the question of the necessity for security regulations. It is very interesting to note that the mind control, the non-lethal weapons which I experienced, were described in the U.S. Congress under the Church Committee and in the Senate and other committees. The MK-Ultra, MK stands for Mind Kontrol, (control with a 'K') named after the Nazi Mind Kontrol Program.

It was very interesting to note that MK-Ultra was a program of the Central Intelligence Agency of the United States. If in fact MK-Ultra assets were deployed against me for the reasons of the termination of the program that may mean, likewise, a connection to those parties that were concerned about the program, namely the U.S. CIA.

Here we have a President of the United States who came to office under a pledge to open up the UFO issue; and an open study in the White House, and that was squelched.

I prepared a sworn statement which creates a rebuttal presumption in law- this is an instrument of law. It was sworn on August 30, 2000 in Sacramento, California and it contains an overview of the study. It contains all of the personnel that were involved in it and it contains the story of its termination.

I truly hope this document comes to public light, that it is looked at both within government and in private. It is time to disclose this subject and to have an intelligent research project to approach extraterrestrial intelligence and if indicated: To make a plan for the eventual integration of earth into universal society.

In the few days that we have been doing this, a colleague that held a very important position at NASA, contemporaneously, has come forward and has confirmed that the administrator of NASA was reviewing this proposal and this provides corroboration. We have more than one witness to this.

[See the testimony of other witnesses such as Clifford Stone and John Maynard who speak about President Carter being left out of the control of projects dealing with the UFO subject. SG]

Alfred Lambremont Webre

SWORN AFFIDAVIT _____ I

I, Alfred Lambremont Webre, do affirm and swear the following to be true and factual:

1. My name is Alfred Lambremont Webre. I was born May 24, 1942 at the US Naval Air Base, Pensacola, Florida. My present address is 1512 West 40 Avenue, Vancouver, BC V6M 1V8. I hold a Bachelor of Science degree from Yale University, 1964. I hold a Juris Doctor degree from Yale Law School, 1967. I hold a Master of Education in Counseling from the University of Texas at Brownsville, 1997. I am a member of the Bar of the District of Columbia.

2. 1977 Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Study - As Senior Policy Analyst at the Center for the Study of Social Policy at Stanford Research Institute (now "SRI International", Menlo Park, California), I was Principal Investigator for a proposed civilian scientific study of Extraterrestrial communication. This Study presented to and approved by appropriate White House staff of President Jimmy Carter, during the period May 1977 until its unlawful termination of contract research on or about September 1977.

3. At the time of such unlawful termination, the Proposal for the 1977 Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Study had been approved for implementation by the management of Stanford Research Institute, and by appropriate White House Domestic Policy staff. On information and belief, the 1977 Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Study was also pending review by James Fletcher, the Administrator of NASA in or about September 1977.

PERSONS WITH DIRECT AND PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE 1977 CARTER WHITE HOUSE EXTRATERRESTRIAL COMMUNICATION STUDY

4. On information and belief, the persons, together with their then positions, having direct personal knowledge of the 1977 Carter White House Extraterrestrial Communication Study include at least the following:

9. Please describe the object(s) in detail. For instance, did it (they) appear solid, or only as a source of light, was it revolving, etc.? Please use additional sheets of paper, if necessary.

10. Was the object(s) brighter than the background of the sky? Yes.

11. If so, compare the brightness with the Sun, Moon, headlights, etc. At one time, as bright as the moon.

12. Did the object(s) - (Please elaborate, if you can give details.)

- a. Appear to stand still at any time? YES
- b. Suddenly slowed up and rush away at any time?
- c. Break up into parts or explode?
- d. Give off smoke?
- e. Leave any visible trail?
- f. Drop anything?
- g. Change in brightness? YES
- h. Change shape? SIZE
- i. Change color? YES

Seemed to move toward us from a distance, stopped-moved partially away—returned, then departed. Bluish at first, then reddish, luminous, not solid.

13. Did object(s) at any time pass in front of, or behind of, anything? If so, please elaborate giving distance, size, etc. if possible. NO.

14. Was there any wind? NO. If so, please give direction and speed.

15. Did you observe the object(s) through an optical instrument or other aid, windshield, windowpane, storm window, screening, etc? What? NO.

16. Did the object(s) have any sound? NO What tone? How loud?

17. Please tell if the object(s) was (were) -
a. Fuzzy or blurred. b. Like a bright star. c. Sharply outlined. X

18. Was the object - a. Self-luminous? X b. Dull finish? c. Reflecting? d. Transparent?

19. Did the object(s) rise or fall while in motion? came close, moved away-came close then moved away.

20. Tell the apparent size of the object(s) when compared with the following held at arm's length:

- a. Pinhead
- b. Pea
- c. Dime
- d. Nickel
- e. Half dollar
- f. Silver dollar
- g. Orange
- h. Grapefruit
- i. Large

Or, if easier, give apparent size in inches on a ruler held at arm's length. About the same as moon, maybe a little smaller. Varied from brighter/larger than planet to apparent size of moon.

21. How did you happen to notice the object(s)? 10-12 men all watched it. Brightness attracted us.

22. Where were you and what were you doing at the time? Outdoors waiting for a meeting to begin at 7:30pm

23. How did the object(s) disappear from view? Moved to distance then disappeared

24. Compare the speed of the object(s) with a piston or jet aircraft at the same apparent altitude. Not pertinent

25. Were there any conventional aircraft in the location at the time or immediately afterwards? If so, please elaborate. no.

26. Please estimate the distance of the object(s). Difficult. Maybe 300-1000 yards.

27. What was the elevation of the object(s) in the sky? Please mark on this hemisphere sketch. About 30° above horizon.

28. Names and addresses of other witnesses, if any.
Ten members of Leary Georgia Lions Club

29. What do you think you saw?

- a. Extraterrestrial device?
- b. UFO?
- c. Planet or star?
- d. Aircraft?
- e. Satellite?
- f. Hoax?
- g. Other? (Please specify).

30. Please describe your feelings and reactions during the sighting. Were you calm, nervous, frightened, apprehensive, awed, etc.? If you wish your answer to this question to remain confidential, please indicate with a check mark. (Use a separate sheet if necessary)

31. Please draw a map of the locality of the observation showing North; your position; the direction from which the object(s) appeared and disappeared from view; the direction of its course over the area; roads, towns, villages, landmarks, and other landmarks within a mile.

Appeared from West--About 30° up.

32. Is there an airport, military, governmental, or research installation in the area? NO
33. Have you seen other objects of an unidentified nature? If so, please describe these observations, using a separate sheet of paper. NO
34. Please enclose photographs, motion pictures, news clippings, notes of radio or television programs (include time, station and date, if possible) regarding this or similar observations, or any other background material. We will return the material to you if requested. None.
35. Were you interrogated by Air Force investigators? By any other federal, state, county, or local officials? If so, please state the name and rank or title of the agent, his office, and details as to where and when the questioning took place.
- Were you asked or told not to reveal or discuss the incident? If so, were any reasons or official orders mentioned? Please elaborate carefully. NO.

Testimony of Denise McKenzie, former SAIC employee

March 2001

Ms. McKenzie was employed by SAIC (Science Applications International Corporation) in San Diego, a large defense contractor. In the course of her work, she realized that there were millions upon millions of dollars in contracts awarded to SAIC and in almost all cases none of these contracts appeared to have any activity associated with them. She elucidates how "black" budget monies are hidden in seemingly legitimate projects. A pattern of sexual harassment began after she brought this issue before a supervisor.

DM: Denise McKenzie

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

DM: Sophia Hoffer from SAIC (Science Applications International Corporation) came in and asked me to come to work at SAIC. And even though I was born and raised in San Diego, I wasn't familiar with the company at all. I thought I was going in to interview. And I came in and basically there wasn't any paperwork to fill out and she just said, "You have the job". And you know, basically, "Here is where you're going to be working. Here is your desk. Here is your office. Here is where I sit. You report to me and there are seven supervisors." I didn't even know what department it was at the time. I really knew little.

I went in — I was taken to this very large complex, numerous huge buildings. I had never worked for a place that large and so I was a little overwhelmed and thought, "Well, okay she'll tell me, she'll be training me". "Well, I came into work the next day and she wasn't there and she didn't show up for about two ~ almost three weeks... I worked in the military division. What they did was contract to build items for the military.

So I thought, "Okay, this is getting a little strange." And pretty soon somebody came up from Human Resources and they said, "We need you to come down and get your photo taken for your badge because you have to have a badge to get into this department". And I said, "What department am I working in?" And that's where they told me it was the military division. There was a lot of very classified work being done in all of the different buildings.

And there were seven supervisors and basically these supervisors weren't very busy either. I would walk in their office and they were playing games on their computer. There was nothing on their desks. I don't know what they were doing. They weren't even in meetings.

A supervisor gave me letters to respond to. These letters were asking for an update on certain contracts that SAIC had with the U. S. Military and different aeronautical companies. I didn't really know how to respond to these letters and so I questioned the supervisor. I said, "Well," you know, "what do you want me to write as an update? They're requesting an update." He said, "Oh, you know, just put a letter together, compose a letter and send it off. Just say, 'Yes, you know, it's being working on, blah, blah, blah.'" And so I tried to do that. But I couldn't just respond generally that way. I mean, that's not my nature. I am more analytical and I had to have some sort of information backing up the response. So I thought, "Okay, well here are all these disks," and I went to the files and I found some files coordinating with the letters. I pulled those and I brought them into the office and put them down. And then I went through this whole set of computer disks with data corresponding to these contracts. I thought, Okay, great. I can go to the previous letters and I can read through those and I can see what they're talking about more and maybe look in the file and see if I find some updates on the status of these contracts and I can at least sound halfway intelligent responding to them because I didn't want to look bad to my supervisors. I was new on the job so I thought, "Okay, you know, I've got to do this right."

Well, I open up the files and all there were form letters, maybe two or three, and yet these contracts were several years old. And even the letters that were in there were back dated several years saying the same exact form letter: "It's being worked on, blah, blah, blah." And it was talking about sometimes millions of dollars in contracts. All of them were six figures and up. And they were talking about precise things to do planes or the systems in planes.

But it was the exact form letter, just a different date, and some of them were signed, some of them weren't signed. Some were signed by supervisors that were still there and some I didn't recognize the names. And basically I thought, "Oh, that's what they want me to do. They just want me to use this exact form letter and put today's date on it and send it out." And that bugged me and I thought, "Well, you know, who am I? I'm the new kid on the block. Maybe I better follow format and the status quo." I had the only files for these contracts. I went through everything. And the file office was, gosh, fourteen by twelve feet and it was rows and rows of cabinets, file cabinets. There was nothing. I went through the archives. I went through everything- I mean, there was nothing.

It seemed like there were all these different contracts that needed to be updated but there was nothing to back it up. There was no activity on it. It looked like there had never been any activity on it and that struck me as very odd. I mean, that didn't make sense. So then, finally Sophia came back. And I questioned her. I said, "You know, Sophia, I was given this work to do. I have the list of files with these letters that need to go - be responded to and go out. And I went through everything. I went through all of the manila files. I went through archives, everything. I looked up on the disks. And all the disks have is page after page on there saved of the same form letters, and there is nothing. So I don't know how to respond to this." She got very upset with me and cussed and said, "What in the you-know-what are you doing going through the files and the data?" And I thought, "Oh, God, I'm sunk." I said, "Sophia, I'm just trying to do a good job.

I'm trying to write this letter intelligently." And Sophia was in the position of one of the head scientists, which I thought was interesting, because I had met her working at a fabric store. I mean, it was just a strange situation.

She was very, very upset with me that I had gone through the computer disks and the files. And she said, "Just bring everything that you have and put it on my desk and just forget about it. You shouldn't have even been handed this and I will handle this from now on- I don't want to hear another word about it. Period. You don't need to worry about these things, whatsoever." But she was mad. She was mad. I thought, "This is just the weirdest run place I have ever seen. How do they do business? How do they get these million dollar contracts when things are so disorganized and nobody seems to be doing anything"—and I thought, "Nothing seems real around here." It's just like there's four walls. We're sitting in a very plush, very expensive building.

I don't have anything to do. I don't even sharpen pencils. This is crazy. And as soon as I'm starting to do something, there is nothing even to these files. I thought they were getting a lot of money for doing nothing and I didn't know where that money was going. It's like a front, a front for something. I mean, it was like you wanted to just hide funds or push funds through and call it whatever you want: "Joe's Market". It was like Joe's Market on a huge scale. But what was I to do about it? I mean, there wasn't much I could say or do about it. I wasn't there long. Right after this happened one of the supervisors caused a situation that was completely uncomfortable for me to stay there, so shortly thereafter I left.

SG: What happened?

DM: Well, actually it was sexual harassment but he had never bothered me before this. He was the head supervisor of the seven supervisors. And—should I say names? Stanley Stewart. And I don't know what the situation was with Sophia and him. But I went to her and I told her I was being stalked at work in the office. His office was right across from mine.

SG: Did this happen after this episode with the files?

DM: Immediately following! And then he started trying to give me overtime work when he had never given me any work where I was the only one in there. And that did not make me feel comfortable because, as I told you, or as I stated before, you have to have a special badge to get into this area. Anybody cannot get in and out, and it's locked up. You can't take the elevator up to that floor without putting in your badge.

I thought, "You know, if he pulls something, it's not going to be a situation where I can easily get out of it." I became so upset with the whole thing, I wound up—after one altercation with him, my throat got so dry and I got so upset, I choked on something I was eating. I lost my voice. I couldn't breathe. There was a hospital that you could see from the office window. They refused to let me go under emergency situations. So basically I could have died on the spot. Nobody called 911, nothing. And I thought, "You know what, whatever is going on here, I'm out of here. This is just crazy, because I don't understand what's going on here and none of it makes any sense". Well, she told me I stuck my nose where it didn't belong. And I was asking a lot of questions because that's my nature.

Later, I put in her last name where you can go in computer and do a search and it took me to this DEA site and there was a picture of her with a different first name, same last name. But according to this - this was the deceased site for DEA or CIA agents and I was shocked. In fact, I was so shocked I sent it to a friend of mine that was also working at this retail place where Sophia recruited me for SAIC, and I said, "Look at this!" And she couldn't believe it. She was dumbfounded. I said, "This person is supposed to have been dead years and years and years," you know...

SG: I want to be clear. This deceased file on Sophia said she died before you knew her at SAIC?

DM: It was like 1987 and I met her in 1992. It makes sense as far as the whole weird scenario at SAIC. I found out that when I filed the sexual harassment claim, that the head of SAIC, he had made a statement that appeared in the San Diego Union Tribune that women should be, basically, "barefoot and pregnant and don't belong in the workplace" and this guy is the vice-president or president of SAIC. And I thought, "Oh, well, no wonder." And Human Resources had told me, "Oh, what happened to you isn't any big deal. We had a guy in here and he basically raped an employee in the office and he still works here. We just told him he had to take two weeks off." And I said, "What?!" And then I found out three other women had quit the position before me because of the same thing. So basically I went to bat for everybody before me. And then after I left, this one girl from Brazil that had come up just recently to work there, he started after her. But he quickly after that, was given early retirement. I did find that out. SAIC has a very perfect situation to do any type of research they want to under the guise of anything- and call it what they want. And they definitely aren't working alone in anything. They are what's called a conglomerate. There is SAIC, but it's made up of numerous individual corporations... They have some very big genius minds there and a lot of very cutting edge work being done and millions and millions of dollars coming in. And since it's privately owned corporations, the only people they would have to report to is the ones who they're doing business with and are contracting with. And so if the people they are contracting with wish to do something that maybe isn't in the best interests of everyone, nobody is getting to know about it. It's all kept in-house: the funding, the financing, the contracts. There should be files. There should be documentation and a regular timeline of events on every project, which did not exist whatsoever. And if I'm working in a military division and I have access to all of the files, where was this documentation? So it made me very suspicious of where all of this money was going. So here was this group of scientists and all of this funding coming in and a very nonchalant, no worries, no problems attitude with these huge, huge contracts worth a lot of money, so it didn't make any sense to me, no.

[I share this disturbing glimpse into the military/industrial contracting world to illustrate how USAP's (Unacknowledged Special Access Projects) hide money in dummy projects while the real money is diverted to super-secret projects not disclosed to Congress, the President, or the American people. This is not the only witness I have spoken to who has knowledge of such schemes. In 1994, Dick D'Amato who was senior counsel for the Senate Appropriations Committee under then Chairman Senator Byrd personally told me that somewhere between $40 Billion and $80 billion was going into projects that they could not penetrate - even with a top-secret clearance and a Senate subpoena. He said he was sure money was going into UFO related projects but they could not penetrate them. I remember he said, "Dr. Greer, you are dealing with the Varsity Team of all black projects — good luck".

I should also comment on the strange atmosphere and sexual abuse Ms. McKenzie describes: This is common, not rare, in such operations. As she said, it takes on an unreal feeling. Even the story of her recruiter/supervisor having a different first name and being allegedly dead years before is a common pattern. People disappear from one project, allegedly are dead, and reappear in another super-secret operation with a different name or at least a different first name, as Dr. B points out in this testimony. Essentially SAIC is one of the crown jewels of the super-secret, black project world and is connected to UFO technologies and covert funding. Former NSA head Admiral Bobby Inman is heavily involved with SAIC, it should be noted. Here again we see the revolving door between military and corporate projects described by Dr. Rosin. After meeting with Senator Barry Goldwater in 1994, I asked the Senator to get Admiral Inman's cooperation with disclosure. He rebuffed Senator Goldwater at that time. We hope he and others will soon come forward with the truth. SG]

Testimony of Mr. Paul H. Utz

Paul H. Utz talks about his father Paul A. Utz who worked as a high-level engineer in Area 51 and had a "Q" clearance. His father had always claimed that he was an Optical Engineer working in Area 51 but on a meeting outside the US he told his son that he was actually working on a new kind of energy source. This testimony is included, in part, to show the devastating effects of secrecy on individuals and their families.

PU: Paul Utz

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

PU: My name is Paul H. Utz, and my father's name is Paul A. Utz. I was raised in the Marshall Islands in the South Pacific from the age of 5 through 7th grade. My father was relocated from that military installation to Nellis Air Force Base where he continued to serve out his career. He had always informed our family that he was an Optical Engineer and worked at range 61 and range 62, which is a non-secure range, north of Tonapah, Nevada. My father would leave every morning at about 4:30, quarter to five and come home very late at night, about 7:30, 8:00. So I really didn't have much interaction with him growing up.

We lived very close to the airport, in that area of Las Vegas. And he would get on a 737 aircraft- it was unmarked and did not have any identification numbers on it. There were a number of them, maybe five or six aircraft in the fleet. And he would leave on this aircraft every morning and go from Las Vegas to Area 51, which is also known as Dreamland. The same planes are being used today. Also there were a number of different people involved with my father. One of them was my father's boss. His name was Tom Hamilton.

My father basically is very conservative. I was raised a Republican. I was very active in the LDS church growing up- The Mormon Church or Latter Day Saints church, which is a very conservative [church]. Usually most people that are in the church are Republican based.

This whole story really begins when he retired and this was in 1993. I was working in an export business and was going back and forth between the San Francisco area and Munich, Germany, and my father and I hooked-up over there. And it was one of the first times I really ever had the opportunity to interact with him and to converse with him. And we sat in a beer garden in Munich and he basically had been withholding a tremendous amount of truths. And he had come to a point where he wanted to share with me a little bit more about himself and who he was because he felt that he had neglected me growing up.

He had told me that he had worked at a secure installation. And as I queried him further he said he was given different technologies that were from universities.

That's what his explanation was. And that he and his team were to recreate the technologies, or adapt them in certain ways. The project that he had worked on, he had been working on it for a number of years, like five or six or seven years.

It concluded when they had tested a device that was supposed to be a new type of energy source. They had taken it out into the range and it had literally blown up when they tried to activate it and they tried to turn it on. One of the things that he found interesting was that it had a lot of organic composition within the material structure.

And my father lives a whole life of secrets. I think this is more of an emotional issue for me because my whole life I thought my father was somebody else than he really was. My parents divorced after 28 years of marriage over these issues. I remember in high school my father was getting security clearances and he called a family meeting and literally said you are going to be investigated. I'm going through a process right now and there may be people around you.

My father told me that he was going for a "Q" clearance. He was a GS-16 in Government service. He had started at White Sands Missile Range in his career and then continued on through his whole career going the same direction. So my mother was working as a legal secretary at the time and there was people that were following us from our house that were not even trying to be secret about it. They were in unmarked police vehicles and cars like that. We didn't really think anything of it because, you know my dad told us that that's what was going to happen. And that was something that was a little bit unusual that had occurred.

And then there had been some other things that had occurred with Tom Hamilton. When I was in high school, we were finishing up a baseball game. My father had stopped by and said he want to go see a friend. And we went into the bar and when I went inside, there was Tom Hamilton that I hadn't seen since I was 5 or 6 years old. And that's when the first connection was made that Tom was still acting as my father's boss. Tom had a severe drinking problem. He was an alcoholic and I even remember that as a kid. And then that's what started the whole perspective of what does my father do? You know, the planes that he gets on, what is he doing? Where is he going? What kind of equipment is he bringing home?

But I do remember him getting frustrated at one time when he took a bunch of equipment that he had to Dreamland. One of the rules he told me is that nothing comes out of there. He says, anything that comes in there stays there even all the trash and everything.

He would do a lot of trips to Dougway Proving Grounds in Utah and a lot of different bases.

This new energy source he worked on had organic components — almost like it had a consciousness. And he wasn't given the whole piece. He was only given a certain aspect of it. And there were other teams working on other aspects of the same unit. That was part of the security protocol, to keep things segregated - a need to know basis type of thing. I don't think my father would have told me any of this if he hadn't been intoxicated. I think, as the years get older my father is a very miserable person because he doesn't have any family any more. He is retired. He is very wealthy. And we really don't understand a lot about where he gets a lot of his funding, his money because we were raised upper-middle class but we didn't have an excess of anything.

Now, my father is going to Club Med's all around the world you know, one after the other, bored with his life and unfulfilled in his soul. I think there are so many secret issues that he has dealt with in this area that it's really clouded his vision.

Oh, the Government has lots of secrets and I realize that. Once, we were watching TV and this is when the stealth bomber had come out. And my father got up out of his chair and he made a phone call. And a few minutes later he was picked up in front of the house and he said he'd be back in a few days.

That's what he told us. And then he left. And when he came back he said that President Carter had taken some highly secretive information regarding the stealth technology and released it to the media for the purpose of creating a political agenda for himself and other people. But what had happened is that they were trying to figure out where the leak had occurred. And my father was a suspect in that. I was in 11th grade when that occurred and that was very, very interesting.

We didn't really operate as a family unit, being open about our feelings. Everything was kept a secret. And so that was carried over even to my mother, you know. And so it affected us as human beings. When I graduated school it was very difficult to interact with people because I felt that there was a lot of discord that was going on. And you know, what is the truth and what is a lie and where do they come together.

So I had a lot of issues about that. We really kept at a distance for quite a number of years until the encounter in Germany where he broke down to me.

It's amazing that I remember some of these names, like Tom Hamilton. He was always drinking and trying to cover up the pain. And that's the way I look at it now. It's like there was a pain that he was covering up being involved with all of this, and his son Timothy. There were a lot of secrets a lot of separation.

But my father had a lot of access. I remember going up to secure areas on Range 61, which is just east of Tonapah, it is mostly that whole area east of Tonapah. And he had all the keys and all the codes and special badges. We'd go through locked security gates and then take Government trucks and Government vehicles. I was always amazed because my father wasn't a military man and really despised the military, didn't really respect a lot of the upper-ranking officers. So there was always contention going between the civilians and the military.

SG: Whom did he work for exactly?

PU: The Civil Service Air Force. I think, it just really added up when he started telling me that he really wasn't the Optical Engineer that he had told me he was. And that he was involved with a number of different scientists and he had a part in this team to create a new energy source and that's what they were doing. I mean, he had a badge and it had his photo on it and there was a number of squares that went all the way around it. And for years there was only certain squares filled in. And then when he received this other Q clearance, then there were all of them filled in except just a few that weren't.

Testimony of Colonel Phillip J. Corso, Sr., US Army (ret.)

Our deepest gratitude to James Fox for sharing this interview

Colonel Phillip Corso, Sr. was an Army intelligence officer who served on Eisenhower's National Security Council. After his 21 year military career he served as a military analyst. Colonel Corso personally saw deceased extraterrestrials from the Roswell crash in 1947 and a UFO craft at an airbase. He had also seen UFOs travel at 4,000 miles an hour on radar. When he worked in R&D he was given fragments of extraterrestrial technologies from various crashes and his job was to seed industry with these technologies telling them they were from earthly foreign sources.

These ET's are another intelligence, they are ahead of us and they've proven it for one simple reason - they can travel through space and we can't. It boils down to that simple. How are you going to overcome that? We don't know anything about that so we have to start with what we know. The little we know is the greatest gift they gave us — the extraterrestrial not the hardware.

The one craft I saw was at one of the airbases. I'm not going to say where it was but it was there and that was it. I didn't go in it. I had a lot of information on what was inside. There was nothing I could gain by going inside and looking at it. I had the drawings of how it looked inside. I had what was in there. Really to go in it would have been curiosity and those days I didn't have the time for curiosity.

The extraterrestrial, he's a little different. He's composed in a way of cells also like humans are. And the craft is really almost a biological type of structure because the extraterrestrial fits in it. Remember these cloners that made these beings made them in a way where they would fit in what they wanted to fit in. The ship itself is a biological type structure ...

Now when this being comes in this world he will wear a suit - skin-tight suit, which we found. His skin is atomically aligned and his suit is atomically aligned. That is to repel radiation and harmful affects - even cosmic radiation. Since he doesn't breath air, the ones that come alive in this world, will have a type of helmet on them. Since he doesn't speak, he has no vocal cords, he will have something that intensifies a transmission so he can communicate.

I'll go through that story now. I wasn't at Roswell in '47. In '47 I had just come back from Italy where I had been Chief of Security in Intelligence in Rome and in the Intelligence business I was trained really by the British. I was an MI-19. When I came back, I went to Fort Riley, Kansas. I was stationed there. I was an instructor at the Intelligence school and we had an aggressor force. One night I was first duty officer. First duty officer means that I was in control for that night and I checked all the guards, all security areas- I checked the whole post.

So I went to the veterinarian section and a sergeant I knew very well was the sergeant of the guards that night. I told him, "Sarge, how is everything around here?" He said, "fine Sir." I told him, "they told me to be careful, to watch this area because you have something sensitive here." He said, "you want to see it Sir?" I told him, "yeah." He said, "just go look." I knew the Master Sergeant.

I went back and there were 5 crates there, 5 or 6, but I think it was 5. I lifted one up and here's this body floating in fluid. I looked at it for about 10-15 seconds, not much more than that, so I put it back down and said, "Sarge, get out of here now, I don't want to get you in trouble. I'm the duty officer I can walk around here but you might get in trouble for coming back here. Come out with me." We went out and I told him, "where'd they come from Sarge?" He said, "well 5 trucks have been coming through here from New Mexico and they're heading for Wright Patterson Air Force base."

Now in those days Route 40 was about the only cross-country route and the route that they took was Route 40 going through Fort Riley, Kansas and then to Wright Patterson Air Force. So I say, "stay away from it Sarge I don't want you to get in any trouble." I told him, "I can walk around." So then I started to figure what was that? First, I thought it was a child because it was small, then I looked at its head and all, and this only happened in a matter of seconds, then I put the end back down. The head was different, the arms were thin, the body was gray, so right at that moment I figured I don't know what this thing is. So in the Intelligence business I better just put it in the back of my head and wait in the future to see if I get corroboration so I can evaluate what it is. I promptly forgot about it.

Ten years later, I was down near Commando Range [sp] in New Mexico, in White Sands at the Army & Missile firing range, right near Trinity site, my headquarters. On my own radar, I started picking up items going 3,000-4,000 miles an hour in this area. I had pencil-beam radar which locked on the target and the boys told me these objects were going about 3,000 to 4,000 miles an hour.

Once I notified headquarters. They said, "forget it- we're not interested." So I figured I won't tell them anything anymore. Every time that would happen I would tell the boys, "bring me the tapes." All my computers had a tape, which gave the whole firing sequence and we could check it if anything went wrong. So I told them, "deliver the tapes to me, personally."

Then I left and went to Germany and I started picking up the same things in Germany - 3,000-4,000 miles per hour flying over Germany. Again, the pencil-beam radar would lock on and all the ones [UFOs] that we would lock on would break loose.

Then, I was four years at the White House and I kept getting reports there but they were just reports. I had all the clearances so I'd get them, even code reports I'd get. I did get one time a report that NSA was getting signals from space, which were not just space noise, or unscrambled, or something you couldn't read- they were really very perfect and looked like something was guiding a real message. But we were never able to decode it. This was a very coordinated message. It wasn't space noise or jumbo mumbo or anything like that or just noise coming.

