All she has is this picture.*And as she examines the photo of the tiny glowing creature darting around above her lawn, she finds herself believing in fairies.*Fairy odd: Phyllis Bacon took this picture of what appears to be a fairy while she was chatting to relatives*Fairies who frolic at the bottom of gardens in New Addington, near Croydon in South London.*Mrs Bacon, 55, said she was not even looking through the camera at the time she took the picture.*Instead she simply clicked the button while holding it at arm's length out of the back door while chatting with relatives in her kitchen after dinner.Top

Astonished by what she saw when she glimpsed at the picture, she has spent months seeking a rational explanation.

But after scouring the internet for pictures of butterflies, moths and beetles that might match it, she has drawn a blank.

'I think it must be a fairy,' she said yesterday as she made the picture public for the first time.

A little bit of magic: Phyllis with the camera she snapped the winged creature on. After researching on the internet, she cannot explain what she captured

'No one I've shown the photos to has come up with any plausible explanation as to what the figure is.' The photo reminds some of the Cottingley fairies, photographed in a West Yorkshire garden in 1917.

At the time, Elsie Wright, 16, and her ten-year-old cousin, Frances Griffiths, claimed to have captured images of themselves playing with tiny winged creatures.

Only many decades later did they admit that the photographs were faked and involved cut-out drawings of fairy figures that were fastened to foliage with hatpins.

Mrs Bacon insists her photograph, taken in 2007, involved no sleight of hand.

She said she had been reluctant to show it off widely for fear of being branded 'nutty'.

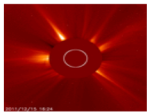

'I used to like fairy stories as a child, but I can't claim to have ever seen one before or since,' she said.

Hoax: The Cottingley fairies were found to be faked in a photograph taken in 1917

'Looking back, I think there was a fungi fairy ring in the garden at the time I took the picture, but I don't really know what to make of it all.

'To be honest, I don't know what it is and I'm keen to listen to anyone's suggestions. But until someone can tell me otherwise I'm going to go on thinking it's a fairy.'

	Experts and the simply sceptical will no doubt point to explanations involving reflections, flashes or technical glitches. But then, that's just taking all the magic out of it. http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article ... arden.html 😊

Taking pictures after dark in Oklahoma, I've seen a number of these show up. Huge moths, that only come out at night.

If they're closer to the camera, they become overexposed by the flash. Anything can look white under those circumstances.
