TAGG ROMNEY SAYS HIS DAD DIDN'T ACTUALLY WANT TO BE PRESIDENT WHICH EXPLAINS, WELL, EVERYTHING REALLY

December 24 2012

Boston, MA – Mitt Romney was never anyone's favourite to run for President. He was rejected back in 2008 for a respected but inconsistent candidate and then in 2012 he faced extremely stiff competition from people who really should not have been on the national stage at all. It was clear this year in particular that people had a problem with Romney.

Whether it was his wealth or his private nature or his religion, it seemed there was always something that people had an issue with. Despite that, and with much hand-wringing, eventually the Republican voters reluctantly gave Romney his shot at President and he fulfilled the least of their expectations.

Romney did have a shot, briefly to be sure, after that first debate but by the time people actually went to the polls, and by the time the votes were counted, it was clear that any hope of winning had really been more of a fantasy. Now, in the post-mortem, we have a better idea of what really went wrong and as it turns it Romney apparently never even wanted to be President in the first place, which would explain a lot, though not his decision to actually run.

"He wanted to be president less than anyone I've met in my life. He had no desire to run," said son Tagg Romney. "If he could have found someone else to take his place... he would have been ecstatic to step aside. He is a very private person who loves his family deeply and wants to be with them. He loves his country, but he doesn't love the attention."

Given that desire for privacy, it's not clear why the elder Romney would have run for the most famous job in the world.

President Obama, it's believed, really did want to be President and now he is again.

"Obviously passion has to be a part of the run for any political office but especially the leader of a nation, especially the United States which has such a robust political system. It clearly takes a hearty soul to go through that kind of thing," said Scrape TV Political analyst Gabriel Kinsey. "He clearly had the stamina to make it through the race which is good and necessary but he did not have the love for the job or apparently the desire to do it or when or anything which makes one question why he bothered and why he wasted all of that money given by other people."

The Romney campaign reportedly spent over a billion dollars and PAC's spent even more, wastefully it seems.

"It's hard to understand, give this utter lack of passion for getting and doing the job, why he would even bother to be honest. I mean it's not like working in a factory, say, where you can be dispassionate and still get through your day and do a fine job. You don't have to care about a job like that but you do kind of need to care about being leader of the free world," continued Kinsey. "I mean that would certainly explain, well, everything really. The whole campaign comes into clarity with that and it shows that the American people made the right decision. Clearly Romney did not because he could have stepped aside and let someone who actually wanted the job to run but I guess when you're Mitt Romney caring about what's good for others, well that's a tough thing."

Romney didn't even care enough to comment on his son's comments.