[See the testimony of John Maynard and A.H.. SG]

It was a pattern. The evaluation was that it might be coming from outer space beings and I got that report at the White House because I had the NSA clearances and all. Then I came back and General Trudeau pulled me in. He had organized a Research & Development project from a secondary ... At first, when I reported in I was a special assistant. Then he created the Foreign Technology Division about a week later and put me in charge of it. There I started getting the autopsy reports of ET's, and I started getting other crash reports and the artifacts from the crashes. And I visited the site here [near Roswell New Mexico] a couple of times.

When I came into Research & Development, I inherited all these artifacts and I inherited autopsy reports from Walter Reed Hospital. Now at Walter Reed there is a laboratory there, which was our laboratory that we financed. That is who did the autopsies for us. But we didn't leave any copies there. All copies had to come back to us because it was our lab,-we financed it all. So there we started getting proof that a crash really happened here.

Of course, I kept it quiet for 35 years I had an oath with the General and I didn't reveal names of peoples. My son said, "35 years you kept a secret and didn't even tell your family." I thought, "why should I tell anybody?" Now the General told me and said, "so let's keep a secret, but when I die I relieve you of my oath."

Three years ago the General died and I started putting all this on paper. My grandchildren said, "what did you do during the war?" I thought I better leave them a legacy. I had no intention of writing a book, being in the military. But finally, it evolved and I gradually started to write and it evolved into this. So that is my background and as I said I had the evidence that a crash did happen here.

Wilbur Smith was a genius and the government really treated him badly. I was supposed to go to his laboratory with him because the General told him, "Smith, you and the Colonel have a lot to talk about. I'll let the Colonel come and visit you at your lab on Lake Ontario. Well, I put it off, and in 1962 I decide to go up. I called up and they told me Mr. Smith died of cancer and I never really got to go to his laboratory. He gave us a piece of a metal that he took from a flying saucer.

[See the Smith memo and the testimony of others including Dr. B., et al. SG]

We exchanged metal samples [from crashed UFOs] and he brought ours back later.

To Congress I'd say, "it happened" and I'd add on to that. "Give this information to the young people of the world - they want to hear it, they want it. Give it to them. Don't hide it and tell lies and make stories, they're not stupid. They're not young men that will panic." In fact, my own nephew is Research Director of DECO [sp] Corporation. He calls me and says, "Uncle Phil, why don't they tell us the truth? We aren't going to panic and pull our hair out."

One good example of this, which I always tell, to prove this point that the young people want it and aren't going to panic: I always prove it this way - I commanded a battalion of 1,500 men, a combat battalion, average age of my soldiers was 19 years old. I told my exec one day, "my God, we're sending babies into batde." These kids fought the greatest armies in the world. They didn't run. They didn't panic. They stood there and fought. Why do you think they'll panic? They want this information and they deserve it. It's their information. It doesn't belong to the Army or Department of Defense- it's theirs. If it's classified, take the classification off and give it to them.

I always say this - the government is so big and so vast, that if you leave it alone it will cover itself up. When I testified in front of Missing Prisoners of War in front of Congress, Senate, and not too long ago in front of the House, and they asked me a question like this. I told them, "look it amazes me when General Skolcraft [sp] and Kissinger can come up here in front of you gentlemen and say there is no information there. I sent it myself from Tokyo over a teleconference over a two-year period. How can they say that?" And all the families were sitting there and they wanted to hear this. Later on we searched and we found it. It had fallen through the cracks. The politicians didn't care, they have their own little ego, and do their own little job to get in the newspapers. If a Prisoner of War is missing from families, they don't care. And the cover up happens like that sometimes with nobody doing anything- it will cover itself up and fall through the cracks as I put it.

We never trusted the CIA because in my day Stalin gave orders to get information that came out of Roswell to some of his top scientists and agents. That order went out and we knew that in Special Intelligence (that I was in the Pentagon) the KGB tried to penetrate that but they never did. We knew that Stalin sent agents out all over this area here to try to get information on Roswell and yet we stood back like fools and said it didn't exist - we said it was a weather balloon. They didn't think it was a weather balloon because they had indications that this event was happening.

[See also the testimony of Gordon Creighton. SG]

Countries in Europe are taking this very seriously. They're not like us. They're not going to put out stories that dummies came out of the air or that these were people with big heads. Those people are more serious about this than we are. But around here I'm not surprised to see the reaction from these people. Some are like me, they've never been out like this, after being in the military you don't go out and give interviews and write books.

We gave information about the ET technologies out and insisted they [the corporations] take the patents. But also we put a little bit of a requirement: Feed it back to us, the competitive edge of the Army-take the patents, make all the money you want, but give it to the American people and give it to the world.

The Japanese, they interviewed me and I told them, "when we put the integrated circuit out we also gave it to you." I've testified in front of six congressional committees. If they want me to I will testify, providing they're serious and they're not going to put it in the archives and just put it away... I won't go up there to help a senator or congressman get elected.

Look, there is a lot of stupidity involved- let's face it. Maybe mine is a little stupidity that I kept quiet so long but I had an oath to a General that I wasn't going to talk until he died three years ago. Also there were other people involved and like

I told you before I don't reveal them unless they want to come forward. But we should have done more.

The head [of the ET] really wasn't that big, but in proportion to the small body it looked big. Later I got my hands on the autopsy report in 1961, when I took charge of the Foreign Technology Division, from Walter Reed Hospital. From there, I started putting it all together. The nature of the body inside was described in the autopsy report. They did an autopsy and they cut open the brain and all. The brain was different, and most of the body was different - no nose, no mouth, no ears, no vocal cords, no digestive system, no sex organs. So, then we came to the conclusion that it was a humanoid clone. As I say, when I saw the body, there was nothing to go on. Later on, I got the autopsy reports that experts had done, our own experts.

But we kept it to ourselves- only certain people knew about it, head to head, brain to brain, no paper trail. We were able to accomplish something. Now we had discussions with the German scientists [brought over after WWII in Operation Paperclip].

General Trudeau told me one day, "it took us five years to fully develop a transistor that somebody else started and the integrated circuit. If we didn't have the help of people like Hermann Oberth and Wilbur Smith and the boys upstairs, it would have taken us 250 years. The message in my book I like to see is that the younger generation looks at this and see what we did and see the help we got from outer space and that these beings exist. Let the young people know that that's the future they are going to be seeing and live with.

That's what I think the message of the book is and what I'd like to see it do: Let the young people have it ... we're old, we're going to be gone, let those young people know... they need this help, they're going to be the ones to carry it on.

Office Memorandum • UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

TO: DIRECTOR, FBI
FROM: GUI HOTTEL, SAC, WASHINGTON

DATE: March 22, 1950

SUBJECT: FLYING SAUCERS
INFORMATION CONCERNING

6 Flying Saucers or Flying Saucers

The following information was furnished to EA [redacted] by [redacted]

An investigator for the Air Force stated that three so-called flying saucers had been recovered in New Mexico. They were described as being circular in shape with raised centers, approximately 50 feet in diameter. Each one was occupied by three bodies of human shape but only 3 feet tall, dressed in metallic cloth of a very fine texture. Each body was bandaged in a manner similar to the blackout suits used by speed flyers and test pilots.

According to Mr. [redacted] informant, the saucers were found in New Mexico due to the fact that the Government has a very high-powered radar set up in that area and it is believed the radar interferes with the controlling mechanism of the saucers.

No further evaluation was attempted by EA [redacted] concerning the above.

ASSOCIATE AND CHIEF OF STAFF

November 29, 1983

2
Mr. William Steinman
15043 Rosalita Drive
La Mirada, California 90638

Dear Mr. Steinman:

I am sorry I have taken so long in answering your letters. However, I have moved my office and have had to make a number of extended trips.

To answer your last question in your letter of October 14, 1983, there is no particular reason I feel I shouldn't or couldn't answer any or all of your questions. I am delighted to answer all of them to the best of my ability.

You listed some of your questions in your letter of September 12th. I will attempt to answer them as you had listed them.

1. Relating to my own experience regarding recovered flying saucers, I had no association with any of the people involved in the recovery and have no knowledge regarding the dates of the recoveries. If I had I would send it to you.

2. Regarding verification that persons you list were involved, I can only say this:

John von Neuman was definitely involved. Dr. Vannever Bush was definitely involved, and I think Dr. Robert Oppenheimer also.

My association with the Research and Development Board under Doctor Compton during the Eisenhower administration was rather limited so that although I had been invited to participate in several discussions associated with the reported recoveries, I could not personally attend the meetings. I am sure that they would have asked Dr. von Braun, and the others that you listed were probably asked and may or may not have attended. This is all I know for sure.

3. I did receive some official reports when I was in my office at the Pentagon but all of these were left there as at the time we were never supposed to take them out of the office.

4. I do not recall receiving any photographs such as you request so I am not in a position to answer.

5. I have to make the same reply as on No. 4.

I recall the interview with Dr. Brenner of the Canadian Embassy. I think the answers I gave him were the ones you listed. Naturally, I was more familiar with the subject matter under discussion, at that time. Actually, I would have been able to give more specific answers had I attended the meetings concerning the subject. You must understand that I took this assignment as a private contribution. We were called "dollar-a-year men." My first responsibility was the maintenance of my own business activity so that my participation was limited.

About the only thing I remember at this time is that certain materials reported to have come from flying saucer crashes were extremely light and very tough. I am sure our laboratories analyzed them very carefully.

There were reports that instruments or people operating these machines were also of very light weight, sufficient to withstand the tremendous deceleration and acceleration associated with their machinery. I remember in talking with some of the people at the office that I got the impression these "aliens" were constructed like certain insects we have observed on earth, wherein because of the low mass the inertial forces involved in operation of these instruments would be quite low.

I still do not know why the high order of classification has been given and why the denial of the existence of these devices.

I am sorry it has taken me so long to reply but I suggest you get in touch with the others who may be directly involved in this program.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Robert F. Saibacher

P. S. It occurs to me that Dr. Bush's name is incorrect as you have it. Please check the spelling.

and as I recall it.

Testimony of Mr. Phillip Corso, Jr.

October 2000

Phillip Corso jr. is the son of Col. Phillip Corso. In his testimony Mr. Corso, Jr. reveals information he learned from his father including a meeting Col. Corso had with an extraterrestrial lifeform in Red Canyon, NM while Corso was commanding a missile battalion. Colonel Corso, Sr. discussed the ET issue with such people as President Eisenhower, Strom Thurman and FBI director, J. Edgar Hoover as well as CIA leaders and several members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He said that much of this information was kept from multiple presidents including Carter.

PC: Philip Corso, Jr.

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

PC: In 1957 after he [his father Colonel Corso] took command of the 552 Missile Battalion he had several incidents in the desert. One of them is in a cave that the GIs showed them that was a cool place to in the desert. You guys have to understand Red Canyon [near White Sands NM where this event happened] is very isolated. He went to this cave and when he was in the cave he tells the story of the first meeting with the alien in the cave.

He said he was kind of laying back sleeping, relaxing, dozing off and all of a sudden he rolled over and pulled his gun. They always wore their gun whenever they were off their post up there. He pulled the gun and pointed it towards this form he says. He didn't recognize what the form was so he asked, "friend or foe?" The form said, "neither." But he was very, very upset because the message came mentally and he figures how in the heck is this thing- and what is it and what is it doing? He later sees it moves a little bit and he sees that it has a type of helmet on with a type of stone on the center of its head on a band. He had an artist draw it.

This creature asked him to shut down his radars for 15 minutes. He says that he figured in his head how does this thing know that I'm the only person that could give that command to shut these radars down? He asked the creature, "well why should I do it or what's in it for me?" The creature answered, "a new world if you can take it." At the time, that had little or no meaning to him- only in later days did it have a meaning to it. But he went out of the cave and called Sergeant Rex and told him to shut down the radars. As he was leaving the cave he sees the creature standing at the end of the cave and he does kind of a gesture with his hand which wasn't a salute or wasn't a wave or anything but he saluted it back. That was basically the end of the encounter there.

But later on in 1957 his radars picked up a ship moving over 3,000 miles an hour through the atmosphere. It went down near Red Canyon. He had a light airplane then and he got the pilot and he flew up and looked around and saw a shiny object on the ground. He figured that he would investigate closer by himself so he landed. He did not take anybody with him, but he got one of the old staff cars, went out into the desert and he says he found a craft.

He says it was perfectly smooth, it was oval shaped, more like a cigar than a saucer, stuck into a side resting against a rock sideways. He said this thing would fade out completely and then fade back in. He thought he was hallucinating and he couldn't figure out what was going on. He was scared to death he says but he managed to take a tumbleweed and throw under it when it was gone just to see if he was hallucinating or if it was real. It came back again, and he says that he touched it. It was cool to the touch on the side. He says when it disappeared again or went back out of phase again the tumbleweed was crushed so he knew it was physical. He said there were footprints around the craft.

I always felt like there was more there that he hasn't told- just my personal feeling because you don't see footprints near a craft, I don't think, without having a second encounter, but that's my own personal view. He says the ship began to vibrate, and he got scared and jumped back in the staff car, threw it in reverse, he went flying backwards and he says the motor stalled. He said he saw the thing rise up, turn, and go up into the air, and then it went into an envelope that it kind of folded into. He says that later on he told Werner Von Braun about it, and he told Hermann Oberth about it, who were on his scientific teams. He knew them because he was in charge of Operation Paper Clip for President Eisenhower.

[Paper Clip was the covert program to bring select Nazi scientists with important information into American after the end of WWII. SG]

So this is a man of credentials telling a story like this. I must say this about my father, when you see his presence on film and if you knew my father for only a few minutes, he never would change his story. He would never make the fish longer, and when he told the story he would tell it in front of anybody, he didn't care who they were- credibility, credentials or whatever.

This scientific team would do research for the White House- they were part of Operation Paper Clip. If you want to know one of them, my dad was the declassifying officer on the project Terizon [sp]. See, President Kennedy really didn't do such a great thing when he said we're going to have a moon landing by the end of 1969. That had actually all been proposed in project Terizon.

Obviously, I would say that the President probably knew about this because it was classified at the time. My dad was the declassifying officer on that so he knew what it was ... I remember seeing that as a boy by accident. I picked it up off his desk one day and it was about an inch thick and it had all color photos in it. I said, "wow look at this space stuff." Of course, I didn't know what it was, if it was a fiction book or what it was but I do remember seeing it.

My father speaks of a man named Wilbert Smith, which was a great investigator of UFOs and phenomenon, and built a lot of machinery for magnetic [propulsion]. He was Canadian. Dad exchanged metals [from ET craft] with him in the '60s.

Of course, dad has discussed this issue with many politicians. He discussed this issue with Strom Thurman and FBI director, J. Edgar Hoover...

He discussed this also with CIA leaders. He says all branches of the services and the Intelligence community. He briefed several of the Chiefs of Staff, and they did keep the information from several Presidents. They figured that they just did not have the matrix to be briefed on this subject. One was Carter- he would never know, he said. And there was actually a group of about 30 key generals and key military and key congressional people such as House Speaker John McCormick. I was under his patronage for a while- I worked on Capitol Hill as a Capitol policeman and as a page. He briefed these people. He briefed another Congressman that dad was very close to, John Fient [sp] from Ohio. He briefed him.

Why did they brief these certain people? It was part of my dad's agenda and others at the time to keep knowledge secret and to let knowledge out in certain areas and this was more or less a community of friends. There were many generals involved in this and the pact was the last to die could tell. And the last that did die was, of course, General Trudeau, and then my father told everything after that. But if you notice there was never a word said before 1992.

My father was not on the National Security Council but he was an advisor to the Council for the President [Eisenhower]. In other words, many advisors sit in on Council meetings, and they just sit back and take notes and then report back to the President. Eisenhower, he says, asked him where these creatures were from,- I'm speaking of Roswell. Dad says, "we don't know." He says, "what do they want?" He said, "we don't know that either." So Ike said "well Corso what is your opinion? What should we say about it?" And dad says, the answer to Ike was, "look, we're old military men, let's just say nothing. But it did penetrate our air space so we have to treat them as a foe."

So the cover up or whatever you want to call it began... But my father says that the government doesn't need to cover itself up, it's so inefficient it will do it by itself.

It wasn't just chance that my father was put in Research & Development in 1960 under Foreign Technology. You can see that Eisenhower was also another important President that had this information and knew of this information.

SG: But Jack Kennedy, what did President Kennedy know?

PC: My dad says he knew of the information.

SG: What type of technologies existed and how were they transferred?

PC: I go back to where dad first inherited the file. The file General Trudo had brought up, as soon as he took his job, was brought up from the basements of the Pentagon. It had materials in it- it had classified files in it, it had files on the Philadelphia experiment, it had files on many other government issues besides Roswell, but it did have some artifacts in it.

The files briefed where the artifacts came from and it was indeed Roswell-1947, July 4th. He speaks of laying three of these artifacts from Roswell in a triangle on his desk and General Trudo walking in saying, "oh, what's that junk on your desk?" And dad said, "well, you know these could change the world." And General Trudo said, "yes, I know and we just hope that people that come afterwards will know what to do with these." The first ones were metal, and this metal is kind of different because it couldn't be penetrated, folded, creased or sealed. But when they sent it to one of the laboratories I remember dad saying they put a certain frequency and current to it and it became transparent and it passed energy through it and it could be cut and destroyed then.

Another object that he had was the first integrated circuit — more than an integrated circuit though. It was a wafer, a multi-stacked wafer with a kind of window in the middle of it, partially burned on one end. This is the interesting part: my father says by concentrating on this item he could make it glow. It would glow a blue light. He also had fiber optics lights in there. They didn't know what these things were. They figured they were wires of some sort but didn't know how they operated.

The interesting thing that shows you that we have not achieved a point of where these original fiber optics are is my dad would also hold them in his hand and when he would close his hand around them the ends would be glowing. This means they contain their own energy. We haven't reached this state yet of understanding how materials can atomically align and become opaque.

There were other items he spoke of. He spoke of an item that was moved over a human body that went to either John Hopkins or Walter Reed. He never saw it again. He said it also couldn't be opened. He had the first laser in his hand. They didn't know what it was. He tells stories on film that he thought it was a flashlight and the batteries were dead. So he had no idea what this thing was. But when they sent it to Fort Belvoir and they put the energies and the currents to it and this and that, the first laser appeared. But he says that the characteristic of this laser is nothing like what we have today. It was molecule sized.

He was sorry he wrote the book. He was sorry he exposed the family to the ridicule, to the lawsuits. It's been very tough on our entire family. He did not want to die leaving us with these problems. We were very fortunate to find an angel, a true angel in Mr. Kent. If it wasn't for this man I certainly wouldn't be sitting in front of this camera now. Just hope that the future people such as yourself and me will know what to do with this type of knowledge that this man brought forward.

I do say that he is the first man to come forward in a high capacity and possibly it will start to snowball. I certainly hope so because I'm sure then he would be looking down and be proud of us.

SG: Which companies were involved in the development of these technologies?

PC: Of course the paramount company would be Bell Laboratories. Now let me set something straight for the record. The transistor was an earth invention. People did say it did come in 1948, began this research on it and this and that.

It has nothing to do with the integrated circuit except that it is solid state and it did begin the technology. And as they would plant some of this technology, such as night vision, they would plant this technology into research areas that were already existing- were already working on these areas. For instance, there was an infrared night-viewing device or such that came from German technology at Fort Belvoir. Well, that would be the natural place to take the lens from one of the alien's eyes. Dad says when they held it up in the hallway they could see movements of the background of soldiers and people moving and such. Now this again contained its own energy- Nothing like we have today.

So they planted these R&D projects in already existing areas of study, but they didn't plant the artifacts, that's a big misconception too. They gave them a procurement, the funding, they gave them what to develop toward and then they would insert from their own laboratories certain knowledge to keep them going on the right path. Only if it took the ET artifact to get the final product did they use it. It wasn't being done benevolently, it was being done for the Army's own advantage over the other services and over enemies and such like that. There was no reason like the public deserves it, or out of human kindness or such like that- it was strictly a military operation.

He says that the Air Force had these materials from Roswell, but the ships were actually at Edwards Air Force Base. What they [the Army] had was simply materials that were thrown into a jeep. But the whole ship itself was at Edwards Air Force Base. Now dad didn't tell that except for on his deathbed. I guess it's still classified. He had 9 levels above top-secret, he was still almost to his dying day you could say wavering... For instance, he found a key. They couldn't get the ship opened up so this is how I knew he was still in contact in later days. They could still not analyze the ship, they had no way to open the ship. He told me after he had his first heart attack that there was a key that they inserted and lines came out everywhere and they could then enter the ship.

Let me go to this part to answer the question of what the extraterrestrial looked like. You know the alien autopsy film? He was often asked if that was real. And he says he can't testify whether that was real or not but he says let me tell you this, "from an Intelligence Officer's standpoint there are three items that whoever faked this film, if they did fake it, could not know. Number one there was no lymphatic system. Number two it had two brains, four lobes. One of the brains was laced with ICs [integrated circuits], of course that was not in the film... The other part is that it had three eyelids. It had the outside one that was removable, it had a membrane, and then the eyeball. So dad says whoever faked this, if they did fake it, had the same report that he had from Walter Reed. By the way the autopsies were done at Walter Reed.

He said that the ET was indeed part of the craft, integrated into the craft and it was the propulsion system, for a lack of a better word. There is really not a science to describe how the craft moved but he said the ET was integrated into the ship and so were the other occupants of the ship, part of the guiding system etc. The ship was a living entity also.

SG: How did he know that?

PC: He knew that from the reports. They knew it died. It simply turned from blue to brown and died like a fish out of water and so did the occupants shortly after. Now I tell you something about the ET. He often spoke of a room in the Pentagon, like a jail door and you slid it back and you went in there and you were not able to take any pencil, paper, recording device - you simply viewed documents and you came out with whatever you could store in your head. Once or twice it led me to believe that there was something else that was kept in those rooms that would give information. He had a thread also that was from the clothing. He says that the ship's skin, the alien's silver suit and his skin were all similar materials.

Absolutely, he was aware of other crashes. He says that the Germans told him they had a crash and that most of their technology and their advance materials and research came from that. This was part of a team that he worked with everyday. And he said that there was another crash in 1957 in Corona New Mexico of a very similar type ship.

They both bordered the Trinity site [where the first atomic bomb was detonated].

The secrecy that has been assigned to it comes from himself, General Trudo and the 30 Generals that were in charge of this and President Eisenhower. They were afraid that - well first of all they knew that it was Stalin's number one mandate to steal Roswell technology. So they began an operation to hide it. They felt that the CIA was infiltrated. They felt that their funding would be cut off and they felt that there would be nothing done with this material if they did indeed leave a paper trail...

When all of this came out our family was shocked. We absolutely- we were in disbelief that he could keep this a secret all these years.

My mother would not even be the type to even listen to anything like that. I'm sure that he didn't tell her. I'm sure he never told another soul except for people that were in the loop.

He says that this group of 30 that were in charge of this technology, he says it wasn't in a written mandate for them. They were simply hardened, battlefield officers and they had an oath among themselves. I guess men that you die next to and that fight next to- that oath is probably just as good as if you signed it with the Lord. I know my father never talked to anyone about this stuff. I'm positive.

He told me many, many times there were no borders and have not been any borders. He'd say he and others who were in charge knew by 1983 we would become a user country. That means that we would consume about 90% of the world's goods and we were a fattened cow and would keep consuming it. This is the way the economic system is set up. He told me that he was taught by two Popes the meaning of money. That was a deal he had worked out with them for doing certain favors for them. Father O'Flanety [sp] and two of the popes taught him..

He told me that, after the book came out. He says, "the Vatican is indeed a very knowledgeable source."

MIA - my dad knows of the MIAs that were left in Korea and why and how they were moved to Russia and he testified in open and closed Senate committees. He says that the main reason that this was done is of course because of our liberal views. You might say our infiltration with communist doctrine during the time, blackmail (political and technical blackmail), the Cold War, many reasons for it. That's a disgraceful time for this country. There is no doubt. Like I said, my father interviewed a thousand prisoners from the other side. They told where these GIs were, what was happening to them and such like that. It was not a question that we didn't know. We knew.

And it's in my father's writings in detail.

SG: And we did nothing?

PC: Did nothing.

SG: Why?

PC: Political blackmail, infiltration, not on our agenda, not important, trade for trade, certain deals made. And this is the part of the government that should be known. These are the parts that I would like to release. These are the parts that the young people need to know so it will never happen again. Secret governments within secret governments -and that's just what the article he wrote is called, "The Secret Government". Now this is a man that has been behind the scene on many administrations, sat in many, many important doctrine-making decisions and there are people that make the doctrine. He briefed President Kennedy and Bobby Kennedy and said, "you guys do not make policy" and he proved it to them with a still classified document. But I happen to know it - where it is, what it is and it is an important history lesson...

Back to what the ET told dad at White Sands, I think it means exactly what it means, what it says. It's a new world if we can make it. If we can't make it, shame on us. In other words, they aren't going to give it to us or hand it to us on a platter. We're going to have to take it and do something with it. Right now there is no machinery to handle another crash. If it happens again, it will simply go to the military and it will probably be the same situation that happened in Roswell. Even though the time is different, I don't think the military agenda is any different. It will come under National Security and that will probably be the end of it. I think that we need a movement that we as people of the Earth and people of the universe so if a ship does crash here again, which my father said will happen, that we could be in charge of that or have salvage rights. We need a planetary salvage law.

Yes, my father after the book, gave John Glenn a document on an automobile that ran in the laboratory and it had fluid amplification he said. When an array of ICs were put together it would actually amplify fluid. He said the car was actually run on a flashlight battery for years.

Now John Glenn, he gave him the brief on it. It was about a quarter inch thick and it was from one of the laboratories that was funded. This is one of the items that came out of the Roswell crash that no one knows about until right now, except for the people that built it and were in on the secret project. But someone might ask John Glenn if he remembers my dad's visit, I think it was in '98.

My dad often said that there is a solution to energy and pollution because he often spoke of football sized atomic reactors. In fact, he says he had another document that we had actually built a small power plant, stuck it in the middle of Alaska for safety and it ran for years. It produced so many hundred thousand gallons of water over the years. So yes, we have technologies and have had technologies for a long time I'm sure.

My dad said many times that Carl Sagan was CIA-sponsored and he had actually seen his payroll and credentials. He said he was a paid debunker.

[We know two other colleagues of Sagan who are astronomers who confirm this. SG]

When SDI was started he told me later after '92 when he wrote the book, that it was a planetary defense system and that most of the leaders knew that at the time and they often talked about it ... see the Cold War was talked about as the Cold War but to many of the leaders it had a different meaning. He told me this later.

He says the meaning was that it was an extraterrestrial war and it's still going on today. It is a planetary defense system, this SDI.

SG: And that's what it is here for?

PC: Absolutely. In fact, Reagan use to call him and I can remember my father answering questions like that on the phone. That's also a hint I had that something was up. I didn't understand it at the time, what a planetary defense system meant but I had a good idea reading between the lines...

Testimony of Mr. Glen Dennis
September 2000

Mr. Dennis was a mortician in Roswell, NM. In July 1947, the time of the famous Roswell crash, the mortuary officer from the Roswell Army Airfield called him asking for hermetically sealed infant caskets but never explained why. Later that day when at the Airfield for an emergency he saw debris of unknown origin. A nurse, whom he knew, described to him the bodies of extraterrestrials she had just handled at the base.

GD: Mr. Glen Dennis

RS: Ralph Steiner

GD: "Well, our mortuary had the contract for all military services out at the Roswell Army Airfield. This gentleman called and said he was a mortuary officer at the base and he needed some information. And I said, what do you need? He said, how many hermetically sealed infant caskets do you have, three and one-half, four foot, in stock? I said, we don't have any. How long would it take you to get them? I said, well, I can call them by 3:30 this afternoon and have them in here in the morning. I said, what's going on? He said, that's not important.

Then he called back later and he said, I need more information. And he wanted to know what embalming chemicals that would alter the tissue, the stomach contents, and what is our preparation for taking care of bodies that are lying out in the elements for several days? And I said, you are the mortuary officer and you are asking me? I was trying to find out who I was talking to

Later on in the day I got an emergency. When I arrived at the base there were three field army air force ambulances backed up against the ramp. We were walking up the ramp and I saw a lot of debris. And when checked in, I said, sir it looked like we had crash. Do I need to get ready for it? And he said who in the hell are you and what are you doing here? And I said, well, I had an emergency and we have the contract for all military services. And it looks like you had a crash. He just said, stay right here. Don't move. So I stayed there. And pretty soon he came back with two military police and said get this guy off of the base he's not supposed to be here.

Whatever had happened, all the doctors and nurses that were stationed here in that area were given orders not to report [it]. It was my understanding that the reason for this was that there were all these specialists who had been sent in from Wright Patterson.

So evidently I was involved in things that I shouldn't have been involved in.

