 Dubbiel a.k.a. Dubiel and Dobiel ("bear-god") - the guardian angel of Babylonia, Persia, and the special accusers of Israel. The angel who replaced Gabriel during his twenty-one day banishment from the Divine Presence. Since all of the angels of nations became corrupted (with the exception of Israel's protector, Michael), Dubbiel is now considered to be a demon.

Dobiel

Dobiel, also Dubbiel ("bear-god"), was the guardian angel of Ancient Persia.\[1\][2] According to the Talmud, Dobiel was also one of the special accusers of Israel, and once officiated in Heaven for 21 days as a proxy for Gabriel when the latter (over whom Dobiel scored a victory) was in temporary disgrace for taking pity on the Israelites when God was angry with them and convincing the Babylonians to drive them from Babylon rather than kill them.\[3\] After coming to power in Heaven, Dobiel set about helping the Persian people at the expense of every other nation. The legend states that all of the 70 or 72 tutelary or guardian angels of nations (except Michael, protector of Israel) became corrupted through national bias.\[4\]