I knew this nurse. And this nurse didn't get her orders not to report. She met two pathologists from Wright Patterson. They were examining what was brought in from the UFO crash, what we call the Roswell crash. And they said, Lieutenant we still need some help. And this is what you are going to do. And they wanted her. And so they'd turn a hand [from the ET] and she'd say, four fragile fingers, so many centimeters etc. She said she wasn't in there over 20 or 30 minutes at the most and then all their eyes started burning and their skin was getting real warm and real hot. So they had no idea what they had, and the two pathologists said there wasn't anything in the anatomy books like this. There wasn't anything like that in our medical schools. They had never seen anything like this. Immediately after that the ET bodies were put in these pouches

RS: And the nurse actually described for you what they looked like?

GD: Yeah, when the MP's were taking me out down the hall, that's when she came out of the supply room with this towel over her face and that's when she screamed, Glen get out of here as fast as you can. I met her the next morning at the Officer's Club in a conference room and that's when she gave me a little diagram of what was going on and what they looked like. And it looks like what you see today, most of the little diagrams, you know the four fragile fingers and the long arms, the large eyes. She said the heads were almost completely demolished but they could see they only had two orifices. They didn't have ear lobes; they had two ear canals. The mouth was only about one inch. And that's the way she described it to me.

And I was with her until about 11:30 that day, and then at 3:30 that afternoon her supervisor called me and said, your friend has been transferred out. And I have her military serial number and everything else but I never have found her to this day. I've never made contact with her. She had been planning to join a convent. And I imagine they discharged her and let her go. It's a good place to keep somebody quiet.

[There is a repeated pattern of people who are witnesses to extraterrestrial events being suddenly transferred and separated from other witnesses. SG]

One of the MPs took me aside and he just said, look mister, you don't go and start any rumors. Nothing happened down here. And he said, if you do you know there'd be real serious problems. The way my character was at that time, I just said, I'm a civilian and you can go to hell. And that's when he said, you may be the one going to hell. He said, somebody would be picking my bones out of the sand if I talked.

The material I saw from the crash didn't look like aluminum or stainless steel. What it looked like, of course, we didn't have in those days. It was a real light gray, almost a white. And some of it was real dark. It looked more like what fiberglass might look like today. And it wasn't dented or anything. It looked like it had been twisted and shredded and all this kind of stuff. But I didn't see any real sharp dents. I know it was very thin. I could see that it was very, very thin.

One of those sergeants out there said, well, let him go to hell, nobody is going to believe him anyway. Nobody is going to believe this happened.

[Indeed the truth about this matter is so far outside of most people's reality that it is its own best cover. The truth covers itself even if placed in plain sight... SG]

Testimony of Lieutenant Walter Haut, US Navy

September 2000

First Lieutenant Haut was the Public Information Officer at the Roswell Army Air Base in Roswell NM when an extraterrestrial vehicle crashed in nearby Corona. He was the individual who put out the original story that a flying disc had crashed there. That story was retracted the next day.

WH: Lt. Walter Haut

RS: Ralph Steiner

WH: The story that I put out was very simple. It was what Colonel Blanchard said he wanted put into a press release. When the Colonel tells a First Lieutenant, almost verbatim, what he wants in a press release, guess what he gets? You don't argue with him and say, oh, I think it'd sound better if we said it this way or the next way. The answer to all was, yes, Sir.

RS: So, what exactly did the press release say?

WH: In essence, it was very simple, to the effect that we had, in our possession, a flying saucer. It was found on a ranch up north of Roswell. It was being flown to General Ramey's office, that being the next higher command- the 8th Air Force. And that was the end of it. The information that I got was given to me, almost verbatim, by Colonel Blanchard. He read off of a scratch pad that he had in front of him and I was writing it down. After we got all through with it, I was kind of awed. He said, I want you to give it to the local newspapers and radio stations and do it post haste.

I learned that they put all the hunks and pieces [of the crashed ETV] in an aircraft and it was flown out. But [after the press release went out] I got call after call after call...

The [cover up] was pretty well orchestrated. I think the thought of handling it that way came down from Washington, through channels, and we were told that we were all wrong, that it was just a weather balloon. And that was the only thing that I think we heard: well, that's the end of that story and we shouldn't have printed all that to start with. These things happen when you got a whole bunch of rank going way above you and you are just a little First Lieutenant down on the bottom of the pile.

I think, more than anything else, I was saying, oh God, I hope that this thing [the cover up] doesn't blow up in our face. Some of these things in the military- they just get out of hand and I was just hoping that this would be one that would pleasantly bury itself.

I think that there was lots and lots of cover up. My sincere feeling is that thing was something from outer space. And the military decided that our public may not accept it very graciously, something coming from outer space and hitting our own Earth. It's a little bit hard to get many people to accept it.

But, I think that they could come out with every word about it and every description today and the public would say, well, oh, I've seen that, and I remember something about that, and would accept it.

Testimony of Buck Sergeant Leonard Pretko, US Air Force
November 2000

Buck Sergeant Pretko was trained in communications and served at Hickham Field in Hawaii. In the early '50s at an outdoor theater with over 250 people present nine silver disks were seen by everyone randomly moving over the entrance to Pearl Harbor. The event lasted for about 10 minutes. At another time he explains that he befriended one of General Douglas MacArthur's personal security guards who told him that MacArthur had seen the craft and extraterrestrial bodies from the Roswell crash.

My name is Leonard Pretko. I am from Waldwick, New Jersey. I entered the military on August 23, 1949 in Jersey City. I went into the military with my twin brother. I had gone to Lackland Air Force Base for my training in communications and then sent to Hickham Field, Hawaii. I arrived there on May 4, 1950 and left there May 4, 1953. At that time I was a Buck Sergeant and I was working in communications and weather relay. Hickham Field had two theatres. One was an enclosed theatre and then there was an outdoor theatre at the end of Hickham Field by the entrance to Pearl Harbor. One night I was watching a movie outside in the theatre and there were about 250 people there.

Of course, in Hawaii the only time it rains in the summertime is in the mountains. So it was a clear night with the moon over our left shoulder. I was in the middle of the audience on the right hand side. Somebody turned around and said, "What in the hell is that?"

Everybody turned and looked to the right and over the entrance of Pearl Harbor there were nine silver disks. The first sighting that we had they were like a letter "L". Before we knew it they were going this way and that way and they were making all kinds of maneuvers. It lasted about ten minutes. Everybody just kept looking. We had some Colonel get up and he said, "Don't worry about it folks. Those are all just spotlights."

Well, being an idiot like me I jumped up and said, "Colonel, what do you mean spotlights? There are no clouds. There is no beam of light coming from anyplace." He told me to shut up. Just then the Bird Colonel jumped up, his name was Miller, and he said, "Colonel, you shut up. You aren't going to fool the people here. They are all military." So we watched the things for about 10 minutes and then they just took off.

These things, they were really fast. There were times that we read in the Honolulu newspaper that they had tracked these objects once going from Hawaii to Japan in eight minutes.

I was barracks chief and in the Air Force we were not allowed to carry weapons in the barracks. One day this guy walks in- a little Buck Sergeant with an Army uniform on and a 45 strapped to his side- and I asked what he was doing there and he said to me that he was on TDY from the states. I said, "Well, not with that 45 you aren't." He said, "Well, I am authorized."

They called his CQ and the guy comes up and says to me that it is okay for him to carry the 45; that he is authorized and he is a member of General Douglas MacArthur security guard. He is going to lock it away in a locker and he is going to double lock the locker. And he did that. So while he was there we became very friendly and I happened to mention to him the incident about the lights going over the field and then I talked to him about the UFO s that I saw, these nine disks.

He said, "Look, I can't talk to you here. Let's take a walk. Let's go out across the street to the play field where there is nobody around." So we went out there. He said, "I am going to tell you something. But if you say that I told you, I will swear I never even mentioned it to you." I said, "No problem."

He said to me, "You know that I am a member of General Douglas MacArthur's security guard. I am on my way to the States for TDY." General Douglas MacArthur was very familiar with the Roswell incident, the crash material, and also the bodies because he himself has seen them. That is what he told me. From that day on I never mentioned a word until five years ago.

In the military they do ridicule you and I was ridiculed a few times about these UFO events. I was told that I would never make Master Sergeant if I brought this crap up again. My superior said, "If you keep this crap up you will never make Master Sergeant. You will get orders for Tech but you will never make Master Sergeant. They will force you out of the military."

Testimony of Mr. Dan Willis, US Navy
March 2001

Mr. Dan Willis was in the Navy from 1968 to 1971 with a top-secret crypto level-14 security clearance. Later, he worked for 13 years at the Naval Electronic Communication Engineering Center in San Diego. He tells of a time when he received a most unusual communications from a merchant marine ship near the Alaskan coast. The message said that there was a redish-orange glowing elliptical object about 70 feet in diameter that came out of the ocean and shot off into space. It was tracked on radar going 7,000 miles an hour. Many years later, Mr. Willis related this story to someone he knew who had previously worked at NORAD. He said that there were occasions where objects would be tracked on NORAD radar going so fast that they were off the scale, and once when this happened one of his older supervisors causally told him that, "it was just a visit from one of our little friends."

My name is Dan Willis and I wish to state for the record an incident that occurred during my military experience. It happened back in 1969. I was in the naval branch of the service between the years of 1968 and 1971. I did two tours of duty: One at Naval Communications Station, San Francisco; and in Vietnam, I was on a riverboat repair barge going down the Mekong, and I have a combat action medal. I held a high-level security clearance. I had a top-secret crypto level fourteen with extra sensitive material access, which I believe was due to my father being a career Marine man.

During the tour of duty in San Francisco I worked at a secret complex. The building was called the Block House. Everybody was given a security badge and there were different colors for access to various compartmentalized areas. In that particular era the primary ship-to-shore communication methods were the Teletype, which go through encryption ~ crypto equipment and Morse code. The code circuits were basically used when atmospheric conditions on the planet provided poor communication abilities and Morse code was a backup for last resort communications.

One day I had a very unusual experience communicated from a ship out at sea near the Alaskan coast. It was a merchant marine ship that sent in this message. I heard the call letters. I went to the seat, threw on my headphones and replied back to the ship. He sent in a priority message. The message was classified as secret.

The message had the following content. I don't remember all of the specifics of latitude, longitude or the name of the ship, but I do remember very vividly the details of what the content of the message was. The message revealed that coming out of the ocean, very near the ship, off port bow, a reddish-orange glowing elliptical object, approximately seventy feet in diameter, came out of the water and shot off into space. The ship's radar tracked it. It was going over 7,000 miles per hour. It all stuck with me to this day.

After I finished military service, I worked for thirteen years at the Naval Electronic Communication Engineering Center in San Diego. I worked with some of the personnel that worked at NORAD. We were talking about UFOs. He said, "When I first started working at NORAD," quote, "the screens which monitored the radar across the country, all of a sudden something would come across the screen and the scale ~ reading the speed on this thing would go off the scale". And one of the older supervisors advised him, "Oh, it's just a visit from one of our little friends," - like just a normal occurrence.

Testimony of Dr. Roberto Pinotti

September 2000

In his testimony, Mr. Pinotti speaks about the 215 inexplicable UFO events in the Italian Air Force files. He obtained official Italian documents that date back to the 30's, specifically 1936 where the then Fascist Government was handling and documenting UFO sightings. Mussolini was very concerned about these unexplained craft because of the effect they might have on the Italian Air Force. The documents talk about elongated craft expelling smaller flying-saucer type UFOs. One sighting happened over the sky's of Venice. The Air Force attempted to intercept these craft but could not as they were too fast. Recently the Chief of the Intelligence Office of the Italian Air Force, General Olivero, spoke about this subject saying that the problem of UFO's exists and that the Air Force has been dealing with it since 1978. There were even two landing traces in Campagna near Naples where the soil was bombarded with high intensity, high frequency microwaves. There was another important event documented by Air Force General Salvatore Marcholetti in 1976 where, in Lechi, he was flying and came across a huge green object that appeared over his plane. Soon the UFO took off at tremendous speed.

RP: Dr. Roberto Pinotti

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

RP: Today, the Italian Air Force has 215 inexplicable events, from the standpoint of UFOs. This is important because it's an admission that the phenomenon exists. Their present approach is to handle the problem with a certain care but not to deny it. This is extremely positive.

Another interesting thing is that recently we acquired some old documents. They are documents from the '30s. These documents are a link mainly to sightings in 1936. They show that even the Fascist Government at that point was handling the problem of UFOs.

The story is this: We received from an anonymous source these documents. We had the problem of checking everything from the standpoint of history and above all we had to have these documents analyzed from a chemical and historical point of view. The result was completely positive. In fact, we gave these documents to the Italian Air Force in order to get their opinion and to see if they knew anything more about this. The answer was that they know nothing more. But in any case yes, the documents are authentic.

The conclusion was that during the '30s, Italy was involved with sightings of unknown aircrafts. And at that moment Mussolini was very concerned because the Italian Air Force was really very important to his plans and these events could lead him to change his foreign policies. He feared that these unknown aircraft might be English or French, of course- but they were not.

[Note the interesting similarity to this reaction and the later Cold War period when US and NATO forces were concerned that these objects were secret Soviet craft- and the USSR thought they were US and NATO craft. Note also the persistent interest the ETs have in human war-making capability. They realize what many humans do: Technology advances so quickly once a certain point is reached that we risk destroying our world — and perhaps their worlds as well — unless we learn to live in peace or at least resolve our differences nonviolently SG]

There were cases of elongated objects like we see in UFO cases today, expelling smaller unidentified flying objects in the form of the classical flying saucers. This sighting, for instance, occurred in the sky over Venice. We had two fighters of the Royal Italian Air Force at the time that tried to intercept the objects, in vain of course. But this is important because it proves what we always thought: UFO sightings began much before 1947 and were seen throughout the world.

In 1978 we obtained for the first time an official dossier of Italian Air Force documents. We requested them according to certain procedures: it was not easy. From the standpoint of the nature of the sightings, the Air Force documents show that we are facing definite real objects and that these objects are detected by radar. The Italian military pilots have had encounters in the skies of Italy exactly like in the US and elsewhere. When the Italian Air Force says that they have 215 cases still unexplained this means that they are UFO sightings which have unknown characteristics. For instance, there are cases of military planes attempting to intercept these objects in the skies of Italy. But these objects go away without the possibility of being intercepted.

SG: Have you had landing events involving these UFOs?

RP: Yes, we have landings and landing traces where evidence was left. All this is a very delicate subject because just a few admissions are made by the military about this. But if we consider that even their blank forms about the UFO subject lists parameters which ask about landing details and other real physical details, it tells that they know this happens and are looking for it. Otherwise they never would have put such details on the forms. So sometimes the documents speak for themselves.

Recently we had an Italian Air Force officer speak officially and in uniform about the UFO issue. The speaker was General Olivero. He's the chief of the intelligence office of the Italian Air Force, which is in charge of following the UFO cases. He said that the problem exists and the Italian force was handling this difficult issue since 1978. He said that they have on file at least 215 UFO cases and that really there are inexplicable cases. He was also asked officially by the press what he thought on a personal basis. He said that since he's a pilot, he knows serious colleagues and serious pilots who have related encounters with UFOs, and he said, I trust them.

In the '90s we had two landing cases in Italy and both occurred in Campagna. Campagna is the region near Naples. The landing traces left by these two different objects were analyzed in a laboratory by our experts. We got specific results. We discovered that the objects, after their landing, had really bombarded the surface of the soil with high intensity, high frequency microwaves. We could check and define this effect. We then compared these results with the world famous case of Trans en Provence in France, which occurred in 1981 and which is a classic from this point of view. It was very important because when we went to Toulouse we found that the data we saw from these cases were really similar in effect.

This was very, very important. We have a good relationship with the French governmental body which researches UFO matters in France. Monsieur Valesco is the head of the governmental body who studies the UFO problem in France.

[See the COMETA report that includes many French UFO cases including the landing case referred to here. SG]

The French, they think that the problem is real, that we are confronting a real phenomenon, a technological phenomenon of unknown nature. The position of the French is extremely open and extremely realistic.

The capabilities of UFOs are much more superior than we think. Really, probably is not accurate to say that unidentified flying objects fly. What does it mean, fly? A plane flies. But UFOs use another kind of propulsion and for them it's absolutely the same to proceed in fluid like water or an atmosphere like ours or the atmosphere of another planet or even the vacuum of space. So it's a different kind of propulsion.

We have a lot of cases of pilot encounters in Italy, both civilian and military. For instance, in 1973 we had a very famous case. Three planes were involved over the airport of Turin. At present, one of these three pilots is still alive. He was a guest in the San Marino symposium. We had a sighting from three different planes and from the tower of the Turin airport and the object was also on the radar screens. So it's very important.

Another important case was the case of an Air Force General - he is retired now - General Salvatore Marcholetti, in 1976. When he was the chief of the flight school of the Italian Air Force in Lechi, he happened to meet a tremendous object during a flight. He was flying and he suddenly saw this green object over him, over the cockpit. He understood that something enormous, huge, was over the plane.

He didn't know what to do. Seconds later, minutes later- he still doesn't know how long this experience lasted- he suddenly saw this mass take off with tremendous speed. Only after he left the Italian Air Force did he mention this event.

[We have the testimonies of both General Olivera and General Marchiletti and they are awaiting translation as of this writing. SG]

If we have to try to explain all this in practical terms, I think that the extraterrestrial hypothesis is best able to explain what is going on. You see that the pattern of evidence and events leads us to conclude that unknown beings humanoid in form and of unknown origin are visiting us- and much before 1946.

From a logical point of view, I don't think that we have anything to fear because if we were facing hostile beings, surely they would have conquered us or made incredible things happen in the past- they could really. If this hasn't happen, surely it is because we haven't anything to fear.

Probably there are, in every part of the world, invisible links with a definite invisible college that is keeping this secret. They are dealing with this subject from the standpoint of research secretly in order to have gains and technologies to be applied in a various ways. The UFO problem is not only a scientific problem, it is also an intelligence problem.

This is the second important face of the UFO reality. When we begin to understand this we may understand a lot of things because all this has to do with power. Power everywhere, in every country, with every government, with every situation.

MEMORANDUM FOR: The Director of Central Intelligence

THROUGH: Deputy Director (Intelligence)

SUBJECT: Unidentified Flying Objects

REFERENCE: Request of the Director of 10 December 1952

1. The following is a summary of the current situation with respect to the investigation of unidentified flying objects. Recent incidents include:

a. Movies of ten (10) unidentified flying objects (unexplained on the basis of natural phenomena or known types of aircraft), near Tremonton, Utah, on 2 July 1952.

b. A very brilliant unidentified light over the coast of Maine for about four hours on the night of 10-11 October at a height computed to be two or three times that which can be sustained by any known device.

c. Alleged contact with a device on the ground in Florida late this summer which left scars presently unexplained after-effects.

d. Numerous other sightings of lights or objects which either in configuration or performance do not resemble any known aerial vehicle or explainable natural phenomena.

2. In furtherance of the IAC action on 4 December, O/SI has been working with Dr. H. P. Robertson, consultant (former Director of Research, WSSC), toward establishing a panel of top scientists and engineers in the fields of astrophysics, nuclear energy, electronics, etc., to review this situation. Wholehearted cooperation has been assured by DI/USAF and AFIC, and a visit by AD/SI, Dr. Robertson, and Mr. Durant of SI to AFIC is planned for Friday. It is hoped to organize the panel and undertake substantive scientific review of this subject within the next two to three weeks.

New Energy Solutions and Implications For The National Security and The Environment

The ultimate national security issue is intimately linked to the pressing environmental crisis facing the world today: The question of whether humanity can continue as a technologically advanced civilization.

Fossil fuels and the internal combustion engine are non-sustainable both environmentally and economically - and a replacement for both already exists. The question is not whether we will transition to a new post-fossil fuel economy, but when and how. The environmental, economic, geopolitical, national security, and military issues related to this matter are profound and inextricably linked to one another.

The disclosure of such new energy technologies will have far-reaching implications for every aspect of human society and the time has come to prepare for such an event. For if such technologies were announced today, it would take at least 10-20 years for their widespread application to be effected. This is approximately how much time we have before global economic chaos begins due to demand far exceeding the supply of oil and environmental decay becomes exponential and catastrophic.

We have found that the technologies to replace fossil fuel usage already exist and need to be exploited and applied immediately to avert a serious global economic, geopolitical, and environmental crisis in the not-so-distant future.

In summary, these technologies fall into the following broad categories:

- > Quantum vacuum/ zero point field energy access systems and related advances in electromagnetic theory and applications
- > Electrogravitic and magnetogravitic energy and propulsion
- > Room temperature nuclear effects
- > Electrochemical and related advances to internal combustion systems which achieve near zero emissions and very high efficiency

A number of practical applications using such technologies have been developed over the past several decades but such breakthroughs have been either ignored due to their unconventional nature or have been classified and suppressed due to national security, military interests, and 'special' interests.

Let us be clear: the question is not whether such systems exist and can be viable replacements for fossil fuels. The question is whether we have the courage to allow such a transformation in world society to occur.

Such technologies - especially those which bypass the need to use an external fuel source such as oil or coal - would have obvious and beneficial effects for humanity. Since these technologies do not require an expensive source of fuel but instead use existing quantum space energy, a revolution in the world's economic and social order would result. These implications include:

- > The removal of all sources of air pollution related to energy generation, including electric power plants, cars, trucks, aircraft and manufacturing.
- > The ability to 'scrub' to near zero effluent all manufacturing processes since the energy per se required for same would have no cost related to fuel consumption. This would allow the full application of technologies which remove effluent from smokestacks, solid waste, and waterways since current applications are generally restricted by their energy costs and the fact that such energy consumption - being fossil fuel based - soon reaches the point of diminishing returns environmentally.
- > The practical achievement of an environmentally near-zero impact yet high tech civilization on earth, thus assuring the long-term sustainability of human civilization.
- > Trillions of dollars now spent on electric power generation, gas, oil, coal and nuclear power would be freed to be spent on more productive and environmentally neutral endeavors by both individuals and society as a whole.
- > Underdeveloped regions of the earth would be lifted out of poverty and into a high technology world in about a generation - but without the associated infrastructure costs and environmental impact related to traditional energy generation and propulsion. Since these new systems generate energy from the ambient quantum energy state, trillion dollar infrastructure investments in centralized power generation and distribution would be eliminated. Remote villages and towns would have the ability to generate energy for manufacturing, electrification, water purification etc without purchasing fuels or building massive transmission lines and central power grids.
- > Near total recycling of resources and materials would be possible since the energy costs for doing so - now the main obstacle - would be brought down to a trivial level.
- > The vast disparity between rich and poor nations would quickly disappear - and with it much of the zero-sum-game mentality which is at the root of so much social, political, and international unrest. In a world of abundant and inexpensive energy, many of the pressures which have led to a cycle of poverty, exploitation, resentment, and violence would be removed from the social dynamic. While ideological, cultural and religious differences would persist, the raw economic disparity and struggle would be removed from the equation fairly quickly.

- > Surface roads—and therefore most road building—will be unnecessary as electrogravitic antigravity energy and propulsion systems replace current surface transportation systems.
- > The world economy would expand dramatically and those advanced economies such as in the US and Europe would benefit tremendously as global trade, development and high technology energy and propulsion devices are demanded around the world. Such a global energy revolution would create an expanding world economy which would make the current computer and Internet economy look like a rounding error. This really would be the tide which would lift all ships.
- > Long term, society would evolve to a psychology of abundance, which would redound to the benefit of humanity as a whole, a peaceful civilization and a society focused increasingly on creative pursuits rather than destructive and violent endeavors.

Lest all of this sound like a pipe dream, keep in mind that such technological advances are not only possible, but they already exist. What is lacking is the collective will, creativity and courage to see that they are applied wisely. And therein lies the problem.

As an emergency and trauma doctor, I know that everything can be used for good or for ill. A knife can butter your bread - or cut your throat. Every technology can have beneficial as well as harmful applications.

The latter partially explains the serious national security and military concerns with such technologies. For many decades, these advances in energy and propulsion technologies have been acquired, suppressed and classified by certain interests who have viewed them as a threat to our security from both an economic and military perspective. In the short term, these concerns have been well-founded: Why rock the global economic boat by allowing technologies out which would, effectively, terminate the multi-trillion dollar oil, gas, coal, internal combustion engine and related transportation sectors of the economy? And which could also unleash such technologies on an unstable and dangerous world where the weapons applications for such technological breakthroughs would be a certainty? In the light of this, the status quo looks good.

But only for the short term. In fact, such national security and military policies - fed by huge special interests in obvious industries and nations - have exacerbated global geopolitical tensions by impoverishing much of the world, worsening the zero-sum-game mind set of the rich versus poor nations and brought us to a world energy emergency and a pending environmental crisis. And now we have very little time to fix the situation. Such thinking must be relegated to the past.

For what can be a greater threat to the national security than the specter of a collapse of our entire civilization from a lack of energy and global chaos as every nation fights for its share of a limited resource? Due to the long lead time needed to transform the current industrial infrastructure away from fossil fuels, we are facing a national security emergency which almost nobody is talking about. This is dangerous.

It has also created a serious constitutional crisis in the US and other countries where non-representative entities and super-secret projects within compartmented military and corporate areas have begun to set national and international policy on this and related matters - all outside the arena of public debate, and mostly without informed consent from Congress or the President.

Indeed this crisis is undermining democracy in the US and elsewhere. I have had the unenviable task of personally briefing senior political, military, and intelligence officials in the US and Europe on this and related matters. These officials have been denied access to information compartmented within certain projects which are, frankly, unacknowledged areas (so-called 'black' projects). Such officials include members of the House and Senate, President Clinton's first Director of Central Intelligence, the head of the DIA, senior Joint Staff officials and others. Usually, the officials have little to no information on such projects and technologies - and are told either nothing or that they do not have a 'need to know' if they specifically inquire.

This presents then another problem: these technologies will not be suppressed forever. For example, our group is planning a near term disclosure of such technologies and we will not be silenced. At the time of such a disclosure, will the US government be prepared? It would behoove the US government and others to be informed and have a plan for transitioning our society from fossil fuels to these new energy and propulsion systems.

Indeed, the great danger is ignorance by our leaders of these scientific breakthroughs - and ignorance of how to manage their disclosure. The advanced countries of the world must be prepared to put systems in place to assure the exclusive peaceful use of such energy and propulsion advances. Economic and industrial interests should be prepared so that those aspects of our economy which will be adversely affected (commodities, oil, gas, coal, public utilities, engine manufacturing, etc) can be cushioned from sudden reversals and be economically 'hedged' by investing in and supporting the new energy infrastructure.

A creative view of the future - not fear and suppression of such technologies - is required. And it is needed immediately. If we wait 10-20 more years, it will be too late to make the needed changes before world oil shortages, exorbitant costs and geopolitical competition for resources causes a melt-down in the world's economy and political structures.

All systems tend towards homeostasis. The status quo is comfortable and secure. Change is frightening. But in this case, the most dangerous course for the national security is inaction. We must be prepared for the coming convulsions related to energy shortages, spiraling costs and economic disruption. The best preparation would be a replacement for oil and related fossil fuels. And we have it. But disclosing these new energy systems carries its own set of benefits, risks and challenges. The US government and the Congress must be prepared to wisely manage this great challenge.

Recommendations for Congress:

- > Thoroughly investigate these new technologies both from current civilian sources as well as compartmented projects within military, intelligence and corporate contracting areas.
- > Authorize the declassification and release of information held within compartmented projects related to this subject.
- > Specifically prohibit the seizing or suppression of such technologies.
- > Authorize substantial funding for basic research and development by civilian scientists and technologists into these areas.
- > Develop plans for dealing with disclosing such technologies and for the transition to a non-fossil fuel economy. These plans should include: military and national security planning; strategic economic planning and preparation; private sector support and cooperation; geopolitical planning, especially as it pertains to OPEC countries and regions whose economies are very dependent on oil exports and the price of oil; international cooperation and security; among others.

I personally stand ready to assist the Congress in any way possible to facilitate our use of these new energy sources. Having dealt with this and related sensitive matters for over 10 years, I can recommend a number of individuals who can be subpoenaed to provide testimony on such technologies, as well as people who have information on Unacknowledged Special Access Projects within covert government operations which are already dealing with these issues.

If we face these challenges with courage and with wisdom together, we can secure for our children a new and sustainable world, free of poverty and environmental destruction. We will be up to this challenge because we must be.

Testimony of Mr. Mark McCandlish, US Air Force

December 2000

Mark McCandlish is an accomplished aerospace illustrator and has worked for many of the top aerospace corporations in the United States. His colleague, Brad Sorenson, with whom he studied, has been inside a facility at Norton Air Force Base, where he witnessed alien reproduction vehicles, or ARVs, that were fully operational and hovering. In his testimony, you will learn that the US not only has operational antigravity propulsion devices, but we have had them for many, many years, and they have been developed through the study, in part, of extraterrestrial vehicles over the past fifty years. In addition, we have the drawing from aerospace inventor Brad Sorenson of the devices that he saw, as well as a schematic of one of these alien reproduction vehicles—in some remarkable detail.

I work principally as a conceptual artist. Most of my clients are in the defense industry I occasionally work directly for the military, but most the time I work for civilian corporations that are defense contractors and build weapons systems and things for the military. I've worked for all the major defense contractors: General Dynamics, Lockheed, Northrop, McDonald-Douglas, Boeing, Rockwell International, Honeywell, and Allied Signet Corporation.

In 1967 when I was at Westover Air Force Base, one night before going to bed I saw this light moving across the sky; then it just kind of stopped, and there wasn't any noise. I took the dog back in the house, and I brought out my telescope and watched this thing through the telescope for about ten minutes. In fact, it was hovering directly over the facility where they kept the nuclear weapons—at the storage facility near the alert hangers at Westover Air Force Base. It started to move off, and it moved off slowly and kind of wandered around the sky. Then, all of a sudden it was gone, like it had been fired out of a gun. It was out of sight in just a second or two.

Well, it all started coming together when I was working at IntroVision, and John Eppolito talked about this interview that he had done with a person who had, for some reason, wound up walking up to, or near a hangar at a section of a military Air Force base. [He] had seen a flying saucer in a hangar, and then he was arrested—hauled off, blindfolded, and debriefed—this sort of thing. Then I learned that this fellow, Mark Stambough, had developed an experiment that created a kind of levitation. In some circles it's been called electrogravitic levitation, or antigravity.

What he did, apparently, was acquire a high voltage power source—a DC (direct current) power source, and he took a couple of quarter-inch-thick copper plates about a foot in diameter, with a lead coming out of the middle of each one at the top and the bottom. [Then], he basically embedded them in a type of plastic resin like polycarbonate or Plexiglas, or some other kind of clear resin where you could see the plates, and you could see the material. Apparently, he did everything he could to get all the little air bubbles and stuff out of there, so there wouldn't be any pathways for the electricity to break down the material and arc through them. The experiment was to see how much voltage you could put on this capacitor—the sub-plate capacitor—in this arrangement; how much voltage could you put on this thing before the insulating material begins to just break down?

Well, he got up to about a million volts, and the thing would begin to float, and it floated in accordance with principles that had been described in a patent that was filed back in the late 1950s/early 1960s by a gentleman called Thomas Townsend Brown. Brown and another individual by the name of Dr. Biefeld had done this, so this effect became known as the Biefeld-Brown effect. Well, [Stambough] apparently duplicated the experiments done by Biefeld and Brown, [and] the one aspect they found about this arrangement was that the levitation or movement would occur in the direction of the positively-charged plate. So, if you had two plates, one is negative, and one is positive because of the direct current system. If you have the positive plate on top, it would move in that direction. If you had it on a pendulum, it would always swing in whatever direction the positive plate was facing.

Later, I got a call from a kid that I had known in school, a fellow by the name of Brad Sorensen. He apparently had recognized my name [from some work I had done in a magazine], and had contacted the art director who gave him my phone number, and he called me up. It turned out that he had gone to work for a design firm in the Glendale/Pasadena area of California and ultimately wound up acquiring most of the clientele for this particular agency.

In the process, he developed a business practice where he would create conceptual designs and products for different clients. The way he structured his business [was to] set it up so that if he came up with some new and novel design, something that was patentable, the client would pay to have the patent secured. Then he would agree, if the patent was in his name, to license it exclusively to them and no one else, and they would pay him royalties. So, he got his clients to pay for all these patents, and he had all these royalties coming in, and he was a millionaire before 30.

So, this is Brad Sorensen coming back to me eight years after school, and we're talking, and he's telling me all these interesting stories. There was an air show that was coming up at Norton Air Force Base, which used to be an active Air Force base right on the eastern fringe of San Bernardino in Southern California.

I suggested that we get together and go to this air show. I had heard that they were going to have a fly-by (a flying demonstration) by the SR-71 Blackbird, and he seemed to know a lot about it, so I said, well, let's do that. It turned out [that] at the last minute, the magazine Popular Science came back again and [told me] they had some really, really crazy deadline for another illustration, and they wanted to know if I could do it over the weekend, so I had to beg off on this air show.

Brad had already made arrangements to go, and he was going to bring one of his clients with him. It turned out that this client was a tall, thin, white-haired man with glasses [and] an Italian-sounding last name. He was already a millionaire in his own right and was in civilian life again after having been either a Secretary of Defense or an Under-Secretary of Defense. Brad wanted me to meet this gentleman, and if I had known this at the time, I probably would have told the magazine to wait, because I had no idea at that point what I was going to be missing out on.

Believe me, I've kicked myself ever since, because the following week, after Brad got back home, he called me up and told me about the air show. He told me about what he had seen there: apparently, right about the time the Air Force flying demonstration team, the Thunderbirds, were planning to begin their show, this gentleman that Brad was with said, "Follow me," and they [went] walking down to the other end of the airfield, away from where the crowds were, to this huge hangar that's at Norton Air Force Base. I don't remember the building number, but it's got to be one of the largest hangars in the Air Force inventory.

In fact, on the base it was called The Big Hangar. It looks like four giant Quonset hut style hangars that are all connected in the middle, with shops and work areas out around the edges, and there is sort of a divider in the middle.

[See the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel John Williams. SG]

This gentleman took Brad down there. He said, "I'm here to talk to the guy who is running the show," so the guard goes in and out comes the same guard with a gentleman in a three-piece suit, who immediately recognizes this fellow that Brad is with: this fellow whom I speculate was probably Frank Carlucci. They go inside, and immediately after getting inside the door, this fellow apparently passes Brad off as his aide to this fellow who is managing the exhibit that's going on inside this hangar. This exhibit is for some of the local politicians who are cleared for high security information, [plus] some of the local military officials.

Well, as soon as they walk in, Brad is told by this fellow that he is with, "There are a lot of things in here that I didn't expect they were going to have on display—stuff you probably shouldn't be seeing. So, don't talk to anybody, don't ask any questions, just keep your mouth shut, smile and nod, but don't say anything—just enjoy the show. We're going to get out of here as soon as we can."

In the process, the host or the person running the show was very engaging with the gentleman that Brad was with, so they bring them in, and they are showing them everything. There was the losing prototype from the B-2 Stealth Bomber competition. They also had what was called the Lockheed Pulsar, nicknamed the Aurora.

These things had the ability to be just about anywhere in the world 30 minutes after launch, with the capability of 121 nuclear warheads—you know, probably 10-15 megaton weapons—a tactical type nuclear reentry vehicle.

So, getting back to Brad's story at Norton Air Force Base: one of the other things he said was that after they showed them all of these aircraft, they had a big black curtain that divided the hangar into two different areas. Behind these curtains was another big area, and inside this area they had all the lights turned off; so, they go in and they turn the lights on, and here are three flying saucers floating off the floor—no cables suspended from the ceiling holding them up, no landing gear underneath—just floating, hovering above the floor. They had little exhibits with a videotape running, showing the smallest of the three vehicles sitting out in the desert, presumably over a dry lakebed—someplace like Area 51. It showed this vehicle making three little quick, hopping motions; then [it] accelerated straight up and out of sight, completely disappearing from view in just a couple of seconds—no sound, no sonic boom—nothing.

They had a cut-away illustration, pretty much like the one I'll show you in a little bit, that showed what the internal components of this vehicle were, and they had some of the panels taken off so you could actually look in and see oxygen tanks and a little robotic arm that could extend out from the side of the vehicle for collecting samples and things. So, obviously, this is a vehicle that not only is capable of flying around through the atmosphere, but it's also capable of going out to space and collecting samples, and it's using a type of propulsion system that doesn't make any noise. As far as he could see, it had no moving parts and didn't have any exhaust gases or fuel to be expended—it was just there hovering.

So, he listened intently and collected as much information as he could, and when he came back, he told me how he had seen these three flying saucers in this hangar at Norton Air Force Base on November 12, 1988—it was a Saturday. He said that the smallest was somewhat bell-shaped. They were all identical in shape and proportion, except that there were three different sizes. The smallest, at its widest part, was flat on the bottom, somewhat bell-shaped, and had a dome or a half of a sphere on top. The sides were sloping at about a 35-degree angle from pure vertical.

The panels that were around the skirt had been removed, so he could see one of these big oxygen tanks inside. He was very specific in describing the oxygen tanks as being about 16 to 18 inches in diameter, about 6 feet long, and they were all radially-oriented, like the spokes of a wheel. This dome that was visible on the top was actually the upper half of a big sphere-shaped crew compartment that was in the middle of the vehicle, and around the middle of this vehicle was actually a large plastic casting that had this big set of copper coils in it. He said it was about 18 inches wide at the top, and about 8 to 9 inches thick. It had maybe 15 to 20 stacked layers of copper coils inside of it.

The bottom of the vehicle was about 11 or 12 inches thick. In both cases, the coil and this large disc at the bottom were like a big plastic casting—sort of a greenish-blue, clear plastic, or it might have been glass. I determined, using my conceptual artist skills, that there were exactly 48 sections like thin slices of pizza pie, and each section within this casting probably weighed four or five tons, judging by the thickness and the diameter. It must have been monstrous in weight. It was full of half-inch-thick copper plates, and each of the 48 sections had 8 copper plates.

So, here we are back to the plate capacitors again, and the prospect of someone finding a way to use the Biefeld-Brown effect—this levitation effect where you charge a capacitor to lift towards a positive plate. Now, when you've got eight plates stacked up in there, they alternate. It goes: negative positive, negative, positive, negative, positive—four times, so you ultimately wind up with the positive plates always being above a set of negative plates as you go up.

On the inside of the crew compartment was a big column that ran down through the middle, and there were four ejection seats mounted back-to-back on the upper half of this column. Then, right in the middle of the column, was a large flywheel of some kind.

Well, this craft was what they called the Alien Reproduction Vehicle; it was also nicknamed the Flux Liner. This antigravity propulsion system—this flying saucer—was one of three that were in this hangar at Norton Air Force Base. [Its] synthetic vision system [used] the same kind of technology as the gun slaving system they have in the Apache helicopter: if [the pilot] wants to look behind him, he can pick a view in that direction, and the cameras slew in pairs. [The pilot] has a little screen in front of his helmet, and it gives him an alternating view. He [also] has a little set of glasses that he wears—in fact, you can actually buy a 3-D viewing system for your video camera now that does this same thing—so when he looks around, he has a perfect 3-D view of the outside, but no windows. So, why do they have no windows? Well, it's probably because the voltages that we're talking about [being] used in this system were probably something between, say, half a million and a million volts of electricity.

Now, he said there were three vehicles. The first one—the smallest, the one that was partially taken apart, the one that was shown in the video that was running in this hangar November 12, 1988 at Norton Air Force Base—was about 24 feet in diameter at its widest part, right at the base. The next biggest one was 60 feet in diameter at the base.

Now, I started looking at the design of this thing, and it occurred to me that what I was looking at was a huge Tesla coil, which is kind of like an open-air transformer. What happens is that when you pass electricity through this large diameter coil, it creates a field.

That's what this system does: it takes electricity, using two large 24-volt marine-style batteries. You basically use that to somehow put an alternating current through these windings. [Then], you step up that electricity through the secondary coil, which is on the column in the middle, and you get this extremely high voltage. You can selectively put the voltage on any of these 48 capacitor sections.

Well, why would you want to do that? If you're using just a normal Tesla coil, you usually have maybe one or two capacitors in the whole system. But, you're talking about a different type of capacitor here—you're talking about capacitors that are made up of plates—plates that are shaped like long, thin triangles, and they are all radially-oriented just like the spokes of a wheel, just like the oxygen tanks, just like the field lines from that large diameter coil. As you look at this system, if you're an electrician or just somebody who knows a little bit about Tesla coils and the way they are set up, you begin to realize that the orientation of components is really the key to making the system work.

Why so many different capacitor sections? If you just have one big disc like Mark Stambough did with his experiment at the University of [Arizona]—which, by the way, was confiscated by men claiming to be from the government and claiming privilege under the National Security Act. They took all this stuff, interviewed all the people that saw the experiments, and told everybody to keep their mouths shut and not talk about it. But, I heard about it from his roommate who knew what had happened. [Anyway], in that case, you have levitation, but you don't get any control. You have this thing floating around, and it's just sort of floating on whatever this field is that it's producing, but you don't have any control.

So, what happens? You break that disc up into 48 different sections, and then you can decide how much electricity you want to put on this side or over there on that side, so you can control the amount of electricity and the amount of thrust and vectoring that you get. You can make it go straight up, you can make it bank and turn and pitch—whatever you want to, by virtue of the fact that you can control where the electricity goes in those 48 different sections. If you ever take a circle and divide it up into 48 equal sections, you'll find that those are really thin little slices. So, you have these 48 individual capacitors, and you have one big Tesla coil. You've got to have some kind of a rotating spark gap, just like the distributor in your car, that sends the electricity out to each of those sections. Then, you have to have some way of controlling how much electricity goes to each one.

[A disc-shaped craft like this has omnidirectional movement—it isn't limited to moving in one direction like a jet with a nose and a tail. LW, after talking to McCandlish.]

Now, when Brad described the control system, he said that on the one side there was this big high-voltage potentiometer—it's like a rheostat, a big controller. It allows you to put progressively more electricity through the system as you push the lever. On the other side of the control system, there was a sort of a metallic bar rhat came up like a storks neck, and right at the very tip of it was a sort of metallic-looking ball. Attached to that ball was a kind of a bowl that seemed to just hang off the bottom of the ball, almost like it was magnetically attached to it. He said the whole thing would just sit there, and it would kind of rock and list, almost like a large ship at anchor in a harbor on the ocean, floating on the water. It was literally on a sea of energy.

Dr. John Moray did experiments with different kinds of energy—something that may have been scalar energy—back in the early 1920s or the 1930s, I believe it was. He wrote a book called The Sea of Energy, and he describes this type of energy. Brad said that when this thing was moving around, the system wasn't energized to its full strength, so components inside the ship were still subject to some influence by gravity. He [said] as it would start to list in one direction, the bowl, because of the influence of gravity, would swing in the same direction. As it started to tilt, it would slide over and it would power up the system on that side, and it would bring it back to a righted position all by itself. Completely unmanned, it would sit there, and it would correct itself just while it was sitting there.

It was all linked fiber-optically. Well, why would that make any difference? Why would you want to have a system that's all linked fiber-optically? The reason is that if you find a way to control gravity, you reduce the mass of it. If you are able to do that, what are the other side benefits? What if you somehow found a way of tapping into this scalar field, this zero-point energy? If what the scientists believe is true, then the zero-point energy is actually what keeps the electrons around the atomic structure of everything in our universe. It keeps them energized—it keeps those little electrons spinning in their different clouds around the nucleus of every atom in our world. It keeps them going, keeps them from crashing into the nucleus like a satellite orbiting the earth gets pulled into the atmosphere by gravitational drag. Well, if you have a way of interfering with that interaction, that absorption of zero-point energy by those electrons, they begin to slow down.

Every atom in the universe is just like a little gyroscope: it's got all these electrons spinning around the nucleus, and they have a gyroscopic effect, which is the effect we call inertia and mass. We have one nucleus with a proton and a neutron and one electron—hydrogen—spinning around like that: not very much mass, not too much inertia. If you take uranium 235, [with] 235 electrons all spinning around in their different clouds, there is a lot of mass; there is a lot of inertia, because it's like a bigger gyroscope, in a way. At least, that's the analogy that I've kind of picked up here. But, if you have a way of interfering with that absorption of zero-point energy so those electrons become de-energized, they begin to slow down. The effect of that inertia, that gyroscopic effect, begins to drop off, and the mass drops off too, even though the atomic structure is intact; and it's still there—it's still uranium, but it's not as heavy.

One of the things Einstein said was that you could never accelerate anything up to and past the speed of light. If you did, you would have to have all the energy in the universe, because as you accelerate through space, mass increases. One of the old films showing this concept shows a train going faster and faster towards the speed of light, but the train keeps getting bigger and bigger until the engine just can't pull it, so it can never pass the speed of light.

But, what if you have a system, a device, that absorbs that zero-point energy and prevents it from interacting with the atomic structure of the vehicle? And at the same time, it's providing additional power to the capacitor section—this whole electrical system that is going on in the vehicle, that's running. In effect, the faster you go, the easier it becomes to go up to and exceed the speed of light.

Brad said that in this exhibit at Norton Air Force Base, a three star general said that these vehicles were capable of doing light speed or better. Oh, by the way, the largest of these vehicles was about 120 to 130 feet in diameter. I mean, that's massive when you think about it—it's just huge.

There is a scientist in Utah by the name of Moray B. King—he wrote a book called Tapping the Zero Point Energy. What he maintains is that this energy is embedded in space-time all around us; it's in everything we see. I think it was James Clerk Maxwell who speculated that there's enough of this flux, this electrical charge, in the nothingness of space, that if you could capture all the energy that was embedded in just a cubic yard of space, you'd have enough energy to boil the oceans of the entire world. That's how much energy is sitting there waiting to be tapped. Now, one of the things that Moray B. King said was that the best way to tap that energy is by driving it out of equilibrium. It's just like a bunch of cigarette smoke in a box, but if you somehow send a shockwave through it, you can get force—you can get ripples through it. Then, if you have a way of collecting that energy at the other end, you have a way of tapping into it and using it.

This Alien Reproduction Vehicle, this Flux Liner, has a way of doing that somehow, electronically. Now, Brad had described the fact that this central column has a kind of vacuum chamber in it. The vacuum chamber is one of the things that all of these scientists describe in these over-unity or free energy devices they build. They all have some kind of vacuum tubes, vacuum technology.

Brad maintained that inside this big vacuum chamber in the central column that's inside everything else—inside the flywheel, inside the secondary coils of the Tesla coil, inside the crew compartment—there is mercury vapor. Mercury vapor will conduct electricity, but it produces all kinds of ionic effects. These little molecules of mercury become charged in unusual ways, and if you fire a tremendous amount of electricity through mercury vapor that's in a partial vacuum, there is something special, something unusual that happens in that process.

I believe it's the process that Moray [King] came to describe when he [proposed] driving the energy in the vacuum out of equilibrium, putting some kind of a shockwave through it.

Now, the other thing that I believe happens here, is that as this system begins to tap into this zero-point energy and is drawing it away from the local environment, the whole craft becomes lighter in weight—it becomes partially mass-canceled, if you will, which is one of the reasons why just a little bit of energy in the capacitors could shoot it all over the place.

One of the things that I believe happens, is when you take a system like this and you fire it up, everything in the system starts to become mass-canceled. The next thing that happens is that the electrons that are flowing through the system also become mass-canceled. What does that mean? It means as that system and all the electrons flowing through that big Tesla coil become mass-canceled, it also becomes the perfect super-conductor, which means the efficiency of the systems goes right through the ceiling. You get dramatic efficiency, just like the whole thing was dunked into liquid nitrogen or made out of pure silver or pure gold, which at certain temperatures are perfect conductors—it becomes lighter and can accelerate at incredible speeds.

[The faster it goes, the lighter it gets, and the faster it's able to go. LW, after talking to McCandlish]

In 1992, I met a man named Kent Sellen and, as it turned out, Kent Sellen and I had a mutual friend: a fellow by the name of Bill Scott, or William Scott, who was a local editor for a trade publication called Aviation Week and Space Technology.

Bill Scott used to be a test pilot at Edwards Air Force Base back in the early 1970s, and Kent Sellen had been a crew chief working on the plane that Bill Scott flew. So I was talking to Kent Sellen about this and he nodded his head and smiled a big wide grin, and he winked and he kind of said, "Yes, I know what you're talking about." I [asked], how do you know what I'm talking about? And he [said] "Because I've seen one." At that point, I keyed in on something that John Eppolito of IntroVision had told me about something in a hangar—something that someone had seen in a hangar.

So, I [asked] Kent, when I'm meeting him at this air show at Edwards in 1992, was it flat on the bottom and had sloping sides and a dome on the top and little camera things? And he said, "Oh, you've seen one?" I said, let me borrow your pen. I took out a little piece of paper, drew a sketch, and I [asked] does it look like that? He said, "Yes, that's it—that's what it looks like." I [asked] when did you see this? He [replied], "I saw it in 1973." I [asked] where, when did you see it? He [responded], "I was a crew chief, [and] I worked on Bill Scott's plane when he was a test pilot."

He [told me] one night [his] shift supervisor [had told him], "Go out to North Base—they've got a ground power unit for an aircraft that's leaking or failed or something, so we need you to take a tow vehicle out there. Go out, pick it up, bring it back, drop it off at the repair depot; then you can go for the night, because we've finished all our other work." Well, instead of going around the big perimeter road that goes up to the main entrance of North Base, Kent Sellen drove straight across the dry lake bed at Edwards to the North Base facility. He [came] up off the dry lake bed, [rolled] right up on the tarmac, and [was] going down these rows of hangars—they [were] all Quonset-style hangars back then. He [stopped] in front of the first one with the doors cracked, expecting to find this defective ground power unit, and what [did] he see? He [saw] this flying saucer sitting in the hangar, hovering off the ground.

This brings me back to John Eppolito's story about a guy who saw a UFO in a hangar sometime prior to 1982, when I met him. I [asked], what happened? He [said], "This thing was flat on the bottom, [with] sloping sides, little cameras in these little plastic domes all over, [and] there was a door on the side. I wasn't there for 15 seconds, [when] I heard footsteps running up to me, and before I could even turn around and look, there was a machine gun barrel at my throat." A gruff voice [said], "Close your eyes and get on the ground, or we're going to blow your head off."

They put a hood over his head, blindfolded him, hauled him off, and they spent 18 hours debriefing him. While they did, they told him things about this vehicle that my buddy Brad didn't even know.

Brad had said that all of the components in the system were off-the-shelf components—things that you could find right in the inventory. They [had] their own oxygen supply, and he [said] they [ejected] once they [got] below 15,000 feet. The individual seats [came] down off this central column on a set of rails, just like little railroad cars. They [came] off one-by-one, and the parachutes [came] out, and away they [went].

I looked at all this information that I got from Brad, [and] I realized there [was] a mechanical arm that [could] extend out from these little trap doors that [opened] up on the side of the vehicle. It [was] obvious that these things [were] capable of space travel. 10 [or] 15 years ago, I was talking to Tom Bearden about scalar effects. One of the things that he said, just off the top of his head, was, "Have you ever wondered why the NASA budget has been cut back so severely? It's because they've got all this other technology that is so much better, so much faster. They are so much better than rocket-propelled spaceships that take months, sometimes years, to get to the outer reaches of the solar system. Why would you put millions and millions of dollars [into] what [amounts to] a public works program for scientists? Why invest all that money when you have this classified system that's used exclusively by the National Security Agency, the CIA, or Air Force Intelligence? It will go anywhere in the solar system in hours, compared to months or years. Why spend all that money on NASA when you've got something that will go there right now?"

When people speculate that there [might] be manned bases on the back side of the moon or there might be bases on Mars, I can tell you that I am almost positive that that's true. In fact, I am positive that it's true.

I have met another man who knows about these things. He said, "I work at the B-2 bomber facility out at Plant 42 in Palmdale and Lancaster. Catty-corner across from the big production facility for the B-2 bomber, down at the southwest corner of the field is the Lockheed Skunkworks—it's that huge complex down there." I said, yes, I know exactly where that is. He [said] "In the summer of 1992, I was outside about 10:30 at night, because I work a late shift and was smoking a cigarette, and I noticed that the sheriff's deputies were blocking off all of the streets surrounding Plant 42. They do that anytime there is a classified aircraft that is coming in to land or is departing from Plant 42."

He [continued], "I noticed all the streets being blocked off, and sitting out in front of this hangar [was] this circular formation of vehicles—but they [were] really weird vehicles. They [were] like a little tractor with a turret on it, and the turret [had] a big mechanical arm with a basket on the end of it. It's the kind of thing that electrical linemen use to work on high-tension power lines, but the baskets [were] all up in the air, and strung from each one of the baskets in this big circle is this big black curtain that [came] down, and there [was] a rope that [tied] them all together."

He said, "I looked up above the circular vehicle, and at about 500 feet was this big, black lens-shaped flying saucer, just sitting there above the vehicles. Out of the midst of this group of vehicles [came] a man with a big blue-green handheld flashlight. [He shined] it up at the vehicle and [flashed] it three times. There were three blue-green lights underneath the vehicle, and they [flashed back] at him three times."

"Then this thing [lowered] down into [the] cluster of vehicles. The arms all [extended] out over the center and [covered] this craft all up with the curtain — then they all [trundled] into the hangar. The doors [closed], lights [came] on, [and] the sheriffs [left]." He said he smoked a lot of cigarettes for the next week after that, waiting to see something else, and a week later his patience was rewarded when the whole process reversed itself. He said that the lights [went] out, the doors [opened], [and] this cluster of vehicles [came] out. The arms all [stood] up, and after a while, this thing silently [rose] up to about 500 feet above the vehicles. The guy [came] out with the flashlight, [flashed] three times, [and] it [flashed] its lights at him three times.

Then he said this thing took off, [covering] the entire length of the runway, which is right next to the B-2 facility. It went past him and disappeared into the dark in under two seconds—and this vehicle did it without any noise, without any supersonic shockwave, no sonic boom, nothing—just like it had been fired from a canon. He said it changed [his] life. It changed [his] whole perspective, because then he [knew they had] anti-gravity—massless propulsion. He [said they had] technology that they might have even recovered from some kind of a spacecraft that came from God-knows-where—some other star system—but, he [said] the fact [was they had] it.

We have found a patent filed by a James King Jr., and this patent looks just like this system except that instead of having a dome for a crew compartment, it has a cylinder in the center. [It has] the same shape, the flat bottom, [and] the sloping sides. It has the coils around the circumference, [and] it has the capacitor plates that are all radially-oriented. This patent was filed initially in 1960 [and] was secured in 1967—the same year that a photo was taken near Provo, Utah that looks just like [this craft].

The clincher is the guy who filed the patent worked with Townsend Brown. Townsend Brown had worked at a laboratory near Princeton, New Jersey with a scientist by the name of Agnew Bahnson in the Bahnson Laboratories. They did all these experiments that they were calling electrogravitic propulsion. There is [a] video that was converted from the 16-millimeter film that was shot by Agnew Bahnson's daughter. Originally it was called "Daddy's Laboratory", and it shows all these experiments that Bahnson and Thomas Townsend Brown did, along with their assistant James King [J. Frank King], who filed the patent. That film shows little discs levitating and shooting off sparks and stuff. So, it all kind of comes full circle.

You see that now, they not only have the technology, they've got the technology in deployment. Not only does it fly but it looks just like the patents that were filed back in the 1960s—the same year the photos were taken near Area 51—between Area 51 and Provo, Utah, by a military pilot. It shows all the same features; it shows all the same shapes. So, the bottom line for me is that regardless of whether you understand all the fine points of the technology, the technology exists and there are people that have seen it. I have seen these things myself, so to me its just really a matter of time before they bring this technology out of the black and begin to let us use it for other things like pollution-free production of energy. You could probably take a couple of little things that look like those flying saucers and put them around a crank shaft and use them to drive an engine, pollution-free—no use of fuel.

Anyway, the only other thing that I could say, is that when I was talking about the fiber optic control system, that's also one of the things that goes back to the original Roswell account that there were all these little fibers with light going through them, and they couldn't explain what this stuff was. Well, why would you need a fiber optic system in a spaceship? If, suddenly, everything in the vehicle becomes mass-canceled, and even the electrons become mass-canceled, it means that all of the telemetry that's going through your system is going to go haywire. It's going to be like, suddenly, the system goes through a phase change, and everything is super-conducting. So, you have to have some way of maintaining the same level of control for your spark gaps—the control of the amount of electricity that goes out of the capacitors—so that when you change the control stick, you still get the same amount of movement and deflection in the system, even when you go into a state of mass-cancellation or partial mass-cancellation, because the electrons are also mass-canceled, so they become super-conducting circuits.

Why use fiber optics? Because photons have no mass, so they are unaffected. That means any information, any telemetry that you send back and forth to your computer gets there. It doesn't matter if the computer functions at the super-conducting level, because it just makes it faster, more efficient, smarter. You want to be able to control the aircraft so it doesn't crash, and what's the best way to do it? With fiber optics.

Testimony of Professor Paul Czyst

November 2000

Dr. Paul Czyst is a Professor of Aeronautical Engineering at Parks College in St. Louis. He spent 8 years in the Air Force at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, and another 30 years working for McDonnell-Douglas in the field of exotic technologies. While at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, he was involved in tracking UFOs over Missouri, Ohio, and Michigan. These UFOs were seen by many people: military, local police, and civilians, and were clocked at speeds around 20,000 MPH as they performed unusual, silent maneuvers. Dr. Czyst spent more than half his career at McDonnell-Douglas working on classified and compartmentalized projects, and testifies to the processes involved in maintaining secrecy on these projects. He warns against the human tendency to make every new technology into a weapon, pointing out that our weaponization of space does not address the threat of earth terrorists, and the idea of using these weapons against extraterrestrial targets would be suicidal.

PC: Professor Paul Czyst

I: Interviewer

PC: I'm a graduate of Parks College. I started in the Air Force at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base and was in the Air Force for two years, [plus] stayed an additional six years working in research. Then I returned to McDonnell-Douglas and stayed there for thirty years. I finally ended up at Parks College again as an endowed Chair.

At McDonnell-Douglas, we did a lot of high-speed work—hypersonics. We worked on things that flew from Mach 4 to Mach 12, and had some airplanes that flew Mach 12 all the way around the world. We almost built it.

One of the more interesting nights I had at Wright-Patterson was when I was the assistant to the head officer-of-the-day over at Patterson Field. We had 151 phone calls come in regarding unidentified objects flying down U.S. 40— then turning at Columbus and going up to Detroit. These [calls] were [from] state policemen, some doctors that worked late at night, all kinds of people that reported seeing this. We had radar tracks on them and had airliners call in that they had seen them. It was very, very interesting. These guys gave very clear descriptions of what they saw.

You know, probably more than half of my career was in projects that were classified or compartmentalized.

I: Can you describe how that process works?

PC: Generally, depending on the level of the compartmentalization and the secrecy level, you have to go through a fairly significant background check. It takes between six months to a year to get the background checks. Then, when you do that, if you're in a very tight compartment, you sign a statement that you will not divulge the existence of the project or even answer a question that could acknowledge the existence of the project. It's not even on a need-to-know basis; it's on the basis of people being identified specifically to know what you're working on and [who are] directly associated with the project, so it's very closely-contained material.

If you have a covert project, the funding would come through a number of government sources, none of which would be identified to the workers. Whatever high-level people were involved in it—even they might not know where the funding came from. It's just that you sign a contract with the U.S. government, and the funding would show up at the right place at the right time.

If there were non-earthbound sources of the information, the people who were doing the design work or doing the analysis work would never have any idea of where it [the materiel] came from. All you would have to do is visit Russia to see how they did it. They would compartmentalize every project into what I used to call silos, and they would have a colonel or a general sitting on top of that, and literally, they could not talk to anyone outside of that silo. If someone else needed help, one person would be sent over to another place, sit down at a desk, look at a piece of paper, say, "Yes, I know what that problem is; here's the answer to it," and walk away. He would not even know what it was that he was working on.

The giant triangles that appear over Palmdale move very slowly—they're very large and very slow-moving. That's different, I think, [from] the ones that appear all over Belgium and that are very fast-moving.

You can't explain that in conventional physics. By conventional physics, I mean engines and jet engines and rocket motors and propulsion systems as we know them today. You put fuel in, you burn something, and it produces thrust and accelerates an object. In conventional physics, you cannot explain how human beings could live long enough to go much beyond the edge of our little solar system.

So, in conventional terms, no, you can't explain it. It has to be related to quantum physics, in which things can appear to be almost two places at the same time, and appear and reappear just like positrons and electrons do in some of the high-energy particle colliders. It's a coupling of the device with the energy that permeates space. Probably Tesla was close to it when he said that if given the right energy system, the right electromagnetic spectrum, he could power a human base on Mars from Earth, without any loss of energy. In quantum physics and zero-point energy, that's a possibility.

Sakharov and others were working on this and made very convincing arguments that the fabric of space is like an ocean, an energy ocean, in which solid energy is floating, and solid energy is the mass. If that's true, then gravity waves exist, and in fact, everything goes back to Heavyside's [phonetic spelling] equations. Here, the quantum is now not mass, but time. If that's true, then you look at the whole universe in a different light. A lot of things become possible, that we think impossible within our current understanding of what time and space and thrust and force are.

If these UFOs come from another part of the universe, it must involve something like this. Even our galaxy is about 100,000 light years across. All of the conventional thrust and force mechanisms that we conceive of just won't work in terms of human timeframes. If people are here from another civilization, then they've understood the finer points of quantum physics.

When I was at Wright-Patterson, we had the flying saucers that covered the distance from Columbus to Detroit in something like the equivalent of about 20,000 miles an hour. Back then, I don't think anyone in the ordinary aerospace business would have had any knowledge of quantum physics or wormholes or the types of things we know now. But, if you went to CERN now and talked to the particle physicists, they would tell you certainly, some of this was possible, because they see it all the time. Where they think they see mass, they really see energy frozen in a time quantum. What they're seeing is really a frozen bundle of energy. It moves back and forth almost without any restrictions.

The UFOs weren't phenomena that were [just] people's imagination. Whatever they saw was real; I couldn't explain how it was real, what made it real, but I think they saw what they saw.

Near St. Louis, there was a fairly large triangular object seen, and it traveled the distance down to south St. Louis. In some of its sightings, it was moving relatively benignly, but then it literally jumped about 20 miles in a couple of seconds. I received a lot of phone calls from the local newspapers and TV stations, asking how that could be done. I said, I don't know how it can, unless you explain it through something like a quantum physics explanation of time and space and relationships that gave you time and space travel. Other than that, there's no way to do that. And, this object made no sound at all. It starts out at hover, and it literally almost disappears and pops over here—so it's not like a cartoon where it goes "whoosh." It's almost like it disappears and comes up over here, according to the descriptions that some of the police officers gave.

The hard part is to find a way to physically do that. There are people who have been experimenting with zero-point energy, or who tried to tap zero-point energy for years. Every once-in-a-while, someone will do it accidentally. They'll call it cold fusion, but I don't think it's cold fusion; I just think it's a zero-point energy tap. Except for three people that I know, no one has been able to control it. When it happens, it happens for a short period of time and it's almost always destructive. It's like drilling a hole into the base of Grand Coulee Dam, and all of a sudden a jet of water comes out that literally has enough pressure to cut you in half. Without a valve on it, you can't shut it off.

There's one guy that a friend of mine actually visited in Ann Arbor, Michigan, who I consider a mathematical genius, and who actually figured out a way to control it. He was terrified that someone would kill him for the knowledge that he had and the ability to tap this whenever he chose to, and control it. We haven't seen him in five years; we don't know where he is.

Today you've got an energy problem with the price of oil. What do you think would happen if you introduced the ability to tap this zero-point energy? Zero-point energy represents about 40-50 megawatts of power per cubic inch of space. That's a lot of power. If you could tap it at will, then no one would have to sell gasoline or oil anymore. You would just tap into it. It would be like going out to the Great Lakes and taking out one drop and using it—you'd hardly miss it. And, since it permeates the whole universe and it continually fluctuates as matter-anti-matter interaction, it's not like it's a steady lake. It's a pool the size of the universe. So, for what we would use it for, you'd never even miss it.

This one researcher claimed if you bottle it and move it to another location and release it, you'd create a tear in the time domain of local space and actually cause a problem, which he claims he did, and he will never do it again.

Also, it doesn't work in conventional jet engines. One has to create an actual zero-point energy engine to do that. This researcher in Ann Arbor, Michigan had one running in his basement. It was not connected to any power source whatsoever, sitting in the middle of a table, and it had been running for a year.

But, none of these researchers would have an inkling of how you would build a ship the size of a football field and make it move at the speeds that apparently it [the one near St. Louis] moved. Speed's actually the wrong word, because conventionally, we think of this as speeding through space, but what if it really acts like some of the high-energy particles at CERN? They really transfer into energy and reappear over here, and there was no mass that went anywhere—because all mass is solid energy. The conventional wisdom is that a complex organic structure like [a human] cannot transfer back and forth from energy to solid, but that's just because we've never seen it done.

What you represent is solid energy. You think you're solid, right? In fact, the distance between the atoms in your body [is] almost exactly relatively proportional to the same distance as the planets around the sun. So, if you could look at your individual atoms, you would be 98 percent space. If you were the equivalent of a neutron star, which is only the nucleus and the electrons compressed, you would fit on the point of a pin. When you really get down to what you're made out of, the total state of you is on the point of a pin.

James S. McDonnell [who founded McDonnell-Douglas Aircraft] actually had an institute to study paranormal psychology. That's why his airplanes were named Banshee and Phantom. He was an Irishman who was very much interested in the spiritual world and the paranormal, and he had part of his research department working with [his] foundation to study the paranormal.

[See the testimony of Dr. Robert Wood confirming this. SG]

The "Great Randi", the magician, infiltrated his organization and actually, for about six months, did sleight-of-hand experiments to [deceive] him. There would be something really there, and then he'd discredit it—the head of the research department eventually would not even talk about anything related to this.

The guy in Ann Arbor that had the zero-point energy machine actually came to McDonnell-Douglas. He and his partners came in, and they were going to talk about this hydrogen motor that they had. I got invited to the meeting, and about halfway through it, I just said, guys, you have a zero-point energy machine—why don't you admit it? The head of the research department who was discredited [by Randi] was put off when the inventors discussed this. [He] had the guards come in and escort them off the plant, because the head of research was just so terrified of this happening again—he thought it was pseudoscience. I said, it's not pseudoscience; it's just beyond what we know right now.

[There are many accounts of people infiltrating operations to discredit or spin an area of research so it is ridiculed, thus keeping it out of mainstream development and acceptance. SG]

Parapsychology—how do you measure it? The only people I know that have come close are the Russians in their parapsychology institutes, most of which are all now defunct. They had some very interesting twins that they were doing experiments with: they were measuring something that was occurring between the two of them, in their brains, so they could actually know what the other one was thinking. It's utterly amazing—the spectrum of electromagnetics that are going on inside the brain.

The Russians have done a lot with what's called scalar waves and different spectrum electromagnetics within the brain. They're convinced that you can explain parapsychology, if you could ever find out what it is that you'd have to measure to prove that it's occurring. But, they just got to the edge of perhaps measuring something.

It's all based on physics. If it's scalar waves, then you're in a whole other avenue of physics that [is] very controversial. Tesla was very, very much into those. The difficulty with Tesla, is that when he passed away, J. Edgar Hoover came in and confiscated almost everything. When his maid discovered him dead, she didn't discover him dead alone—she discovered five FBI agents in his room pilfering everything, and he was [lying] on the bed dead. His nephew sued the U.S. government and won back, theoretically, all of his equipment, experiments, and records.

[See government documents at the end of this interview! SG]

There were, theoretically, fifty boxes [of records, etc.], but they only got forty-five of those in Belgrade. The other five are missing, and a whole bunch of stuff is missing.

We also found a record of a submarine that was in the Mediterranean in 1917 [or] 1918. Tesla, in New Jersey, put one of these antennas in the ocean, right off the coast, and [one] on the shore. He's holding a conversation with the captain of the submarine—one of the guys actually dug out of the Navy records the log of the submarine, and it essentially says: some idiot who's claiming he is in New Jersey is talking to me; he must be absolutely crazy because I know I am 100 feet underwater, and no one can be talking to me from New Jersey—and he had the matching language in Tesla's logbook. So, what was that? People say no—it was an accident, it was a coincidence, etc., but there are a lot of things we can't explain that people have actually done.

Back when I was a young engineer at McDonnell in the 1960s, we routinely designed for the Air Force and the Navy airplanes that flew at Mach 4 and 6. The Vietnam War interfered with most of that, but we had running engines that would fly Mach 6, easily. We actually had tested engines that would fly the Mach 12 airplanes. In fact, in 1966 a fellow by the name of Bill Esher—he's still alive, working for SAIC in Huntsville—had on the test stand an engine that was within 5 percent of predicted performance of Mach 8 conditions at about 120,000 feet, and it ran for about 20 minutes. We were convinced we could build them then. What's fascinating is I got to see the X-33 a couple weeks ago. They had this new breakthrough—a new shingle technology that allowed the inside of the airplane to be room temperature, while the shingles reflect the heat. We built almost exactly the same structure in 1965 and tested it to Mach 12 conditions. It is a little bit more elegant than what we had, because they have more elegant materials these days, but we were convinced we could do it then. People laugh at you and say, no you couldn't, or no, it's impossible, we're not going to do that because it's risky. But no, it wasn't risky, and yes, it could be done. All it takes is a dreamer.

Can you imagine the Wright brothers if one was a lawyer, and one was an accountant? They would say: "Why do you have to build a stupid airplane? It only carries one person. Who's going to buy it; what kind of profit margin are we going to get? We've got 40 percent on bicycles; what are we doing this for? Think of the liability—everybody can sue us. It's a bad idea; let's not do it." As long as we have that mind-set, we're stuck. What you have to say is: "By gosh, it's something that no one's ever done before; let's try it."

If I were to look at [the period of time] since my first introduction to UFOs as a young lieutenant, to today, I would say there's a large number of covert projects that go on in the United States that none of us are ever aware of. If you saw some of those things, they would probably bend your mind, and they would not fit your conception of what an airplane is—so it seems to you to be a UFO. So, maybe a large fraction of those [suspected UFOs] are covert projects that we're doing, or someone's doing, that are earthbound [technologies]. If you really knew what was behind them, you would say, yes, I can see how that works.

[See the testimony of Mark McCandlish regarding functioning antigravity vehicles made by humans, and which could easily be misidentified as extraterrestrial vehicles. It is clear from many insiders with whom I have spoken that we have both man-made exotic craft as well as ET craft—and they are all called UFOs. SG]

I think it's like Project Bluebook: there's this hardcore 10-15 percent, or 20 percent, that don't fit any explanation other than the fact that the beings that are in the UFOs came here by way of a process that we're not familiar with—and that is time-space travel. I firmly believe that some of those are like that.

Almost anything you can think of can be turned around and used as a weapon. When you get into this kind of energy, and energy-time transitions, they can be used to just wipe out whole segments of the population on the earth—and they can be made to liberate us from all dependence on fossil fuels.

[It is obvious that in order for humanity to continue with adequate technologies for long-term sustainability, peace is the first requirement. We are clearly at the point in our evolution where the option to use such technologies for war means the end of our civilization. SG]

First of all, the ballistic missile defense system is probably a pipe dream, in the sense that what it's designed for is assuming that you know where [the threat] is coming from. When we had Russia, there was a 50-50 chance that you knew about where it would be coming from. With the rogue nations that we have today, it's absolutely ludicrous. The threat is the guy who walks in with the briefcase—remember that in the 1950s, they built a nuclear warhead that has an eight-inch-diameter body. That was a quarter kiloton weapon. That will fit inside any briefcase you can think of. The guy may die carrying it, but he's going to die anyway, so what difference does it make? I'm far more afraid of that. If beings can travel in time-space, then anything we would put in orbit as a weapon would be like going against Genghis Khan with a firecracker. It doesn't make sense.

[Here he makes a very salient point regarding the weaponization of space: the real threats from earth terrorists would not be addressed by such weapon systems, and the notion of using them against any extraterrestrial target borders on the suicidal, if not insane. These comments also support the idea that IF the extraterrestrials were hostile (thus requiring space weapons), earth civilization could have easily been terminated around the time we detonated the first nuclear weapon. That we are still here is strong support for the assessment that the ET presence is not a threat and cannot be used as an excuse for space-based weapons. SG]

When we talk about zero-point energy, what that means is when everything comes down to rest, there's still energy left. It's like sea level in the ocean. There is a constant flow of energy between matter and antimatter, as it annihilates itself and recreates itself. It occurs in stars—it's a continual exchange of energy. Although the average is zero, that zero may be a pretty high level above nothing at all. What Sakharov and some of the physicists said, is that it's this level that creates the background energy for the universe to exist.

When I got involved in space again with Sandy McDonald, and we started what eventually became the National Aerospace Plane, I met a group of Russians over in England at a conference. One of them had been involved in transmitting energy from an antenna on the ground to a satellite in orbit, and back down to Moscow, with only about 10-15 percent losses. He said the reason we can do this, is this is a scalar wave projector, and here's what it uses—he opens up his loose-leaf binder and says, "You can't take any pictures of this or make any sketches; just look at it."

And, lo and behold, there's the tube I saw in Yugoslavia, which Tesla had built! This was the antenna that Caspar Weinberger was saying was the antiballistic missile weapon [the Russians allegedly had]. He says if you ever go in the building [where this scalar device is located], all you're going to see is an empty concrete building with a couple of cables—because it's not an anti-ballistic missile radar—it's a scalar wave transmitter. Finally, when the U.S. DoD got in there, they found an empty concrete building with a couple of wires in it, and they said, "Ah, they pulled everything out." But, he says it never was in there. He claims he transmitted up to 10 megawatts of power from this station, to a satellite, to Moscow, and got about 8.5 to 9 megawatts of power back in Moscow.

[Note that Dr. Carol Rosin also confirms that the U.S. exaggerated the anti-missile threat of the Soviets—we were claiming that they had 'killer satellites' when they did not. SG]

They were on the verge of understanding how you do some of these unconventional things, but all of that is now gone. I don't know where he is. He lost his job, [and] his institute disappeared, so a lot of that work just collapsed in the Soviet Union.

[See also the testimony of Lt. Col. Bearden and David Hamilton.]

That's the same tube that Tesla said he could [use to] transmit energy to Mars—the surface of Mars—and support a human colony, or [the same] to the surface of the Moon. Once you actually do that, fuel doesn't become a problem anymore in orbit: you just use one of these tubes to generate the power directly to the right antenna, and you can fly to the moon, you can fly into orbit, you can do anything you want.

The people that have access to [these advanced energy technologies] don't know how to let go of it, because they're afraid of who's going to get their hands on it. Even though there would be a tremendous benefit to mankind, they're also worried that somebody could take that same energy source and do the equivalent of what they did with the USS Cole—instead of blowing a hole in the side, they could just obliterate the whole ship.

The black budget world is like trying to describe Casper, the friendly ghost. You might see a cartoon of him, but you don't know how big he is, you don't know where his funding comes from, you don't know how many there are, because of the compartmentalization and the oath that people have to take. I know people today that worked on one of the things I worked on, and if you asked them about it—even if it is being discussed on the Internet—they would say: "No, I have no idea what you're talking about." They're in there seventies now, but they still absolutely would never admit that they even know what you're talking about. You have no idea, but it's probably larger than you think. And again—there's a reason for it: you don't want people who would be hostile to you to know what you could do to them if they really caused a major catastrophe. If they knew that, you wouldn't prevent them from doing it—they would just do it another way.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE DIRECTOR, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

SUBJECT: Papers Recovered on the Death of Nicola Tesla (U)

(U) We understand that the FBI may have possession of a number of papers found after the death of Nicola Tesla in 1943. Nicola Tesla was a brilliant electrical engineer (i.e. the Tesla Coil) who was a pioneer in various aspects of electrical transmission phenomena.

(C) We believe that certain of Tesla's papers may contain basic principles which would be of considerable value to certain ongoing research within the DoD. It would be very helpful to have access to his papers.

(U) Since we have really no idea of the possible volume of these papers, we would be happy to provide a researcher who could assist you in reducing the magnitude of the search. If there are further questions, I am the point of contact within the DoD and can be reached at 695-6364 or 695-7417:

involvement in the seizing of Nikola Tesla's research papers and other documents and scientific instruments after his death on January 7, 1943.

They both explained that Tesla was a scientific genius and experimenter who was born in Yugoslavia of Serbian parents on 7/10/56, went to school later in Grats, Austria, Prague, Czechoslovakia and Paris, France. He immigrated to the U.S. in the early 1880's, worked for Thomas Edison's laboratory for a couple of years, then started his own lab after being paid $1 million dollars for rights to his patents on his polyphase systems of alternating current dynamos, which lead to the harnessing of Niagra Falls for producing electricity and then the power system of the whole country. He was naturalized in 1889. He predicted wireless communication (radio). His later experiments in Colorado and elsewhere lead to his producing artificial lightning in the millions of volts. He also had patents on the concept of neon and fluorescent lights, but he later made little money on his later inventions, although he continued to do experiments leading to devices of great potential worth, which he never patented. He became more reclusive in his later years, living in various hotels in New York City. In the 1930's he claimed he had developed the concept and method of building a "death ray", which could destroy planes at many miles distant, for defending America. Also, there are reports of resonance machines or devices whereby he could shake one or many large city buildings from some distance away.

Both [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] said that Tesla donated "some" of his papers (or copies thereof) to the Tesla Institute in Belgrade, Yugoslavia; set up in the 1930's in his honor by their government. Biographies on Tesla claim that either the custodian of Alien Property and/or the FBI seized his papers and other personal effects, including a safe or safes, and other property immediately after his death in 1943. This is elaborated on in the enclosed copies of certain pages of Margaret Cheney's book, "Tesla: Man Out of Time".

[REDACTED] said that after World War II Tesla's papers were shipped to the Tesla Institute in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, by his nephew, Sava Kosanovic, who had become Tito's Ambassador to the U.S. There were reports that some microfilming of Tesla's papers by government agents while they were still in storage in New York under Kosanovic's custody.

Testimony of Dr. Hal Puthoff

Dr. Hal Puthoff, a theoretical and experimental physicist, is a graduate of Stanford University. He has published over forty technical papers in the areas of electron-beam devices, lasers, and quantum zero-point energy effects, and holds patents in the laser, communications, and energy fields. Dr. Puthoff's professional background spans more than thirty years of research at General Electric, Sperry, the National Security Agency, Stanford University, SRI International, and, since 1985, as Director of the Institute for Advanced Studies at Austin, Texas, and President of EarthTech International, Inc. In his testimony, Dr. Puthoff points out that as we uncover the technologies that make space travel possible, we must consider the possibility that there are other civilizations who have been down this track ahead of us. This opens up the possibility of ET visitation. Considering that our electromagnetic technology is a century old, we must realize that there could be advanced civilizations out there that are millennia beyond us, and their technologies could be well beyond our imagination; therefore, the ET/UFO topic deserves to be taken seriously by modern scientists.

I think one of the discoveries that emerged out of modern quantum theory is that so-called empty space isn't really empty at all. It's actually full of energy, so instead of being like a quiet empty lake, it's more like the froth at the base of a waterfall or something. This energy is basically electromagnetic in nature, and the energy density is quite high. In fact, it's so high that when it was first discovered mathematically, it was thought to be some kind of artifact of the mathematics.

Then, as time went on, even Nobel Prize-winning experiments showed that this energy in so-called empty space was really there. We don't usually notice it because it is so homogeneously distributed, but under certain circumstances, it can be disturbed or perturbed, and then it has effects.

As I mentioned, some effect on atomic emissions, for example, is what eventually ended up in a Nobel Prize for Willis Lamb of Yale University. It's called the Lamb Shift. This is recognition that, in fact, this energy disturbs atoms, so atoms aren't sitting in a void—they are sitting in this sea of energy. Once quantum theory realized that energy was there, the next question was: is there any way to tap it? And, it was thought originally—probably not.

But, back in about 1984, a researcher at Hughes Laboratory by the name of Robert Forward, showed that there was a particular effect called the Casimir Effect, which demonstrated that, in fact, this energy could be tapped.

Well, when you go to look at the numbers, you find out that there's enough energy in the bottom of a coffee cup to evaporate all the world's oceans, if you could get it all up. This raised the issue among theorists: can we manipulate this energy; could we tap it for space flight application, for example? There are a couple of ways to go—could we get propulsion out of it? Could we use it as an energy source? So, these are the areas that modern theorists are looking at.

One of the more interesting aspects is that if, in fact, it does look like there is a route from here to there; then, we consider the possibility that maybe there are other civilizations who have been down this track ahead of us. So, it opens up the possibility that you can't reject the possibility of, for example, ET visitation, out of hand.

You know, you usually hear that Einstein said you can't go faster than the speed of light. Well, that's something of a special theory of relativity: it really is that you can't take an object and speed it up and then [go] through the light barrier, because it would take an infinite amount of energy mass to do it. But, it turns out it's a faulty conclusion to say, therefore, you can't go faster than the speed of light.

Once you get into general relativity, you have some options. The options are to change the properties of space itself, so that locally the velocity of light is engineered to be faster than the usual value. The best way to explain how it comes about is that it's actually the idea of stretching space—expanding space on one side of the craft, and shrinking space on the other—so that you are not only moving forward through space, but the space itself is like moving forward on a rubber sheet, while at the same time you are pulling the rubber sheet and expanding it.

Then, relative to the outside environment, you could be going at, say, the speed of light along the rubber sheet, but if the rubber sheet itself is moving relative to the rest of the universe, then your net motion is faster than the speed of light.

So, the implication then is, if you can manipulate the zero-point energy so you can get it out of the way, then if something tried to accelerate you, it would be easy. You would have no inertia. Rather than using humungous amounts of energy to try to propel you through this tremendous force—drag—that you get from the vacuum fluctuations, you could throw BB's out the back, I suppose, and take off like a shot.

In fact, the Air Force was sufficiently interested in this that they set up a program called Mass Modification, in which my colleagues and I were interviewed to find out all the details of our modeling inertia as a vacuum fluctuation phenomenon that might, in principal, be manipulated to see if there was a possibility, in some far-distant future, of reducing the inertia of a spaceship so that ordinary propulsive means could be used with relatively low energy requirements. They did a year-long study and went around to various universities and laboratories, and asked people to tell them about experiments they might be able to do to determine whether our model was correct.

So, again—there's another indication that these are not just fringe scientists with science fiction ideas, but, basically, these are kind of mainstream ideas being published in mainstream physics journals and being taken seriously by mainstream military and NASA-type funders.

Here at the Institute for Advanced Studies, one of our main interests is exploring the possibility of tapping or mining this vacuum fluctuation energy, or zero-point energy. We call it zero-point because even if you froze the universe down, all the way down to absolute zero—where most motion would be frozen out—this energy would still be there. It's a very fundamental kind of energy. We are looking to see if we can extract it for many uses, not just space flight application. The grand outcome would be that you could use it to power everything from electric toothbrushes, to aircraft carriers, to automobiles, to homes, to space flight.

One of the main areas of interest, in terms of potential use, is the possibility of having a very cheap energy source for desalinization of water.

I routinely make presentations and briefings to various branches of the government. I've been taken out on aircraft carriers by the Navy and shown what it is that we have to replace, if we have new energy sources to provide new fuel methods. Of course, NASA is funding some of these breakthrough propulsion-physics ideas. Various labs in the Air Force are pursuing fundamental studies on these kinds of exotic ideas, so there is a lot of Government interest.

It's getting to the point where modern theoretical physicists are loathe to rule out any possibility. I mean, now we are talking about parallel universes and membranes of many dimensions. Physics is just getting as wild as it can possibly be, and sandwiched in among all those alternative possibilities is the possibility that some of these concepts might actually play a role in space flight application, where civilizations—ourselves in the future, or, maybe, more advanced ET civilizations of present—could, perhaps, travel long distances in relatively short times.

[Regarding UFOs:] Of course, we see claims; and not just among the public, but among military pilots and good observers—typically the military—that there appear to be something like craft flying around, with anomalous behavior.

In terms of some of the characteristics that seem to be attributed to them, and given the kind of physics and the direction physics is going, you can't rule out that maybe some are some kind of craft or probes—maybe even more likely probes than craft—from some far-away civilization.

When you consider that our electromagnetic technology is a century old, basically, you then realize that you could have advanced civilizations out there that are millennia beyond us. You know, there really is no way of saying whether they might have some other way of making contact, or find other ways like worm holes, or whatever. It could be well beyond our imagination.

NORAD has "uncorrelated targets" that they can't account for, and from time to time, satellites see things called fast walkers, which seem to be energetic signatures moving faster than can be accounted for by known planes, for example.

There are people of some credibility, with credentials, willing to come forward and say, despite the giggle factor for this area: "We think there is something there that should be taken more seriously." Well, it's another mark that this is an idea whose time has come, [and we should begin] to take it seriously. You know, this should not be an area considered taboo by modern scientists.

[About Colonel Corso and his accounts:] Here we have a guy who shows up before a congressional committee, doing whistle-blowing activities and, under circumstances where a lot of people—if they could find holes in his credibility—would be more than glad to try to destroy his stories and his credibility, and they didn't. And then, you suddenly have a fellow like that coming forward and saying that he has evidence from his own experience that there were crash retrievals and technologies that he personally was involved in distributing.

Why would a guy with that kind of background make it up? I had a chance to ask him about it once, and he said, "Well, the way it came out in the book is not exactly the way it was, but it's really that we waited until there were developments in regular American industry, and then we [released information] that might accelerate those developments. It isn't that developments got started on the basis of what we had, because we didn't want anybody to know we had them."

You can't dismiss it out of hand, because it's hard to come up with a reason why he would have just made it up—he's a very patriotic kind of guy. So, that is really an enigma.

Testimony of David Hamilton

October 2000

David Hamilton works for the Department of Energy in the area of new generation power systems. He explains that we have nearly exhausted the world's supply of fossil fuels, just at the time when Asia and China are undergoing an "industrial revolution" and are positioning to become bigger consumers of these fuels than the "first world" countries already are. In order to alleviate the current earth crises of environmental pollution, global warming, etc. and advance as a sustainable technological society, we must develop technologies that don't fit into the old paradigm.

I'm David Hamilton from the Department of Energy. My background is in nuclear power, fuel cell systems, and electric power systems. For the Department of Energy, I mainly focus on new generation power systems.

We have designed a world that feeds on oil, and those oil supplies are becoming more and more limited. Now, if we look at what the supply of oil is, never before in our history have we been in a position where supply and demand would intersect, but in about 10 years we will see the intersection between supply and demand, and that means that we will be seriously supply-limited.

The other thing compounding that, and which we have seen lately—the recession in Asia—created a worldwide "slight depression." We were isolated from most of that, but now Asia is coming back, and again world prices are going up, because demand is going up.

And, we're going to see that become even worse—I've got some curves that demonstrate this. If you look at where the Asian and the Chinese people are in technology compared to where we are, and where the U.K. is, they are about at our 1920s technology level. When they move up that curve to try to have as many cars as we have per capita, the demand for oil will be astronomical, because right now, the industrialized nations are only 20 percent of the total [world] population.

Funding from government is necessary to get new ideas out and to support these people who are thinking outside the box—beyond oil.

There are some things I know about, and some things I can't really talk about—but I do know that there are tremendously impressive weapon systems and potential energy systems [under development]. The ones that I have studied were available to me before they were classified, and in that capacity, I learned a lot about some of the weapon systems, because of my quantum mechanical background.

There are a lot of technologies that have paths that you can follow through the literature, [which] suddenly became non-published—you can track publishing records up to a certain point, and then they just disappear. You can also track people's backgrounds to know that they were working for a company, or they were working under government contracts [during] that period, and it seems odd, at times, why they were no longer publishing.

I've talked to quite a few people around the country—[and] in Russia as well—that have seen some very novel technologies and want to develop them, but they continually have difficulties in trying to do that.

Historically, if you look at technologies that are what people describe as free energy machines—not requiring oil, but high voltage or other types of applications that get more yield than you would get otherwise—they have had a lot of problems. You may be familiar with [Dr. John] Moray; his experiment was around the First or Second World War. I can't remember the exact time frame, but it was destroyed; all of it was lost, and his son never really understood the full concept of what he was doing, so he hasn't been able to reproduce the work.

[See the testimony of Mark McCandlish, which describes Moray's work with different kinds of energy. LW]

Similarly, in working with the Russian universities, [I found] they did what I consider one of the best gravitational experiments ever done—it was at the High Temperature Materials Laboratory in Russia. They had done their experiment off-site and demonstrated that this device could [cause] a 35 percent reduction in the gravitational field.

Now, we saw that; we were very impressed with it. The high gravitational researchers at DOE—I had them look at it. We were all interested in it, [and] we would like to follow up on that to do a second type of experiment— duplication, reproducibility—getting back to the issues of how do you get good science. But, you run into a lot of resistance among people, and in the Russian case, it was even more so. When they were away from this off-site laboratory—it was across the street from the university, as I understand it—the place was completely ransacked.

All the equipment was lost. Now, lucky for us they had their recordings, they had their videotapes, they had their presentation materials. All of that was still intact, but the machine was lost, as well as a lot of the equipment necessary to duplicate that test.

It may have been that there were some Mafia-type individuals involved, thinking that there might be some profit in this thing. And, my Russian friends say that part of the government that does that sort of thing is no different from the Mafia, so that complicates the problem.

[Much like the US, which sabotages promising new technologies. See the testimony of Colonel Charles Brown. SG]

Eventually, we have to completely get away from oil as a fuel, because it won't be there for the multiple generations behind us. If we care about humanity as a race, we have to do this.

Now, through my work in theoretical physics, I will give you my opinion that Einstein made one mistake that he didn't realize, and that was special relativity. The reason that special relativity explains things in a very simple way, for most of the things that we see in nature [is]—it doesn't account for gravity; it doesn't account for gravitational anomalies; it doesn't account for any space-time curvature whatsoever.

I believe that is the reason why general relativity never got fixed: it needed more intense graphical treatment, more intense algebraic treatment, in order to explain it properly.

We're currently doing that—about 150 scientists around the world are working on higher topology mathematics and higher topology geometric structures that will help explain that—and they do explain many of the anomalies that we have today.

There is potential from these systems that we may be able to coax nature to reorganize. Some people might call this vacuum energy, but energy is all around us: matter is energy. Everything in this room causes space/time curvature, because everything comes from energy—energy causes space/time curvature.

What Einstein showed in 1917 was that a planet causes this, but we also know from  $E = mc^2$  that there's a relationship to the energy.

If we were to look at the energy—it's around us everywhere. A lot of it is very unorganized. We need to make that coherent, and that's what I feel that the vacuum energy might offer us. How do [we] capture that energy, focus it into what we want it to work on, and then provide the power for whatever we need to do? Imagine if it's true that we can use electromagnetic fields and adjust them in such a way that they either decouple us from gravitation, or they create a negative gravitational effect. Some astronomical researchers feel that we see negative gravitational effects from long-range parts of the universe, and that this may explain why the universe is expanding rather than contracting.

But, again, if we can take advantage of these effects locally, and we can do it without using tremendous amounts of energy—possibly using the other energy sources that we were talking about earlier: the freer energy concepts, the vacuum energy—then we've got a way to move material in the Z [vertical] plane really efficiently, and also with no pollution.

As population grows, this little planet gets smaller and smaller. You can look at LA's projections in 2050: 50 million people. Right now you have to ask, where are they going to go? We have some serious problems to face.

The other side of the coin on energy issues is the amount of carbon we throw into the atmosphere. This has been an important aspect of what the Department of Energy has worked toward: to try to get cleaner fuels, to work with EPA, to work with other people, and try to reduce the amount of carbon.

We've had a record amount of icefall off the ice shelves. This is troubling—a 100-foot rise in water is probably not tremendously concerning to most people, but if you live under 100 feet [elevation], you would be pretty concerned about that.

But, if you look at what we've done in the United States, it's focusing on just us, and what the Europeans are doing is focusing on just them. Again, we get back to the issue that we're only 20 percent of the population. We've already used half of the available known fuel, and now we're looking at the other 80 percent of the world coming up using those same technologies.

Because of this, we might well get into a carbon density problem that could be irreversible—and there have been quite a few papers talking about exactly where that is. It may not be a very calm transition that most people expect. It may be a catastrophic change, and that really fits with the fossil record—there haven't been really calm changes during extinction phases—they were catastrophic changes that ended up killing large populations.

I think it's going to take a worldwide effort to get around these problems. It's going to take an effort that divorces everyone from fossil-based fuels.

In order to do that, it is going to take a tremendous effort. Now, [the] spending [of] that money by countries is not a bad thing—it creates high tech jobs. Over the long run, I believe we will create a lot of high tech jobs. I think this is a good thing for the world—it's a good thing for people; it's a good thing for this human race. We need to start doing it now before it's too late.

I am concerned that if we don't do something very soon, any society that begins to be resource-limited begins to eliminate the problem causing that resource limitation. I would hate to see us get into the position where other people want to eliminate us, or we have to eliminate them, in order to continue our lifestyle. That's why it's so important that we start now.

Testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Thomas E. Bearden (retired)

October 2000

Colonel Bearden is a leading conceptualist in alternate energy technologies, electromagnetic bio-effects, unified field theory concepts, and other related areas. He is a retired Lieutenant Colonel of the U.S. Army and holds a Ph.D. and an M.S. in Nuclear Engineering from the Georgia Institute of Technology. He is currently CEO of CTEC, Inc., Director of the Association of Distinguished American Scientists, and Fellow Emeritus of the Alpha Foundation's Institute for Advanced Study. In Colonel Bearden's testimony he speaks extensively about how it is possible to derive useable energy from the vacuum without violating any currently known laws of physics. He and others have built electromechanical devices which actually demonstrate this technology. He also explains how certain powers would rather keep this technology from becoming widely known outside of small esoteric circles. Time is running out however because our Earth does not have enough oil and coal reserves to last even for this generation. He explains how our top minds and scientists must first recognize then rally around an effort to solve this energy problem before 2004.

TB: Lt. Col. Thomas Bearden

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

TB: My name is Tom Bearden, Lieutenant Colonel, U.S. Army, retired. I spent 20 years, a little more than that, in the active military. Mostly in Air Defense and various other assignments. I spent quite a number of tours in, basically, R&D work, in the military, developing missile systems and things like that.

For about 20 years or more, some associates and I have been researching how to extract electromagnetic energy from the vacuum. Now, we did so under somewhat duress because the conventional electrodynamics model does not allow this to happen. In other words, it doesn't allow you to extract excess energy from the vacuum and use that to power your load. So it doesn't allow you to make a sub-powering system.

So we took the approach that some of the phenomenology we had seen in experiments and so forth, convinced us that it was possible. And there didn't seem to be any real physical reason why it couldn't be extracted, if we could find a way to do it. But we had the problem of why doesn't the electrodynamics allow it to be done? So, at the same time, we also began a study of the foundations of electronics and magnetics. We pay the power company to have a giant wrestling match inside its generator and lose.

The problem we ran into was that the electrodynamics had actually been modified to throw out the very kind of systems that we had seen in our experiments.

We can do it [get energy from the vacuum] in accord with thermodynamics. And we can do it in accord with physics and electromagnetics. Now, this is absolutely rigorous. I don't care how many folks want to check that. It will hold up. It is rigorous. So, this was one thing we established from the study of the four-clarions of electromagnetics. You are permitted to have electromagnetic systems to power themselves and their load and you don't have to put in the energy, they take it from the vacuum, the active vacuum.

Our engineers are taught to throw away about ten trillion times (for a typical average case) as much energy as they pull out of the vacuum, without even knowing it. They throw all that away and only calculate the little bit that we catch in that circuit and then use. So, we had built a whole science based on throwing away this enormous energy that is pulled out of the vacuum by every little old separation of charges, every dipole. Well, in the 1950's, particle physicists, Woo and others, discovered broken symmetry. They discovered how fundamental a process something like this dipole is, where we separate two opposite kinds of charges. And T.D. Lee, for example, looked at it, four physical charges and so forth, and Lee won a Nobel Prize for it. Any dipole is a broken symmetry and the fierce exchange with a vacuum is a broken three-dimensional symmetry.

What does this mean? Cutting through all the words and getting down to country boy language: It means that nature does not insist on conserving energy in three dimensions. We do, because we have a three-dimensional mind. We like to think in terms of space because observation itself destroys time and what we look at is spatial. So, we like to think the world is made of space, not space-time. However, nature loves to work in four dimensions. Her fundamental law is that conservation of energy must apply in four dimensions. Now you are not going to beat that one. But there is no law of nature that requires you to come in and say also [that] it must apply simultaneously in three dimensions. If we build some gadget that makes it apply in three dimensions, we apply an extra constraint on what nature will give us. Turning that around, we go around building things that insist on having this three-dimensional exchange of energy.

So, we have a terrible situation all the way. It's called entropic engineering. We always got entropy beating us to death. We talk about, you know, efficiencies at 30% and so forth for our power systems when we talk about burning the coal and oil.

But nature doesn't require you to do that. Once you break the flow in three dimensions, you no longer have to conserve energy in three dimensions.

The basic conservation of energy is an in-flow from four dimensions, out-flow in three dimensions; from the fourth dimension converted, and flowing out into three and that one is free. Giant negentropy is free. Nature will start reorganizing a goodly percentage of the whole vacuum for you, spreading it at the speed of light, and will continue it as long as you leave the dipole alone. Today we say we can't engineer negentropy when negentropy is the easiest thing in the world to engineer, whereas the entropy is the hard way to do it. And that's the way we all do it.

The bottom line of this is: if we initiate the negative entropy, and let it go, it is just like you punched a hole in the ground and you got a big gusher of oil. You don't have to furnish the pressure and you don't have to furnish the oil. Here it comes. And it comes out in real oil that you can use. And the common dipole in every electrical circuit pours out energy in that fashion. The problem is not how to get enormous energy from the vacuum. That problem has been totally solved [by nature]. It was actually solved in 1903 had we understood it, had we understood what Whitaker wrote. We didn't. But now we do understand it and we do certify very rigorously with some of the AIS papers that that is for real.

The problem now is, how do we catch a goodly bit of this energy and use it? You dump it in a load, let it power that load, and not use half of it to go back over and kill that little dipole.

We have been successful. We have just built our second model. The first model produced five times the output we put in. We don't put any energy into it to actually power the system. It comes right out of a permanent magnet, which is a dipole. The reason for using a permanent magnet is very simple. You can pass the flux, in a flux channel, back through the permanent magnet and those poles don't get destroyed. They are welded into the material when you magnetize it. We can bypass one of the big problems with a permanent magnet. We don't have to destroy the dipole. That gives us one solution going in.

The other is, how do we catch the energy? Well, that turned out to be fairly simple. We found a material, which would separate the magnetic field from what is called a magnetic vector potential. The vector potential flows unceasingly from the magnet. It will flow from now for the next 15 billion years. You can't slow it down. You can't change it, as long as that magnet is there. So, you have plenty of energy flow. The question is, how to use it. So, we use it by diversion. We reason that this flow will replenish just like a river. It's like a humongous river. If we dip some energy out of it, it'll replenish the hole we dipped out of at the speed of light.

So we can dip and dip and dip. But we can keep dipping and the water fills as fast as we dip it. Then, if we come down to another area and we let the water that was replenished still interact with something, and at the same time we dump the water that we dipped in there, we would have more energy, by far, than what we are paying for dipping. So, we looked at it as an energy flow process, which, it is. And we found the material which would do part of the dipping for us. It will separate the magnetic field from the magnetic vector potential.

Yes, there is a long history of over-unity systems.

SG: What has happened to them?

TB: Nicola Tesla had one. Basically, this big magnifying transformer that he had on Long Island was such an over-unity system. The way that one apparently worked is he got the entire Earth itself in resonance. The crust of the Earth, as you go down in there, is made of highly non-linear materials. It will do phase conjugation. And so eventually what it does is: everything going on is feeding energy into the Earth starts to feed energy into that wave that he created. So, he gets a lot more energy in this resonant way, fed from outside, from the environment in the interior of the earth. And that's the way he built up a humongous wave of energy. His idea was you could then put in a tap on it, anywhere else on the world and extract it free.

And of course, J.P. Morgan's take on that was that's foolish you can't put a meter on it. So that actually doomed much of Tesla's career at that point when Morgan found out that he, Tesla, was going to produce the energy freely. There would be a small cost here at a central location, everybody else could tap it for free. It wouldn't have powered the whole world today. It would have powered much of the world in those days. Tesla also, we are pretty sure, put a system in a car and ran a car on it. The engine had no gas, no input of power, and would still run once Tesla got it started. And we know it is perfectly possible. Tesla apparently knew how to use this giant negentropic process that's universal. Energy is free for the taking from the vacuum anywhere you want it. We just have to learn to use that.

Some of the breakthroughs, in the past, have been deliberately suppressed. I will name a few: T. Henry Moray was inspired, of course, by Tesla's work. And he demonstrated so many times, to so many scientific and engineering groups and people who are skilled in the art, there was absolutely no question that T. Henry Moray had a system that produced about 50 kilowatts out of a 55 pound box. This is well established as you go back and look at all kind of certified tests and everything else that he did. There are all kinds of skullduggery that happened there. I don't think T. Henry Moray ever got a decent chance to do anything with that. The Russians even tried to kidnap him at one time. It read like a James Bond movie, but it is real. It really happened, and it really happened here in the United States.

This was before the War, this was in the 1930s. In the same general period of time, one of the greatest electromagnetic scientists we ever had was Gabriel Crone [sp]. Gabriel Crone invented a true negative resistor, working on a Navy contract for Stanford university. He was never permitted to reveal the exact way that he constructed his negative resistor. But I use direct quotes where he in fact said, we have a negative resistor and we can [even] disconnect a generator from this network analyzer when we have negative resistors in there because they will power the circuit.

So, that one was, in fact, suppressed. I don't know what ever happened to it, but it vanished and he never did reveal the secret of what he called his open path, connecting any two points in a circuit. But it is in the literature, and it is well documented, because he was perhaps the leading electric scientist in the United States at that time.

Well, there's another one that went down the tube. Various people have made casual ones from time to time over the years. I'd estimate probably 50 different inventors have invented something. Even if they didn't understand it, they did get it to go over-unity. But most of the time they incurred a lot of ridicule from the scientific community. Sometimes they were really hounded.

Probably the best documented, scientifically, over-unity systems (self-running, self-powering systems) were developed by the Russians before World War II. It is in the French scientific literature and it is also in the Russian scientific literature. The papers are there. I quote them in many of the articles that I published. And you can go check the papers. The theory is there. Many papers are published on this and the Russian scientific literature. And they reached, you know, goodly power for those days: 50 and 100 kilowatt devices.

There are many ways of looking at the suppression that's occurred in this area. I've been a victim of quite a bit of suppression. So has any other legitimate researcher in this area. All I can do is give you my ideas drawn from my own experiences and what I think it is and where I think it's coming from. Today, we don't [have] kingdoms. Today we have big economic programs; basically, we have cartels. We have a whole set of cartels in an area, interlocking corporations. And behind this, we have a few people who are quite wealthy and who own those things. Let's call that an empire. It's a corporate empire, a set of corporations and empires.

Historically, as far back as you want to go, we have had cartels. Any time we have a very powerful cartel, or set of people that controlled a lot of things, [we find] resistance to any means of changing its in-flow of control and its in-flow of funds and money and its power. You know, everybody is trying to be the big monkey. It is really as simple as that. And so the more powerful the agency, the more powerful the group, the more powerful the cartel, the more they will resort not only to legal means, but to extra-legal means to suppress their competition. For example, the greatest espionage in the world is industrial espionage between one corporation and another, right here in America. They are the ones that hire all the spies and the spooky equipment and everything like that, by far more than the Intel agents do.

So, that's one thing we have. We have the giant industrial economic cartels in energy. And it is not one cartel. It is many, many groups in energy. And each of those has become very powerful in its own area. And each one does not wish to see simple little electrical taps pulling out enormous energy from the vacuum. They would much rather see you burning a lot more oil and so forth.

So, yes, there is in my view a very active suppression effort by those kinds of folks. Part of that goes into very unique areas. It's not like, you know, you just flat get shot. There is some of that. But one of the main ways of suppressing it is, they take a deep psychological profile of an individual that they wish to suppress. They really wish to get him entangled in all kinds of difficulties he can't get out of. Now, a good trait, from a human being standpoint, may be a very valuable trait to somebody who wishes to manipulate you.

For example, suppose you are easy to approach. That is a vulnerability. That is a serious vulnerability. So, ones deep psychological profile is examined in great depth by real experts. For example: who knows international finance? You can be had on a money laundering scheme easily. And not even recognize that is what you are in. So, any way that you do not have good knowledge or you have a vulnerability, then they arrange scenarios, just like you would write a movie. In fact, they do it with computers. It's all computerized. And in this scenario, we have, we write a play where this particular vulnerability is going to be exploited, and the target [neutralized].

Now, they keep big psychological profiles on lots of useful fellows. These are people who basically have knee jerk reactions or something. Or they are radical. Or they have some kind of way they interact which, if it could be connected with you, would be in the area we wish the interaction to occur to get you off into something else, totally different than what you are doing. All it takes to set that up may be a phone call, and stimulate the action to occur. And then the controllers sit back and watch the game go. It is gaming. But it is just like watching a movie scenario. One of these days we will probably write a book on gaming and how it is done and what kind of main games they can use.

But I can tell you they are very effective. You can get so many different games from so many different walks of life by so many charming folks who are really oily characters that you would not believe it. And those come at you en mass. And usually, they bury you. They bury you off in the courts, they bury you off, or they get you tricked into doing an illegal act. How would they do that if you wouldn't violate the law? How can you be made to violate the law when you are not a criminal? Simple.

Let me give you a for instance. A fellow comes in and he says we really need to get some major financing. Every inventor is poor. Everybody is struggling. Nobody's got the money to build all these build-ups, which may cost $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 a piece. So, everybody is struggling for money. So, someone comes in and says we are going to form a stock company. We are going to do all these good things. Unbeknownst to you, he goes off to the Securities & Exchange Commission and several other people, Treasury Department, and he says, hey, I think I have fallen in with a den of thieves. Of course, he is the CEO now, understand. Because, he is the guy who knows all this stuff.

He says to these government agencies that if you'll give me immunity to prosecution, I'll help you catch these crooks because they are going to do the greatest money laundering thing you ever heard of. It is going to come right out of one of these foreign countries. It is going to be scrubbed. It's going to be laundered drug money, or something like that. Now you have no knowledge this is happening. And the government will jump at the chance and they'll give him immunity to prosecution. That's their normal modus operandi. So then he goes off and sets all this up and keeps you deluded about what's happening.

If you consummate [the financial deal], you wind up behind bars for about 20 years, wondering how you got there, when you never did anything to money launder anything. He's the fellow who did it and who set it up and he testifies against you because he is immune to prosecution. This is one of the standard games. Machiavellian is not dead. He still lives. And these are the games that are played. And it is particularly played in the systems where people are trying to build over-unity systems. It's been very effective in stopping some of them.

SG: Do you think lethal force has been used?

TB: Lethal force is used. I worked with an inventor, for example, Sparky Sweet, who is quite well known. He was shot at once by a sniper rifle from about 300 yards. The only thing that saved his life was, he was an old guy and very feeble, there towards that part of his life, and he stumbled as he was coming up the steps and he fell down. As his head went forward, the bullet went right by where his head was. And of course, the assassin was never found.

So, there are many cases like that. Some are killed. I believe Marinov to be a kill. If I can believe the reports of the people who visited where his body lay, the pavement glowed. And there is only one weapon on earth that will kill a human body and let the cement glow under it. And that's a longitudinal wave shooter, what's called a shooter. He was probably killed by either the KGB or one of their agents from one of the other Iron Curtain countries. He was killed with a shooter and thrown off the building to make it look like suicide.

So yes, there are some rather bizarre things that have occurred to some people. As I say, I prefer not to dwell on that, try to get by as much of that as we can and try to dwell on the science.

The only way we are ever going to beat all of this stuff, we'll have to convince the scientific community that there is real science here.

[It was previously assumed that] the generator powered the external circuit. It doesn't. It does not power it at all. We twist the crank on the generator, the shaft, to turn the shaft, and that forms a magnetic field inside the generator. And that energy in that magnetic field dissipates itself upon the internal charges to force the positive charges in one direction and the negative charges in another to make that dipole. That's all a generator does. It doesn't add one watt to the power line. All the coal, all the oil, all the dams ever built, all the nuclear fuel rods ever consumed, never added one single watt to the power line. All they did was keep rebuilding the dipole that we have designed the circuit to destroy faster than we can power the loads. So, we have polluted the planet, we are killing species, we are poisoning our own lungs and our own environment. We don't have to do that.

But it's giant cartels, a giant financial set of empires [maintaining the status quo], and it is going to continue this way unless we get the attention of the scientific community focused. And hopefully, get some legislative action focused to force action to develop these new kinds of systems. Once we develop them, and start to use them, we won't have to have all this nuclear waste. Look how expensive and how long it takes to build a nuclear power plant, and then all the radioactive waste you have. You know, they still store the fuel rods on the sites after they are spent. They don't know what to do with them. There are all kind of schemes about where you are going to put them. The blunt truth of it is that right now we are storing them on site, at the nuclear power plants.

The other thing is we don't need to pollute with all these hydrocarbon byproducts; we don't need to pollute the whole biosphere like that. We don't have to burn all that stuff just to make a dipole. Quit destroying the dipole [in our conventional circuits] and we don't have to remake it.

So if we use this system where we extract energy from the vacuum we can clean up this biosphere. One of the greatest, most critical things facing us is that the supply of cheap oil has now peaked. We are there. What this means is we will continue to get some oil, yes. But it will be more and more and more expensive, year by year by year. Meanwhile, the demand for electricity goes up everywhere in the world, which drives the oil curve, again. And what you have is a classic escalation of prices type situation. The demand is up. The supply is down. The supply gets more and more expensive to try to fill it and so the cost just is going to go up and up and they are not going to stop.

Well, what happens? Somewhere along the line of about 2008, the way I look at it and project it, we are going to have a world economic collapse. The economy cannot stand such increases as it is going to come. And God help us if we have a war in the Mid-East. But I believe by 2008, we will see the world economy collapse. Now, about a year before that, as the economies are crumbling and the stress on all these populations and all these leaders and all these nations increases so much, desperate people will do anything. Desperate leaders, particularly fanatical leaders will do anything.

Conflicts will increase and escalate and they will start to use the weapons they have in those conflicts. And there are about 25 nations, according to the Secretary of Defense that have mass destruction weapons. Nuclear weapons for example. And if you don't have nukes, maybe you bought some Russian plutonium. Look at what will happen to your water supply in New York City, put a little plutonium in it. And poor nations that can't afford nukes have biological weapons. About 25 nations, and it is growing all the time, have weapons of mass destruction.

Now, by the way, those weapons are already in our large populations. If you will check Colonel Lunev's book (Colonel Lunev is the highest-ranking GRU defector we ever had and his book's cleared by the CIA) he tells you how the Russian's introduced the nuclear weapons, surreptitiously [into American cities]. Their operatives [entered] and secreted them in the U.S. He tells you how it was done in the book. So read the book. All our big cities as far as I'm concerned, and population centers, already have weapons of mass destruction hidden in them. We used to call that dead man fusing. And so, all of the nations have dead man fused one another, one way or another. And all the old studies show that in the heightened tension, great conflicts and high tension, whenever they start popping the nuclear weapons or weapons of mass destruction, you have a very formidable thing that happens to you.

Nobody has defenses. Since we have no defenses, the only thing you have is like a fencing duel. You have to hit the enemy before he hits you. You have to destroy him or you will be destroyed. Mutual assured destruction is a funny acronym. The only thing that is debatable about it is whether the destruction shall be mutual or unilateral. What happens is everybody fires on perceptions of preparations by his adversaries. And you have to fire everything you have as fast as you can, as rapidly as you can, as massively as you can, to try to destroy your enemy otherwise you have no chance of survival. So, what we get is the great Armageddon everybody has been dreading. The energy crisis going right now, in my view, will probably evoke a great Armageddon that we've all feared so long in about 2007, if we don't solve the [energy] crisis. If we back up from that, it means the first quarter of 2004. These new energy devices had better be rolling off of the assembly lines like sausages or we can all forget it and go home. It's too late to change it. That is how short a time we have.

I view this as the greatest strategic threat to [the] survival of the United States, and in fact, of civilization itself, that has ever existed in my lifetime. Now, the fools may blow the world from other causes, don't misunderstand me. But they are going to blow it from this cause. This I'm quite certain of. So it means that anything I can do to try to stop that has to be done. What we need is a great Manhattan project. You can do it. This is a doable. We have the principles. We know how to do the giant negentropy. We have good scientists. We have some sharp young grad students and post docs. But they aren't allowed to work on these kinds of things.

For goodness sakes, let's marshal them together like we did in World War II to get the atomic bomb where we went from zilch in four years and had an operational bomb. Let's do the same thing here because survival depends on it, not only of us, but of civilization.

We had one friend, for example, that we worked with very closely who built practical over-unity systems. He demonstrated at a conference, for example, an 8-kilowatt system. And then, very mysteriously he and his whole family disappeared. We have found out since that he is still around and he's doing very well, because he was attired in a very expensive suit and a very nice automobile. He and his family are okay, even though they disappeared back then.

But here he had a successful unit that just flat disappeared off the face of the earth. Now, its [disappearance] has to either be for the great financial empires, or it has to be for some kind of black project. And they classified it. Whatever it is, the survival of humanity itself, and civilization itself, is now at stake.

I really believe, through the auspices of the U.S. Government, we must bring [these technologies] forward to save ourselves and save the earth. If we keep it secret, or if we keep it in the control group's hands we shall all go down to oblivion in about 2007.

I'm the co-author of a paper and literature, way back there, which reports the successful anti-gravity. I'm not going to do another experiment, not even going to participate in one. I'm not going to. You know, everybody's got a different circumstance. And my circumstance [is that] for me to go on living and staying healthy and doing well, depends on me avoiding certain areas. And that's one of them. But I can work in energy.

[Colonel Bearden has extensive knowledge about anti-gravity propulsion but his life would be in danger if he pursued that area of research and he refused to comment further on that area. See testimony of Mark Bean, Mark McCandlish and others. SG]

What needs doing immediately deals with the scientific community. They are not doing anything that has any chance of stopping this problem before the world explodes in our faces. Sure, windmills are good. Burning the oil cleaner is good. All of these things, building a couple of more dams, is good, if you don't destroy too much of the biosphere, etc., etc. It doesn't solve the problem. The problem is just exactly like what we had in World War II. We have a problem, it's a doable, it can be solved very quickly because we've got the first half of it already solved, how to get the energy out of the vacuum.

So half of it is already done. But we can't get the scientific community to move on it, to turn those young grad students loose and those young post docs loose. The professor at the university, for goodness sakes, is trapped. He is absolutely trapped. All the universities are greedy. They want the overhead money. He's got to bring in extra money. He's got to get patents. And of course, he's got to get his papers published. So he's caught in a process where he must compete for the packages, which are put together and come down for competition. If he doesn't get those packages and win them, he doesn't fund his grad students, he doesn't get the overhead money. He's going to be lucky if he is working for the grocery store, instead of being a physicist. So he's in a mad scramble to try keep running on a treadmill. So we've got the whole scientific community working on the wrong problem.

SG: So what could the U.S. Government do about that?

TB: What we can do is do just like we did in the Manhattan project. You can order the scientific community to do it, whether they wish to do it or not. And hold them accountable from the highest level to the bottom. How much money are we spending in our national laboratories on nuclear stuff? Don't we think at least 10% of that money ought to be routed out of there and spent on nothing but this which might save us while the other stuff takes us down the tube?

Of course we should. In fact, it ought to be more than that. The best scientists we have, the best grad students, the best post docs ought to be turned loose on this problem. And that means funded. And that means that we do not allow scientists to slander and libel people who are trying to do research in this area. Right now they do it wholesale, and they do it at will. Look at what they call me in print, for goodness sake. But the problem is the scientific community resists change and it is doing business as usual. And my bottom line is, unless the legislative branch, together with the Administration, forces them to get on this problem and solve it, they will not only fiddle while Rome burns, they will help burn it.

As we speak, the Government has not moved. The scientific community has not moved. I hope that changes. I'm trying to change it. And private industry - that's a mixed bag. First of all, the moment you try to do it in private industry, then is when you are absolutely vulnerable to all the games. For example, a lawsuit alone can hang you where you will never come out of it for the next 15 years. The lawsuit doesn't have to be justified or anything at all. You can sue anybody for anything if you've got enough money to file the suit and want to swear.

And so, the next thing you know, you can be in court for 20 years. All of this comes at you. This is part of the delay. This is the control groups wanting to stay in power while we all go down the tubes. They operate, primarily, in the private sector.

So [if you do it privately] you are automatically in that arena where the real lions are after you all the time. And if you run this one with bean counters [from venture capitalists], you destroy the program before you start. So, your only choice, then, is to avoid venture capitalists like the plague and to try to go for licensing. Which means, the brunt of doing the research on the front end falls on you and your resources. Which, for working people is whatever you can afford out of your back pocket. But if you don't do that, you are not going to do it anyway. How many [over-unity energy devices] have you seen in the past that went the venture capital route that were real? How many of them made it? I can name three or four that were real. They are not there yet. They are not going to be there. They were buried.

You have to do it by licensing and go to the patent office. The patent office says it's impossible to do an over-unity system. The AIP, the physics institute, comes down on you and says this is absolutely against the laws of nature. It isn't. But these are people who haven't even studied the problem and they [only] know classical thermodynamics. You can't build one of these by classical thermo. You build it by the other kind of thermodynamics.

So the next thing you have is the scientific community all over it. Look at what they did to cold fusion. There is real stuff in cold fusion. You know, 600 experiments worked, for goodness sake.

[Refer to Dr. Eugene Mallove's testimony. SG]

So the scientific community is against you lock stock and barrel. And by the way, everything is a distribution curve. Get off of this horse buggy about scientists are always sweet, nice, reasonable people. That is not true. 10% of them are devils. 10% of them are angels. And those ought to be rewarded. But 10% of them have absolutely no ethics, are playing nothing but the big money and power game, and are absolutely your worst enemy in this area. The wolves go around looking for the rabbits and, you are the rabbit and they are the wolves. So the next thing you get into is the big wolf rabbit game with the scientists who are that 10%.

Meanwhile, back to the patent office. You'll get from the patent office, what are you looking at? This is impossible. This is perpetual motion. You say, well, the atoms have been doing this for 15 billion years. It is not perpetual motion, but it is just long lasting. But they call it perpetual motion. And of course, there is an unwritten law that anything that is perpetual motion shall not be approved or looked at. You can't even get a serious consideration in the patent office. I speak as one who has submitted patents in this area. I know what I'm talking about and have defended a couple of them.

So what we have is a situation where the entire structure of science, industry, the organizations of science and the patent office are already against you. If you can't get a patent, how can you license? So, it is a real neat little thing. It's an old chicken and egg situation. If I had the chickens I could get some eggs. If I had the eggs, I could get some chickens. This situation is designed so you never get chickens and you never get eggs. So the only thing you can do is to try to put your head down and continue to communicate. Fortunately, we do have the Internet. Sure, it is full of a lot of bad information. It is also full of a lot of good information. You just have to discriminate.

So, the other thing you have to do to have any chance at all is communicate, communicate, communicate, communicate, which we do to the limit that we are legally able to do and not lose our patents.

But if we can get the Government to move, they can cut through all of that by simply issuing the order to do it. And that is what it is going to take.

I'll make you a prediction. If the Government doesn't move, there's a 75% to 80% chance we will fail. We certainly won't make the first quarter of 2004 [to get an operating energy device to replace fossil fuels]. And if we miss the first quarter of 2004, then we may as well all go home and enjoy our families for the time we have left because it is going to blow. It will be too little and too late. And don't come in 2006, when any fool can then see the world is fixing to blow up and say, would you guys like to try this? I'll say, no, I'm going to enjoy my family with the time I have left. You blew it back in 2000, 2001. You decided right then to blow it. And so, it is on your head. And this will be all we can do if we don't make the schedule.

Everybody wants a modern life. They want to get out of the mud and the slime and everything and have lights and have things that are powered. And have industry and jobs and homes and schools. It's a common striving from the human heart. And to try to do that the way we are doing it, we'll destroy the planet and we will forcefully destroy each other. It seems to me, we just ought to be wiser than that.

Testimony of Dr. Eugene Mallove
October 2000

Dr. Eugene Mallove is currently the Editor-in-Chief of the magazine Infinite Energy and Director of the New Energy Research Laboratory in New Hampshire. He holds two MIT degrees in Aeronautical-Astronautical Engineering and a Harvard Doctorate in Environmental Health Sciences (Air Pollution Control Engineering). He has broad experience in high-technology engineering at companies including Hughes Research Labs, TASC (The Analytic Science Corporation), and MIT Lincoln Laboratory. Dr. Mallove was the Chief Science Writer at MIT when the cold fusion story broke in March 1989, and he resigned in 1991 after his requested investigation into the altered cold fusion data at MIT (which helped to discredit the whole subject) was not properly done. The marginalization by the scientific establishment of the cold fusion topic bears strong resemblance to the similar marginalization of the ET/UFO topic: both have been ridiculed and defamed because they break established paradigms. As Dr. Mallove states in this interview, "There is nothing worse... than suggesting to academic physicists in particular, and academics in general, that they are not only wrong; they are disastrously wrong, catastrophically wrong." In his magazine, Dr. Mallove has advised us to remember the sentiments of Michael Faraday: "Nothing is too wonderful to be true."

My name is Dr. Eugene Mallove. I'm currently the Editor-in-Chief of the international science and energy magazine called Infinite Energy, published in New Hampshire [and distributed] in 38 countries. I'm also the Director of the New Energy Research Laboratory. I have two engineering degrees from MIT: a Bachelor of Science in Aeronautical-Astronautical Engineering in 1969, and a Masters in Aeronautical-Astronautical Engineering in 1970. I also have a Doctorate in Engineering from Harvard University School of Public Health, in Environmental Health Sciences, 1975.

I was the Chief Science Writer at the MIT news office when the cold fusion story out of Utah broke on March 23rd, 1989. Drs. Pons and Fleischmann made their announcement at the University of Utah that they had created a source of energy that had more energy coming out than in, from a vessel of heavy water. They thought that the amount of heat coming out was so large that it had to be a nuclear source. They were excellent chemists—world class. They could not see anything else but a nuclear explanation, even though they didn't have proof of it, other than the magnitude of the excess heat and some preliminary indications of nuclear products.

That's how it began. And by the way, it's always nice to mention that this was only 12 hours before the Exxon Valdez ran aground off Alaska—a kind of cosmic coincidence of great significance, in some respect. History will record that, I'm sure.

What we really had was a threat to the scientific establishment. Even if it were perceived as it was then as a bogus discovery, the threat of it even being implied as real, and having monies, shall we say, being diverted from physicists' favorite programs, was a threat.

But it turns out the cold fusion effect was real. Now it is 100% certain. In fact, what Pons and Fleischmann found was only the tip of an iceberg. This is a huge controversy, one of the largest, maybe most intense, controversies in the history of science in the sense that it is occurring in the modern age, well documented in video and current media and books. There are huge quantities of technical literature published by the proponents, and a much smaller amount by the people who found so-called negative results. The intensity of this controversy certainly equals controversies of the past, like Galileo.

Two very dramatic events occurred at MIT while the cold fusion story was evolving. Within weeks of the announcement, the hot fusion people were going into action behind closed doors to disprove them. One day, while at MIT, I inadvertently was looking through some piles of paper that had been given to me in a casual manner by all these hot fusion physicists as they were trying to do their kilometric repeat of the Pons-Fleischmann experiment. To my utter astonishment, I can remember sitting at my desk in my study, and actually seeing these two sheets of paper, one dated July 10th, 1989 and another dated July 13th, three days apart.

The difference between July 10th and 13th was dramatic. My initial reaction was, oh, here's the July 10th control experiment—light water. Heavy water—the real Pons-Fleischmann experiment—showed in the raw data excess heat, what looked like excess heat on the graph. Whether it was correct or not is unimportant, but it looked on the graph like it was dominantly positive. But then, on the 13th, it was shifted completely. It was altered. They did some standard averaging, which was appropriate, in time blocks. But the level of the signal had been utterly changed, and I was stunned. I couldn't believe what I was seeing. It looked like monkey business to me at the time, and it has turned out to be exactly that. It was a lower-echelon person in the plasma fusion center at MIT. One of the 16 authors of the scientific paper, done under Department of Energy contract, had altered data. That data is scientific fraud as far as I'm concerned, and many other people are concerned. It was represented as a negative result when it was positive. The representation of the altered data as a negative was clear fraud—no question. It's been referred to legal authorities in the Government.

I asked for a review at MIT. I got nowhere. If this type of manipulation had occurred in any legitimate research area, such as cancer research, AIDS research, global warming research, anything that is accepted as reasonable to be researching, the people would lose their jobs. They wouldn't be in science.

And yet today, their data are used to reject patents. It is not the only thing they use to reject patents of American citizens and other people applying for cold fusion patents, but the MIT data is held up. It's a travesty, a very amazing thing.

We know for a fact, today, that the cold fusion low energy nuclear reactions are real. It's a class of nuclear non-dangerous reactions producing dominantly heat, but also nuclear changes—a very beneficial type of powerful reaction. It is a commercially emerging technology in the hands of a number of companies. It is difficult technology but it will, under the proper circumstances of proper patenting and funding, emerge as a universal energy source. And, I just want to say that at least one of the reactions is, indeed, cold fusion—literally the joining of two heavy hydrogen nuclei to form helium four. This has been demonstrated repeatedly by Dr. Les Case, an MIT graduate, and his process has been repeated at SRI International.

There is absolutely no doubt about this. What that means is that in one cubic kilometer of ocean, if you fuse all the heavy hydrogen, which is just one sixty-five hundredth of that cubic kilometer of ocean, that would equal the oil energy from combusting all the known oil reserves on earth. So, for all practical purposes, we know scientifically, in a very careful manner supported by a mountain of additional supporting evidence, that this is possible in principle and it is nearing commercial application.

Cold fusion has opened my eyes to yet other possibilities. These possibilities are based on my evaluation of a number of devices I have seen or studied. Without getting into details of what these devices are, in a few instances I can say they are clearly over-unity electromagnetic devices, things that produce more electrical energy out than in. We are not in Kansas any longer. This is spectacular new physics. It indicates that some rather dramatic cracks exist in the foundations of physics. Electromagnetic theory will require radical revision.

There has been an extraordinary abrogation of basic legal responsibility at the Patent Office and at the Department of Energy on the matter of cold fusion. Cold fusion patents have not been approved. The only way of approving any patent that resembles cold fusion is to eliminate the words cold fusion or anything like it. Certain people have done that and succeeded. The Patterson power cell is one such example. It was an age acceleration clause (because of the age of Dr. Patterson) that helped him, and he went through a different art group at the Patent Office.

But predominantly, if the patent goes through a certain gentleman at the Patent Office today whose name is Harvey, he will reject all such patents. They will not get through. American citizens are being denied their constitutional rights in this particular case. There is no question about it. We have a complete audit trail on that. Yes, there is serious criminal activity going on that ultimately must be rooted out if the cold fusion and new energy revolution are to go forward. If it doesn't get rooted out, you will not be able to have a commercial infrastructure.

The field of cold fusion has been marginalized by the establishment by creating certain myths about it. Terminology is being used which is highly inappropriate and has no bearing at all on what is being done. It is called pathological science, junk science, weird science, voodoo science, etc., and it's basically name-calling. They no longer look at the data. Of course, they never really looked at the data.

[Note there is a striking resemblance between the ridicule and invective thrown at cold fusion and how the entire UFO matter has been handled by establishment, government, academic, and media groups. SG]

They said it must work like hot fusion. Well, this was in a solid state. Demanding that cold fusion work like hot fusion is like saying a transistor must work like a radio tube. It is idiotic. It is stupid. It makes no sense. And yet, that is what was demanded. So, they made straw men—there must be this product or this radiation—or we are not going to believe it.

You know, much happened after the Wright Brothers' airplane flew. There was a great deal of controversy about that from 1903 to 1908. One critic, Simon Newcombe, the prominent astronomer, said it would never fly, never would be real, could never be done. But after it did fly he said, "Oh yes, well, I guess they really do have it after all, but it won't have passengers, it won't be practical," and so forth.

This has occurred many times in other controversies, but this one is particularly intense because of the threat to academic wisdom. There is nothing worse, I found, than suggesting to academic physicists in particular, and academics in general, that they are not only wrong; they are disastrously wrong, catastrophically wrong.

Testimony of Dr. Paul LaViolette

October 2000

Dr. Paul LaViolette has written four books and has published many original papers in physics, astronomy, climatology, systems theory, and psychology. He received his BA in physics from Johns Hopkins, his MBA from the University of Chicago, and PhD from Portland State University, and is currently president of the Starburst Foundation, an interdisciplinary scientific research institute. He is the developer of subquantum kinetics, a novel approach to micro-physics that accounts for electric, magnetic, gravitational, and nuclear forces in a unified manner and resolves many long-standing physics problems. Based on the predictions of this theory, he developed an alternative cosmology that effectively replaces the big bang theory. Dr. LaViolette has also developed a new theory of gravity that replaces the deeply flawed theory of general relativity. Predicted from subquantum kinetics, it accounts for the electrogravitic coupling phenomenon discovered by Townsend Brown and may explain the advanced aerospace propulsion technology utilized in the B-2 bomber. In addition to his understanding of UFO and black budget craft propulsion systems, including materialization and dematerialization, he has deep knowledge of the inner workings of the U.S. Patent Office. He states in this interview that, currently, if an invention doesn't fit into the accepted physics paradigm, the patent examiners immediately reject it thinking it violates the paradigm and must be a mistake. In effect, new energy technologies are the underdog: They don't fit the paradigm so they are left out of the needed funding, or their patents are denied—even to the point that the Patent Office is breaking the law. In order to alleviate the current Earth crises of environmental pollution, global warming, etc. and advance as a technological society, we need technologies that don't fit into the old paradigm.

I studied physics at Johns Hopkins for my B.A. degree and I got a Masters in business administration at the University of Chicago. I got my Ph.D. after that at Portland State University in system science, which was an interdisciplinary program

My interest in electrogravitics, which is Townsend Browns work, began in 1985. I was interested because the physics area I had been working on predicted a coupling between electricity and gravitation, which is pretty much what Brown was illustrating experimentally. In the standard physics theory like general relativity which is our current theory of gravitation, you have only one polarity to gravity, so masses can only attract, and there is no possibility for gravitational repulsion or antigravity. Physicists have proposed that there might be some coupling between electricity and gravitation at very high energies. That is one of their reasons for building these huge particle colliders—they are hoping to find this connection. But if they just look before their eyes to the experimental evidence, there is already a connection at normal laboratory voltages that you can generate.

Brown had a maypole that he built with two discs. He would charge the discs, and the leading edge of each disc had a wire that would emit positive ions, [while] the body of the disc was negatively charged. He charged it with 50,000 volts, about 50 watts of power, and the discs would spin around at about 12 miles per hour. He is reported to have done a similar thing, but larger, on a 50-foot course, charging to 150,000 volts—and those discs were going several hundred miles per hour.

This was done around 1953 in Pearl Harbor, and he demonstrated it to some top brass from the military. This subject was reported to have been classified after that, they were so impressed with the results.

Some people have said this is due to ion propulsion: that the ions coming off of the front of the craft somehow blow the craft and cause it to move. There have been experiments done to show this is not the case. In fact, Brown tested his idea in a vacuum, so this eliminated the possibility of ions, and it actually worked better in a vacuum.

I was interested because I could explain this electrogravitic effect with my theory. Basically, the positive charges would create gravitational wells just like our current concept of a gravitational well around a massive object; whereas, electrons would do the opposite: they'd create gravity hills which, in effect, you'd say is a gravitational repulsion effect. If you look at Brown's disc, according to my theory, you get a gravity potential hill, a g-hill, towards the negatively charged end of the craft and a g-well towards the positive. There would be an effect of a gravitational gradient that would tend to propel it forward.

I know that in 1952 [Brown] put on a demonstration to the Office of Naval Research.

[See the government document from the US Office of Naval Research that reports on these developments, in part. SG]

I believe that there are many ways to create a gravitational effect. Now, Brown was using high voltage charge, and it appears that that technology is used on the B-2 [bomber].

[See the testimony of Mark McCandlish, Dr. B., et al]

One approach involves using a maser. This would be a different approach from what Brown was doing. This is using microwaves to be able to push on a distant surface.

Using masers is very highly classified because of its use for UFO propulsion. The beauty of this is that the microwaves stay in the beam; they don't scatter out. That's the nature of it—you pump up your beam, in effect, with energy, and it is not locked. It is like you are putting your energy into a tube—it is a resonator. In effect, you could create a craft that [seems to be] standing on poles. The maser beams, in fact, become like solid poles between the craft and the ground. This is how, for example, the TR3B is using anti-gravity technology and has three thrusters on the bottom. Well, this is what the thrusters would be: masers.

There have been triangular UFOs [of man-made origin], and the TR3B is one of the triangular-shaped UFOs that we've heard about.

UFOs may be of alien origin, but some of them may be ones we have created ourselves using this technology. In some UFO reports, you often see three domes underneath the object. I believe these are actually microwave transmitters for the beams.

My first exposure to the fact that this anti-gravity research was quite a major endeavor by aerospace corporations came from this report, Electrogravitic Systems, which I found very revealing.

The way I came about this report was that I was at the Library of Congress looking under gravitation to see if there was anything remotely touching on the subject of electrogravitics. At that time, in 1985, I had just become acquainted with the existence of electrogravitics through some articles by Townsend Brown. There was only one card in the whole catalogue that came close to this subject, and it was a reference to this report. Interestingly, it was missing from the stacks and they had to do a computer search to see where another one was located. The fellow said, "This must be a very rare report; it's only in one other library in the whole U.S." I said, where's that? He said, "Wright Patterson Air Force Base."

So I went ahead and ordered it through an inter-library loan request and I was surprised that they actually sent it to me.

It was produced by a group called Aviation Studies International, which is a think-tank in London that produces intelligence reports. They are still in existence and this report was dated 1956. The report was trying to encourage the aircraft industry to develop Townsend Brown's electrogravitics technology, with the idea of developing a mach 3 fighter craft, or maybe even to commercialize it, so instead of taking jets we will fly much faster with electrogravitics.

They did a survey of the aviation industry and named some major aircraft companies involved with this area. Those named included Glen Martin (that's a former company name for Martin Marietta, which has now merged as Lockheed Martin). It said that Glen Martin now feels ready to say in public that they are examining the unified fields area to see what can be done, and so on.

Companies studying the implications of gravitics included Glen Martin, Convair, Sperry Rand, Sikorsky, Bell, Lear, Clarke Electronics, Lockheed, Douglas, and Hiller.

This report was calling for a Manhattan-style project to develop electrogravitics, [claiming] this was going to change our whole aviation technology. Later, in Business Week magazine, they listed an impressive array of companies and institutions backing gravity research, and this was back in the 1950s. That included Martin, Grumman, Lockheed, Sperry Rand, and Hughes Aircraft.

[These reports and recommendations were from the 1950s—nearly half a century ago. We know research was going on then and continues today, and that covert projects already have mastered the antigravity effect and related propulsion systems. See the testimony of Mark McCandlish, Lieutenant Colonel John Williams, Dr. B., et al. SG]

I do believe that we have technology presently developed which would allow us to easily navigate the solar system. I wouldn't be surprised if we had bases on Mars and the moon, and we are regularly going there with these kinds of craft. You know, we have that ability.

Let's say there was a Roswell crash, and the National Security Agency was formed to keep this all classified. Now, something like that is a very emotional experience [with] some of your Government officials. You realize there is extraterrestrial life, and they have this advanced technology. When you become very emotional about something, one reaction is to hide it and then see how we can use this for ourselves—we've got to keep one step ahead of the other countries. At that time we had a Cold War with the Soviet Union, so the rationale was to use it for military purposes.

Suppose the same thing happened 100 years ago at the time the automobile was developed? I sincerely believe we'd still be driving horses and buggies today, because it would be feared that the automobile could change warfare. It would mean a much higher speed of travel, and obviously, we should classify this. At that time there wasn't the same mechanism in place; we didn't have the NSA and this major program to contain advanced technologies.

We think of science as being based on observation and being open to change, but as you learn more about it and about the scientists themselves, you realize how much it is a religion. It is very closed [and] resistive to changing its fundamental principles.

For example, take the Patent Office examiners. Any new device that could help us solve our energy crisis but is getting its energy from someplace the patent examiner doesn't understand, he immediately thinks, "Oh, this is in violation of the first law of thermodynamics." He is not thinking that maybe there is a source of energy that we just haven't discovered.

Right now, it doesn't necessarily fit into the physics framework, but instead of thinking that way, they immediately reject it, thinking, well, this fellow was a fraud, or he did his measurements wrong. It's almost like a very religious feeling where the examiners have ascribed to a certain belief system; anything that challenges that, they will deny its existence.

There was a case of a Canadian fellow who had developed a technology for producing enough power to power your house, out of something about the size of a shoebox. It was a new way of wiring something up—some sort of non-linear device. He was very open about it and [about] publicizing it. One day his house was surrounded by SWAT teams and all of his equipment was confiscated. He was arrested on the grounds that he was harboring terrorist technology or weaponry, and he was released only after he had signed something that said he would not continue doing work in this area. Now he is mowing lawns for a living.

This is a very lame excuse for suppressing this kind of thing. In my opinion, if they are really that frightened about these new technologies they can always license them, just like you license radio stations, to keep tabs on it. I think our current crisis with energy is important enough that this is the least that they can do, instead of arresting people who are trying to help the world.

The way I had concluded the B-2 [bomber] may be using the electrogravitics technology of Townsend Brown was through an article published in Aviation Week and Space Technology. There were some black project engineers who had disclosed to the editor of the magazine information about some black project technology. They said that the B-2 charges the leading edge of its wing to high voltage, and its exhaust is charged to an opposite high voltage charge.

They had given some explanations of how this would, for example, help soften the sonic boom if you charge the leading edge of the wing, which is true. In fact, it's one of the things that Brown had talked about. Also, they were saying how this helps cool exhaust and disguise the infrared signature, which is also true. They didn't go further to explain the tie-in with electrogravitics, and that's the connection that I made.

[See Dr. B., Mark McCandlish and others. SG]

I realized that this was, in effect, a description of Townsend Brown's patented device which was issued in 1962—his electrokinetics patent. In effect, the jet becomes your electrical generator. In fact, it's a high voltage electric generator, and with that power, you are able to feed the positive side of the generator to the front of your craft and generate your propulsion—like he was doing in those small discs that he was testing that were going hundreds of miles per hour. Except here you are doing it on a very large scale.

My theory called subquantum kinetics allows for the possibility of materialization and dematerialization.

[See also the testimony of Fred Threlfall. SG]

Now, in relation to the technology of spacecraft, there are accounts of how a craft can actually dematerialize visually. My theory about this is that they are able to affect the gravity field of the craft and cause this. They are able to make the craft lighter, in effect—like a gravity potential to make a g-hill there, and the waves that form the particles would diminish, go more towards a vacuum state, and seem to disappear.

Time and again, technology has driven the physics theory. The physics theory tends to be restraining on technological advancement, because all you would come up with is the ideas that your theory happens to predict. Now, if that were the case, our technological advances would slow to a halt. Fortunately, our patent system is set up to allow us to go beyond the laws of physics to patent things that work [even if the physics theory has not caught up].

The Patent Office, in its current approach, is actually breaking the law. It is trying to make happy the physicists who are with the American Physical Society—to keep them in power with their ideas, you might say, and withhold from public use good inventions that could solve our problems, like the energy crisis. There is a whole pattern of this going on at the Patent Office. I personally know it, because I was at the Patent Office for about a year and I know some people there, and I know some of the things that were going on. For example, there was somebody I know who issued a patent on a process of sending signals faster than the speed of light. This was then made fun of by Robert Park on his website. Through their connections, they had this posted somewhere as the most ridiculous patent of the year award—this sort of thing.

In effect, they embarrassed the Patent Office, and shortly after this embarrassing publicity occurred, the commissioner of the Patent Office reprimanded the examiner and his supervisor. He threatened to fire the supervisor. In effect, he was trying to satisfy this lobby group that has undue influence on the Patent Office and shouldn't really be allowed to. They can say what they want; its freedom of speech, but for the Patent Office to do their bidding instead of following the law—that is illegal.

Anything that challenges their belief system they are going to oppose. They don't care that something is going to help society, if it shows that maybe their theories are wrong. It's self-interest—the heck with the rest of the world, you know—let global warming happen. If it doesn't fit into our physics box, that's too bad.

In effect, these new energy technologies are the underdog. They don't fit into the paradigm that is currently taught and believed, so they are left out of the needed funding, or their patents are denied—even to the point that they are breaking the law. Without their patents being issued, how are investors going to invest in the company? We need a massive education program to educate the Patent Office on how they should follow the law, instead of breaking the law, and the funding institutions like the National Science Foundation and the Department of Energy need to start funding these areas.

We have heard about the melting of the arctic, the rising temperatures, the global warming effect. These are real. We really have to start initiating this program as soon as possible. This should be a major area of concern for Congress. The paradigm that we are in has been fine in the past, and it's done well, but we are at a point where we need to go beyond that. We need technologies that don't fit into that paradigm.

Testimony of Mr. Fred Threlfall

September 2000

Mr. Threlfall was a communications instructor in the Royal Canadian Air Force at RCAF Station Toronto in 1953, when he witnessed an experiment involving the successful dematerialization and re-materialization of an object. Because of his top clearance, he was also able to check out from the base library, original films of gun camera footage from WWII planes. Many times, while watching these films, he noticed UFOs in the footage—different positions, different shapes, but, definitely UFOs. He has also himself seen UFOs maneuvering in the sky.

FT: Fred Threlfall

SG: Dr. Steven Greer

FT: I was in the Royal Canadian Air Force back in the early 1950s. I was a communications instructor and went through communications schools.

While in Toronto stationed at an air station as an instructor in 1953, I observed an unusual experiment. I had just finished an experiment, and I was on my way back to my classroom. There's this one experiment that was going on, and it was in an approximately four-by-four glass enclosure inside this room. On a cabinet there was a large glass ashtray. I said, what's going on? "Oh, we've got an experiment underway, and we have a similar device in the other room with no ashtray," [they answered]. So, we're talking away and one of the scientists said, "Go ahead." Next thing [I knew], that ashtray wasn't sitting there. Everyone went into the next room and was excited as can be, because the ashtray was sitting there—so, it dematerialized and materialized—which was quite the thing!

After seeing that, and with my knowledge of electronics in those days—which was still primitive, compared to what there is today—it was quite exciting. Mind you, this is back in 1953 when it transpired.

SG: Where were you located when this experiment occurred?

FT: It was Station Toronto, which was the old hunt club, the RCAF Station Toronto.

SG: When the scientist said okay, did someone flip a switch or do something to make this object dematerialize and re-materialize?

FT: There was a panel of instruments and equipment off on the side. [Whoever] was there had to throw a switch. They had to energize whatever equipment they had in order for it to take place. Then, it just disappeared—completely. It was there one minute, and then—boom—in one second it was gone. As we went into the other room, it was sitting there.

SG: And, it was the identical, same object?

FT: Exactly the same object. Everyone rushed through to the other side to see if anything happened, and it was there. I was asked, "What are you doing here?" And I said, I just finished an experiment, sir, and was on the way back, and I was just talking to a couple of my friends here. He said, "Well, you're not supposed to see this." I said, yes sir, and I went back to my classroom. I wasn't supposed to see that, because I wasn't part of the investigation team or a scientist. But what happened [was], being an electronics instructor, I had top clearance to be in facilities for the experiments.

Related to UFOs, I had another experience there. With the clearance that I had, I was able to check out a projector and also films from the library on the base. I used to get the films that were taken from the cameras that were mounted on Spitfires and Hurricanes, Mustangs, whatever, during World War II.

You see the plane flying along there, and they're going after the German aircraft, and you see the tracer bullets going out, and the craft going down in flames, and all that. Up in the corner, there'd be a strange little object sitting there, which drew my attention. I'd seen it on many films—different shapes, different positions. This piqued my curiosity with regards to UFOs. I had heard of the UFO crash down in New Mexico. I have seen UFO maneuvers in the sky at complete right angles and rapid speed.

SG: Did you see aircraft gun camera footage of UFOs in more than one case?

FT: Oh yes—in many cases, in many cases. I have seen it from different films drawn from the library—so, not just one—several times.

[See the testimony of Nick Pope, which discusses British gun camera footage of UFOs seen by his MOD predecessor Ralph Noyes. SG]

Yes, I saw the objects that were UFOs—that I could see, definitely. They were different shapes: some of them were round; some of them were oblong. They were at different distances as well, so some I'd be able to see a little more detail than the others.

SG: You had no doubt that these were structured objects and not artifacts?

FT: That's correct, yes. I saw twenty, thirty films with UFOs in them.

Testimony of Dr. Ted Loder

October 2000

Dr. Ted Loder is a respected scientist and oceanography professor at the University of New Hampshire. After learning from his cousin, Brigadier General Stephen Lovekin, that the ET/UFO subject is not only real but is the key to technologies that could preserve our earth's environment while advancing humanity into a sustainable planetary society, he has become an outspoken advocate for ending the secrecy surrounding this subject. During the past four years, he has worked to introduce students, other scientists, and legislators to the fact that humans are not alone in the universe and peaceful interaction with ETs is necessary to the survival of our planet and our people.

TL: My name is Ted Loder. I'm a Professor of Earth Sciences at the Institute for the Study of Earth, Oceans and Space at the University of New Hampshire. I've been there since 1972. Professionally, I'm an oceanographer.

Four years ago I was talking to my cousin, Stephen Lovekin, who is a Brigadier General in the Army National Guard and a lawyer in North Carolina. He told me that he had been in a meeting on the west coast with some astronauts and Russian cosmonauts and others.

[This was the June 1995 CSETI initial gathering of military and government witnesses to UFO and ET events in California. SG]

I said, Steve, what's this about astronauts you were talking to? He flipped out on the table this card of a Russian cosmonaut—English on one side, Russian on the other—and he looked at me and said, "Ted, did you ever hear of the Roswell incident?" Of course, I answered, everybody has heard of Roswell. "Well, it was real," he said. And I said, oh really! Tell me more. So we spent the next three days in intense conversation. I could barely sleep at night, frankly

My cousin told me the things that he had known and the people he had talked to when he was in the White House during Eisenhower's administration. He was [involved with] cryptography, and had a top-secret clearance. He saw material from the Roswell crash. And he had no reason to lie to me at all—he's my cousin and we were best friends for all of our childhood.

Here was somebody who was an inside person telling me this information is real, so within a matter of hours I was absolutely convinced that what he was telling was [the truth]. Now I had to sort it out. During those first few nights, I must admit, I spent a lot of time lying in bed saying, oh my God, it's real. What are the implications? I realized, even at that time, that if this is real, then [it] is probably the single most important thing on this planet today.

I later learned that we already know how UFOs function, but this information is not available to our society. Soon, it is going to be 100 years since we've been flying fossil fuel powered airplanes, and I now know the technology to replace [them] has existed for almost 50 years.

I'm an oceanographer, I work extensively with the environment, and I teach classes about different aspects of the environment. I see how much damage is happening to the environment and know that it is avoidable. [I know] that some of the technologies derived from the ET craft: could help us, and it is ridiculous to hold back the technology.

The single biggest piece of knowledge is that we are not alone in the universe. We are actually members of a family of peoples throughout the universe. [The fact] that we're not alone is amazing. It is going to alter the way we view ourselves on earth forevermore.

The argument that people can't handle this—I don't think it flies at all. I've talked to a lot of people about this, and I have never seen anybody go off the deep end when I told them what I know.

Even after talking to my cousin, I decided that I wouldn't go public about this until I saw something that was absolutely in my face, seen by multiple witnesses, and there could be no argument. That happened for me when I was in Joshua Tree National Park in the fall of 1997.

I was attending a CSETI training group led by Dr. Greer, and we were out in the field doing research towards observing an ET craft of some sort. It happened to be a rather full moon evening, and the moon was off [beyond] my right shoulder. Suddenly, just below the moon, there appeared an object like a globe—maybe a third to half the diameter of the moon. It just appeared to the left side, underneath the moon, and it traveled from one side of the moon to the other side, and then just disappeared! It was as though somebody had turned [on] a light bulb on one side of the moon, and then carried it across below the moon. I saw it and I was so excited! I asked did anybody else see that? I was almost jumping up and down because it was so clear and it was so obvious to me. Dr. Greer, luckily, was facing that direction, so he had seen it. I asked if anybody else had seen this, and five or six people in the group said yes.

The technologies behind these UFOs could, if used in a peaceful manner, benefit our earth civilization in a major way. Where do they get the energy to travel these great speeds and distances? When we start to look into this area, we will find that they aren't using jet fuel and they aren't using coal to get here. They are using technologies that the average guy on the street—or the average physicist in a university—doesn't have any clue about. And yet, it is very real, so the implications are that we can create a planetary society that can go beyond coal and oil as energy sources.

In fact, one of the major problems I've seen and talked about for years is that this planet is basically offering its people about a 100 to 150-year window to develop new technologies. We have a very short time to go from burning wood to oil and coal, and [advancing from] nuclear energy to a sustainable energy. If we blow it because we haven't gotten our act together, we are toast.

I was appointed by the Governor of the state of New Hampshire to attend a closed congressional briefing organized by CSETI, with people like [Astronaut] Edgar Mitchell speaking about the reality of this subject. My scientific colleagues had varying reactions to this.

One scientist who sits on many NASA committees initially was very warm because we knew a lot of mutual people, but as I talked more [on this topic], he became colder and colder. I realized afterwards that he was very threatened because the particular job that he was doing in NASA would be significantly impacted by the knowledge that there are extraterrestrials already visiting our planet and that they had the ability to travel through space, etc. He said a very curious thing: "I wouldn't believe it even if it was real." That's a direct quote from his email to me—"I would not believe this even if it was real." Then he [added], "But if you learn anything more about this, let me know." This tells me we have a major problem with scientists and our universities in getting them to accept something outside the paradigms that they have grown up with. That's a major problem within our universities, but the students that I've lectured to are far more open-minded than the professors—and I'm a professor and I deal with these people all the time.

[Another] point to keep in mind is that the Roswell and similar events in New Mexico in the late 1940s allowed certain parts of the Government to obtain downed extraterrestrial craft. It is now 50-some years later, and the black projects have pumped hundreds of billions of dollars into reverse-engineering these technologies, such as anti-gravity, space travel, and other technologies of extraterrestrial origin. Now, if you've just put several hundred billion dollars into something, you can be doggoned sure that something has come out of that. People have told me that [black projects] had spent a tremendous amount of money by the mid-1950s on anti-gravity. I have heard from a number of different quarters that we have anti-gravity techniques actually in craft that can fly as discs. In fact, it is my sense of things from a number of different sources that the vast majority of "extraterrestrial craft" that people observe in the United States and other parts of the world are not extraterrestrial. They are actually our military, our covert black ops people that are flying these craft. I have seen what are sometimes known as alien reproduction vehicles, ARVs. These are craft that have been reverse-engineered. I saw a craft a few years ago that was V-shaped and heading down the Santa Barbara Channel. [Another person and I] witnessed this, and both of us [were using] third generation night vision scopes. This craft was traveling between 4,000 and 8,000 miles an hour down the Santa Barbara Channel, and it may have been [human-made]!

In Sedona two years ago, when I was there with a group of CSETI researchers, we saw an alien reproduction vehicle escorted by jets. There were U.S. jets flying with this silent, disc-shaped object that was acting totally different [from] the jets

As a scientist and one who knows the subject is real, I've talked to my legislators. I've talked to my classes. I've talked to my students. I think, very personally, that people who know this subject is real owe it to our society and to our planet to come forth and speak out about this. I've got two sons in their early 30s and I want to see that we have a future on this planet that is as good as I had it, or better. I see that unless this subject comes out, this planet will not be as good as I had it, or better. It is going to be worse from a pollution point of view and from a breakdown in our democratic society.

I've talked to a number of people who have studied this issue and feel that the cover-up that has been going on for the last 50 years is probably the biggest single threat to our democratic society since this country was founded in 1776. We are at a major crossroads in how our society and Government function, because this topic is not under the control of our elected Government and it is not under the control of our judicial Government. It is under the control of others, some of whom are members of our Government, and some of whom are members of the military-industrial complex. They are in control of this issue—the single most important issue on this planet today. And that is not healthy in the long run for our society or our people.

For a long time we had the threats of Russia and the Cold War and we didn't want the Russians to find out about this technology. It was kept away from the public so it wouldn't "get to the Russians." Of course, they knew what was going on because they were spying. So it was really being kept from the public, not from the Russians.

But that time has passed. The Cold War has ended, in its own way, and we no longer have that threat, so the arguments for keeping the secret have gone on by. The trouble is, now we are finding that people who know about this are afraid to speak out. There are very few people who have the courage of conviction to say this secret has gone on too long. It is time for this information to become known worldwide. It is time for this information to come out in terms of the technology, for the benefit of our society and for the benefit of our ecosystems on this planet. But very few people are willing to stand up and be counted on this issue.

The excuses go on and on and on. We talk to our senators and our representatives and they'll come up with any excuse in the book to avoid dealing with this. This secrecy is keeping us down, and it is preventing us from moving on as a planetary society.

What is most disturbing is that we have reports that covert programs are using these advanced technologies to target and shoot down extraterrestrial craft. We have numerous witnesses who have seen this and know of its existence. This means that there is a small group of people on this planet who are literally declaring inter-planetary war with extraterrestrials who have come to this planet to observe and, ultimately, to help mankind. This is an untenable situation for the peoples of this planet to be in. It is extremely disturbing to me and to all of us who are aware of this fact. That alone is enough reason to make this information public and to try to get people to be concerned about it.

Conclusions

Over the past few years I have had the responsibility of briefing senior government and scientific leaders both in the US and abroad on the UFO/Extraterrestrial subject.

The evidence regarding this subject is clear and overwhelming: It has not been difficult to make a compelling case for the reality of UFOs per se. What is a greater challenge is elucidating the architecture of secrecy related to UFOs (see the exposition of this matter contained in the paper entitled "Unacknowledged" by this author). But the greatest challenge is explaining the 'why'. Why all the secrecy? Why a 'black' or unacknowledged government within the government? Why hide the UFO/ET subject from public view?

The 'what' or evidence is complex but manageable. The 'how' or nature of the secret programs is more difficult, much more complex and Byzantine. But the 'why' - the reason behind the secrecy'- is the most challenging problem of all. There is not a single answer to this question, but rather numerous inter-related reasons for such extraordinary secrecy. Our investigations and interviews with dozens of top - secret witnesses who have been within such programs have enabled us to understand the reasons behind this secrecy. They range from the fairly obvious and straight-forward to the really bizarre. Here, I wish to share some key points regarding this secrecy, why it has been imposed and why it is so difficult for the controlling interests within covert programs to reverse policy and allow disclosure.

In The Beginning

In the early days of the ET/UFO phenomena, military, intelligence and industrial interests had concerns regarding the nature of the phenomena, whether it originated from our human adversaries and once it was determined to be extraterrestrial, how the public would react.

In the 1930s and 1940s this was no small matter: If these UFOs were of terrestrial origin, they would be evidence of an earthly adversary with technological devices far in advance of US aircraft. And once it was determined to be extraterrestrial (some quarters knew this prior to the end of WWII) there were many more questions than answers. To wit: why were the ET s here? What are their intentions? How do the devices travel at such fantastic speeds and through the vastness of space? How might these technologies be applied to the human situation -both in war and in peace? How would the public react to this knowledge? What effect would the disclosure of these facts have on human belief systems? Political and social systems?

From the late 1940s through the early 1950s, a concerted effort was made to figure out the basic science and technologies behind these spacecraft, primarily through the direct study and reverse-engineering of the retrieved extraterrestrial objects from New Mexico and elsewhere. It was immediately recognized that these objects were using laws of physics and applied technologies far in advance of internal combustion engines, vacuum tubes and the like. In the climate of the Cold War and in a world where a relatively minor advantage technologically could tilt the balance of power in the nuclear arms race, this was no small matter.

Indeed, the theme of human geo-political dysfunction appears as a recurring feature of the secrecy related to UFOs - up to the present hour. More on this later.

From the Wilbur Smith top secret Canadian government document of 1950, we know that this subject was held in greater secrecy than even the development of the hydrogen bomb. There was a tremendous effort underway by the late 1940s to study extraterrestrial hardware, figure out how it operated and see what human applications might be made from such discoveries. Even then, the project dealing with this subject was extraordinarily covert.

It became much more so by the early 1950s when substantial progress was made on some of the basic physics behind the ET craft energy and propulsion systems. The best we can estimate, it was then that the entire project became increasingly 'black' or unacknowledged.

The compartmentalization of the project dealing with UFOs was exponentially increased by the early 1950s when it was realized what it was that these covert projects actually had: Devices displaying physics and energy systems which - if disclosed — would forever alter life on earth.

By the Eisenhower era, the UFO/ET projects were increasingly compartmented away from legal, constitutional chain-of-command oversight and control. This means that -while we know from witness testimony that Eisenhower knew of the ET craft - the president ( and similar leaders in the UK and elsewhere) were increasingly left out of the loop. Such senior elected and appointed leaders were confronted with (as Eisenhower called it) a sophisticated military-industrial complex with labyrinthine compartmented projects which were more and more out of their control and oversight. From direct witness testimony we know that Eisenhower, Kennedy, Carter and Clinton were frustrated in their attempts to penetrate such projects.

This is also true of senior congressional leaders and investigators, foreign leaders and UN leadership. This is indeed an equal opportunity exclusion project - it does not matter how high your rank or office, if you are not deemed necessary to the project, you are not going to know about it. Period.

Contrary to popular myth, since the 1960s concern over some type of public panic when faced with the fact that we are not alone in the universe has not been a major reason for the secrecy. Those in the know —notwithstanding the fantastic tales spun in UFO circles and on the X-Files -understand that fear of hostile ET s has also not been a significant factor. While there has been continued confusion in some covert circles over the ultimate purpose behind the ET phenomena, we know of no knowledgeable insiders who regard the ET s as a hostile threat.

By the 1960s - and certainly by the 1990s - the world was very familiar with the concept of space travel and the popular science - fiction industry had thoroughly indoctrinated the masses with the idea of ET s from far away being a possibility. So why the continued secrecy?

The Cold War is over. People would hardly be shocked to find out that we are not alone in the universe (the majority of people already believe this - in fact most people believe the UFOs are real). Besides, what could be more shocking than to live through the latter half of the 20th century with thousands of hydrogen bombs aimed at every major city in the world? If we can handle that, surely we can handle the idea that ET s are real.

The facile explanations of fear, panic, shock and the like do not suffice to justify a level of secrecy so deep that even the President and his CIA Director could be denied access to the information.

A Current Estimate

Continued secrecy on the UFO subject must be related, then, to on-going anxiety related to the essential power dynamics of the world and how such a disclosure would impact these.

That is, the knowledge related to UFOs/ET phenomena must have such great potential for changing the status quo that its continued suppression is deemed essential, at all costs.

Going back to the early 1950s, we have found that the basic technology and physics behind these ET spacecraft were discovered through very intensive reverse-engineering projects. It was precisely at this point that the decision was made to increase the secrecy to an unprecedented level - one which essentially took the matter out of ordinary government chain of command control as we know it. Why?

Aside from the possible use of such knowledge by US/UK adversaries during the Cold War, it was immediately recognized that these devices were not your dad's Oldsmobile. The basic physics behind the energy generation and propulsion systems were such that they could easily replace all existing energy generation and propulsion systems on the earth. And with them, the entire geo-political and economic order.

In the 1950s, there was no great concern over global warming, eco-system collapse, ozone depletion, rain forest loss, bio-diversity degradation etc. In the wake of WW II, what was needed was stability, not a new convulsion of the world eco-conomic, technological and geo-political order. Remember: those in control like to stay in control. They are risk - averse, do not like significant change and do not give up control and power easily.

The disclosure of the existence of ET s, with the inevitable disclosure related to these new technologies soon to follow, would change the world forever - and they knew it. This was to be avoided at all costs. Besides, that was the era of " what is good for GM is good for America", and the same would be true of big oil, big coal and the like.

The inescapable fact is this: The disclosure of the ET presence would bring with it the certain release of these technologies —and that release would sweep away the entire technological infrastructure of the planet. The changes would be immense - and sudden.

Fifty years later this is more true now than then. Why? Because avoiding the problem in the 1950s - while convenient at the time - means that the situation is more tenuous now. For example, world dependence on oil and internal combustion technology is greater now than in 1955. And the world economy is larger by orders of magnitude now, so any change would be exponentially greater - and potentially more chaotic.

And so this is the conundrum: each decade and generation has passed this problem on to the next, only to find any path but continued secrecy more destabilizing than it would have been a decade earlier. In a maddening circle of secrecy, delay of disclosure and increasing world complexity and dependence on out-dated energy systems, each generation has found itself in a greater squeeze than the one before. As difficult as disclosure would have been in the 1950s, disclosure now is even more difficult. And potentially earth-shaking in its consequences.

The technological discoveries of the 1950s resulting from the reverse-engineering of extraterrestrial craft could have enabled us to completely transform the world economic, social, technological and environmental situation. That such advancements have been withheld from the public is related to the change-averse nature of the controlling hierarchy at the time - and to this day.

And make no mistake, the changes would be immense.

Consider: A technology which enables energy generation from the so-called zero point field and which enables every home, business, factory and vehicle to have its own source of power -without an external fuel source. Ever. No need for oil, gas, coal, nuclear plants or the internal combustion engine. And no pollution. Period.

Consider: A technology using electro-gravitic devices which allows for above surface transportation - no more roadways to cover fertile farmland since transportation could take place totally above the surface.

Sounds great. But in the 1950s, oil was plentiful, nobody worried too much about pollution, global warming was not the faintest concern and the powers that be just wanted stability. The status quo. And besides, why risk the tectonic changes related to such a disclosure? Let a later generation take care of it.

But now, we are that later generation. And 2001 is not 1949. The earth is straining under the burden of a growing population - now 6 billion people - all of whom want cars, electricity, TV s and the like. Everyone knows that we do not have 50 more years of oil - and even if we did, the earth's ecosystem could not withstand 50 more years of such abuse. The risks of disclosure are now much less than the risks of secrecy: If secrecy continues much longer, the earth's ecosystem will collapse. Talk about a big change and global instability...

Many people will consider the technological and economic impact of such a disclosure as the central justification of continued secrecy. After all, we are talking about a multi-trillion dollar per year change in the economy. The entire energy and transportation sectors of the economy would be revolutionized. And the energy sector - the part where non-renewable fuels are purchased and burned and have to be replenished - will utterly vanish. And while other industries will flourish, only a fool would dismiss the impact of such a multi-trillion dollar segment of the economy disappearing.

Certainly the 'vested interests' involved in the global industrial infrastructure related to oil, gas, coal and internal combustion engines and public utilities is no small force in the world.

But to understand UFO secrecy you must consider what all that money represents at its core. Power. Massive geo-political power.

One must consider what will happen when every village in India (or Africa or South America or China) has devices which can generate large amounts of power without pollution and without spending huge sums of energy on fuel. The entire world will be able to develop in an unprecedented fashion - without pollution and without billions spent on power plants, transmission lines and combustible fuels. The have-nots will have.

This would widely be considered a good thing: after all, much of world instability, warfare and the like is related to mind-numbing poverty and economic depravity in a world of great wealth. Social injustice and extreme economic disparity breeds much chaos and suffering in the world. These decentralized, non-polluting technologies would change that permanently. Even the deserts will bloom... But it must be remembered that geo-political power flows from technological and economic prowess. India has over 1 billion people and the US about one-fourth of that, but who has the greater geo-political power?

As these new energy systems proliferate, the so-called third world will rapidly reach parity with the industrialized world of Europe, the US and Japan. This will cause a massive shift in geo-political power. And the industrialized world will find that it must then actually share power with the now down-trodden third world.

Those in the cat-bird seat currently (and in 1950) have no interest in doing any such thing. We can hardly even support and share power in the United Nations.

The release of information on the UFO / ET subject will lead to the global proliferation of new energy systems which will rapidly result in an equalization of power in the world. The US and Europe have around 600 million people. That is only 10% of the world's population. Once the other 90% rise in technological and economic standing, it is clear to see that the geo-political power will shift - or equalize - to the rest of the world. Power will have to be shared. Real global collective security will be inevitable. It is the end of the world as we know it.

When you combine the economic and technological impact with the geo-political impact, it becomes obvious that the changes related to ending secrecy are truly tectonic - massive, world-encircling and transformative. It is not to be regarded lightly.

But 50 years after the world could have had these new technologies - and 50 long years of ecological degradation, social and economic chaos and disparity - we find that we are the last generation in the long line of passing the cosmic hot potato known as the UFO secrecy problem.

And here we stand, holding this hot potato, but what shall we do about it?

To end the secrecy means vast and profound changes in virtually every aspect of human existence - economic, social, technological, philosophical, geo-political and so forth. But to continue the secrecy and the suppression of these new energy and propulsion technologies means something far more destabilizing: the collapse of the earth's ecosystem and the certain depletion of the fossil fuels on which we depend. And the growing anger of the have-nots, who are needlessly being deprived of a full and dignified life. There are no more generations to which we can pass this cosmic hot potato: we must deal with it and do what should have been done in 1950.

The Webs We Weave

As if the foregoing was not enough to justify secrecy, recall that extraordinary things have been done to maintain this secrecy. The infrastructure needed to maintain and expand the level of secrecy which can deceive presidents and CIA Directors and senior congressional leaders and European Prime Ministers and the like is substantial - and illegal. Let me be clear, the entity which controls the UFO matter and its related technologies has more power than any single government in the world or any single identified world leader.

That such a situation could arise was forewarned by President Eisenhower when, in January 1961, he cautioned us regarding the growing "military-industrial complex". This was his last speech to the world as president - and he was warning us directly of a frightening situation about which he had personal knowledge. For Eisenhower had seen the ET craft and deceased ET bodies. He knew of the covert programs dealing with the situation. But he also knew that he had lost control of these projects and that they were lying to him about the extent and full nature of their research and development activities.

Indeed, the current state-of-the-art in secrecy is a hybrid, quasi-government, quasi privatized operation which is international - and functions outside of the purview of any single agency or any single government. 'The Government' - as you and I and Thomas Jefferson may think of it - is really quite outside the loop. Rather, a select, tightly controlled and compartmentalized 'black' or unacknowledged project controls these matters. Access is by inclusion alone and if you are not included, it does not matter if you are CIA Director, President, Chairman of Senate Foreign Relations or UN Secretary General, you simply will not know about or have access to these projects.

Indeed the situation is so dire that senior Joint Chiefs of Staff leaders in the Pentagon who I have briefed have no more access to such projects than any other civilian - unless they are on the 'inside' for some reason. But this is rare.

To acquire and maintain such power all types of things have been done. We are reminded of that poem which describes 'the webs we weave...'. But how does such an entity extract itself from such a web of secrecy, deceit, lies and insubordination?

To be specific, this group has usurped power and rights not legally granted to it. It is extra-constitutional, both in the US and in the UK and other countries around the world.

I will grant the possibility that, at least initially, this covert undertaking was designed to maintain secrecy and avoid instability. But the risks of inadvertent leaks - or a national or world leader deciding legally that it was time for disclosure - made it essential to weave a web of greater and greater secrecy and of illegal operations. And now the web has closed in on the operation itself.

That is, the complexity of the compartmentalized projects, the degree of unconstitutional and unauthorized activity, the 'privatization' (or theft) by corporate partners (the 'industrial' part of the military - industrial complex) of advanced technologies, the continued lying to legally elected and appointed leaders and to the public - all of these and more have contributed to a psychology of continued secrecy -because disclosure would expose the greatest scandal in recorded history.

For example, how would the public react to the fact that the degradation of the entire earth's ecosystem and the irretrievable loss of thousands of species of plants and animals now extinct due to pollution, has been utterly unnecessary —and could have been avoided if only an honest release of this information had occurred in the 1950s?

How would society react to the knowledge that trillions of dollars have been spent on unauthorized, unconstitutional projects over the years? And that these tax-payer dollars have been used by corporate partners in this secrecy to develop spin-off technologies based on the study of ET objects which were later patented and used in highly profitable technologies? Not only have the taxpayers been defrauded, they have then been made to pay a premium for such breakthroughs which were the result of research paid for by them! And this does not address the intellectual property theft of such technologies from the ET s. While the basic energy generation and propulsion technologies have been withheld, these corporate partners have profited wildly from other breakthroughs and benefits in electronics, miniaturization and related areas. Such covert technology transfers constitutes a multi-trillion dollar theft of technologies which really should be public domain since taxpayers have paid for it.

And how would the public react to the fact that the multi-billion dollar space program, using internal combustion rockets and the like, has been a primitive and unnecessary experiment since much more advanced technologies and propulsion systems were in existence before we ever went to the moon? NASA and related agencies have, for the most part, been as much a victim of this secrecy as has the rest of the government and the public. Only a small, very compartmentalized fraction of NASA people know of the real ET technologies hidden away in these projects. Certainly my uncle, who helped design the lunar module which took Neil Armstrong to the moon, was as much a victim as anyone insofar as he was denied access to these technological breakthroughs. He had to rely on the old physics and the old internal combustion jet thruster technologies just like everyone else. What a shame.

The inescapable reality is this: This secret project, no matter how well intentioned initially, got carried away with its own secret power. It abused this power. It has hijacked our future for fifty years.

In fact, the quiet coup d'etat of the late 1940s and early 1950s, once exposed, could result in real instability today.

But the situation is actually much worse than this. All that is written above is dwarfed by a larger problem: The covert group running these UFO related black projects have also had exclusive sway over the early days of an embryonic extraterrestrial-human relationship. And it was been tragically mismanaged - nearly to the point of genuine global catastrophe.

For what happens when an unelected, unappointed, self-selecting, militarily oriented group alone has to deal with inter-species relations between humans and ET s? Well, as in most areas, if you wear rose-colored glasses the entire world looks red. And if you are wearing military glasses, every new and uncontrolled development will be seen as a potential or real military threat.

The nature of such a group - which is inordinately controlled and incestuous - is that it is homogenous in world-view and mind-set. Power and control are preeminent qualities. Such extreme secrecy creates a very dangerous milieu in which checks and balances, give and take, are utterly lacking. And in such an environment, very dangerous decisions can be made with inadequate feedback, discussion or insight from needed perspectives which are, per force, excluded.

In such an environment of extreme secrecy, militarism and paranoia, we have found that immensely dangerous actions have been taken against the ET s. Indeed, we have multiple inside sources who have described to us the use of increasingly advanced technologies to track, target and destroy extraterrestrial assets. If there is even a 10% chance that this is true ( I am convinced it is 100% accurate) we are dealing with a global diplomatic and social crisis which is utterly out of our control but which puts the entire planet at risk.

Remember, covert reverse-engineering projects have resulted in huge quantum leaps forward in technologies which, once applied to military systems, could be a real threat to ET s which may be here peacefully. The attempts to rapidly militarize space is likely a result of a myopic, militaristic and paranoid view of extraterrestrial projects and intentions. If left unchecked, it can only result in catastrophe.

Indeed this group, no matter how well-intentioned, is in urgent need of exposure so that global statesmen with a new perspective can intercede in this situation. While we see no evidence that the ET civilizations are at all hostile, it is also clear that it is unlikely that they will allow unfettered and growing interference with their operations. Self-defense is likely a universal quality. And while tremendous restraint has been shown by the ET s thus far, might there be a 'cosmic trip wire' if human covert technologies begin to reach parity and we are using such advanced technologies in a bellicose fashion? The prospect is sobering.

We need our Jimmy Carters and Dalai Lammass and other international statesmen involved with so vast a problem. But if access is denied -and the subject remains undisclosed and off the global radar screen - we are left with the unelected few to decide our fate and act on our behalf. This must change, and soon.

In the final analysis, while the changes attendant such a disclosure related to UFOs and ET s would be massive and profoundly impact virtually every aspect of life on earth, it is still the right thing to do. Secrecy has taken on a life of its own — it is a growing cancer which needs to be cured before it destroys the life of earth and all who dwell on her.

The reasons for secrecy are clear: global power, economic and technological control, geo-political status quo, the fear of scandal surrounding the exposure of such projects and their behavior and so forth.

But the one thing more dangerous than disclosure is continued secrecy. The earth is dying because we are killing her. The top 250 people and families in the world have the net worth of 2.5 billion of our poorest citizens. The promising relationship between humanity and people from other planets is being militarized and strained by failed thinking and failed programs run completely in secret.

As daunting as disclosure may be, with all its potential for short-term instability and change, continued secrecy means that we will destroy the earth through our folly and greed. The future of humanity, which has been delayed and hijacked for the past 50 years, cannot be hijacked for 50 more. For we do not have 50 more years - the earth's ecosystem will collapse before then.

There are no easy choices. But there is one right one. Will you help us make it?
